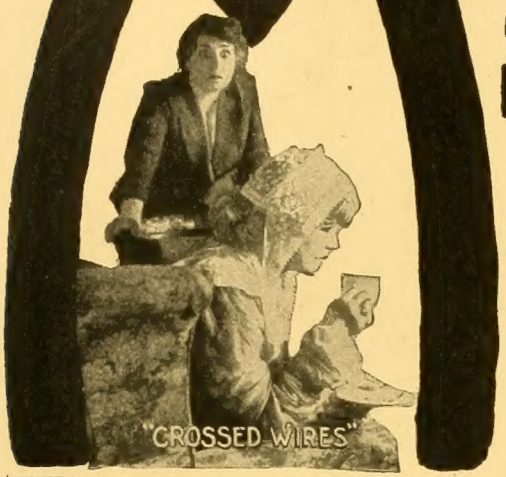
MARK TIME!!



OR go down to defeat! You can't stem the tide! All over the country, Thanhouser releases monopolize the lobby display and the program. They are big enough and powerful enough to stand heavy billing! The proof is—they are doing it! Don't wait! You must do it, too! And you'll never find a better time than RIGHT NOW!

Edwin Thanhouser

Try these releases:

"CROSSED WIRES"

I engaged Miss Ina Hammer specially to interpret a vulturish, rapacious rôle, because I wanted to get a terrific effect. Florence LaBadie plays the opposite part in her usual sympathetic style, and—well, I tell you, the contrast in types is overwhelming! The story is a whip-lash of situations, and it's all done in surpassing Thanhouser style. You'll dream about it long after you've seen it!

Released in Two Reels. Tuesday, June 29th.

TRADE MARK

"Fifty Years After Appomattox"

A little war story—a breath of the sweetness, the nobility, the simplicity of the girls of fifty years ago—and Lorraine Huling is just that girl! By the way—it's a fitting Independence Day offering.

Released in One Reel. Sunday, July 4th.

Edwin Thanhouser presents the FALSTAFF COMEDY

"The Silent Co-Ed"

Rich, clean humor, rollicking fun, a gymful of pretty girls, fine acting and Peggy Burke in the rôle of a saucy, swat-'em-in-the-eye, winky, dinky little college tom-boy. The whole combination spells with mighty truth the name FALSTAFF COMEDY.

Released in One Reel. Friday, July 2nd.

The UNIVERSAL presents ITS FIRST BROADWAY FEATURE RELEASE

THIS is the most important announcement ever made to Exhibitors. It is the proof positive that we have made good on our promise to release every week on the regular UNIVERSAL WEEKLY PROGRAM a great (and genuine) Broadway star or a famous Broadway play or best seller book. Arrangements have been made far in advance. There will be no break in our plans.

The first release on July 12 is more than a truly great production. It is the end for you of paying more for a "capacity" feature than your capacity receipts amount to. The advance in cost over the old program is so slight that the net to you means more money than you have ever made before.

Write or wire your Exchange for complete details. Magnificent advertising matter has been prepared. Everything is ready for a tremendous success. The Universal assures you that this is the greatest opportunity ever presented to exhibitors. When the Universal says it, it's true.

The UNIVERSAL
A Remarkable 5-Reel
"SCANDAL"—
Written by LOIS WEBER—Author of Direction of Lois Weber
The story of "Scandal" deals with the tragedy of idle gossip. Its talented author, LOIS WEBER, the justly celebrated author of "HYPOCRITES," got her idea from a newspaper editorial, based on an every day newspaper item. Thus the story is intensely human, fascinating in its swiftly moving plot development. There is nothing morbid or distasteful about this absorbing play—but it does make one pause and think with regret of every word of idle gossip one has ever listened to or repeated. "Scandal" is the sort of photoplay that makes the movies worth while. It is the sort that gets to the movie fans hard. It is the sort of play you cannot boost too strongly. The Universal is noted for doing big things in an unusual way, and "Scandal" is one of the biggest things the Universal has ever done.
Released on the Regular Universal Program July 19

Growing BIGGER

"The Broken Coin"

Advance Bookings Are Growing Bigger Every Day

Just Because it is worthy of all the good things we have been saying about it; because it is the culminating and superior achievement of the Universal in serial production. Because it was written by one of the greatest American authors, Emerson Hough, who wrote and writes only big things such as "54-40—or Fight," "The Mississippi Bubble," "John Rawn," and others, known to millions as red-blooded books written by a real man.

"THE BROKEN COIN"

Just Because the scenario was written by Grace Cunard, who is also leading woman. The same beautiful Grace Cunard who made millions of fans who saw her in "Lucille Love" think her the loveliest actress in the film world. Her work in the Broken Coin is far better even than it was then.

"THE BROKEN COIN"

Just Because the leading man is Francis Ford. Because Francis Ford produced the wonderful "Broken Coin." The same great actor and artistic producer who delighted all the fans in the country who saw him in "Lucille Love." Francis Ford has grown, too. He is one of the big screen stars today.

"THE BROKEN COIN"

Just Because it was staged under conditions and with facilities impossible to any concern but the Universal, at Universal City, Cal. That's the "BECAUSE" of the wonderful booking success of this world's greatest serial. Wise Exhibitors who read the Universal Weekly and the trade press know a good thing when they see it; and so they have been keeping the mails jammed and the wires hot sending in to their Exchange and to the Home Office their orders for bookings.

"THE BROKEN COIN"

Just Because you want to make a killing now. Just because you want to hook up with a sure thing. Just because here is an opportunity to capture coin and popularity for your house, and give competition a black eye; just because there has been prepared for you the strongest advertising and publicity campaign ever prepared for your benefit—

"You, Mr. Exhibitor"

Do this NOW. Wire, write or phone your Exchange this instant for your booking date, or communicate at once with the home office.

Miss Viola Allen in "The White Sister" Sweeps The Public Off Its Feet

Have you seen Viola Allen in "The White Sister?" This is what every one now is asking of his neighbor.

When a play makes such a success that it is the first topic of conversation that enters the mind when two friends meet, you may know it has some genuine attraction, that it is irresistible.

Every once in a long time there is a play that not only succeeds in the ordinary way, but has some great fundamental human element in it that sweeps the public off its feet.

That is what "The White Sister," Essanay's six act photoplay, written by F. Marion Crawford, has done. It is the talk of the hour. Critics who saw the play before its release predicted a wonderful run. It has surpassed all expectations. It is the rage; it is the fad of the day.

You know what that means in drawing crowds; you know what it means in swelling your box office receipts.

Have you booked "Graustark," the great six act feature photoplay by George Barr McCutcheon? Have you booked "The Slim Princess," the four act photocomedy by George Ade? If you have not you have something good in store. Thousands of exhibitors have attested the wonderful drawing power of these plays.

Book them at once through any of the branch offices of the V. L. S. E., Inc., if you would get plays that are sure to please your patrons.

Essanay Studio, June 21.

MY DEAR MR. EXHIBITOR AND THE PHOTOPLAY PUBLIC:

I wish to thank you for your many kind inquiries about my health. I am willing to stake my word of honor that I am alive. My moustache still has that funny little quirk and my feet twinkle when I walk.

I have been unable to convince any insurance company that I have been ill, injured, killed or otherwise incapacitated. Some people have been unkind enough to say that I am crazy. All are entitled to their own opinions, but I would say in defense that they don't know me.

I certainly am still on the job. If you don't believe it, watch me "WORK." I will show you everything you ought to know about interior decorating. If I don't make you laugh I will admit that I am a dead one, but not until then.

Yours in fun,

Henry B. Walthall Greatest Photoplay Actor, Joins Essanay

CHICAGO, ILL., June 26.—Henry B. Walthall, the world's greatest photoplay actor, has joined the Essanay company and is now working on a great three act emotional drama, "The Fatal Temper."

It was in line with the policy of George K. Spoor, President of Essanay, to obtain the very best actors in the world, that Mr. Walthall was engaged. For Mr. Walthall is just that, a real actor, a man of wide experience both on the speaking stage and in photoplay work.

As the leading character in plays produced by other companies Mr. Walthall was distinctly the feature of the dramas. He has advanced steadily in artistic accomplishments and popular favor until at the present time he stands at the head of his profession.

HENRY B. WALTHALL

Mr. Walthall is a master of subtle expression and in dramas requiring a display of emotional feeling has no equal. He will appear both in features released through the V. L. S. E., Inc., and the General Film Co.

"Eugene Aram"

Seldom is it that a story is found big enough to comprehend all the versatile breadth of Marc MacDermott's living art, but "Eugene Aram," story of stories, vibrant with pathos, glorious endeavor, tender love, and ignominious death for the guilt of another, rings with the power of Marc MacDermott's portrayals, the heart-reaching insight of a master story teller of an age that is gone—Bulwer Lytton—and heightened, beautified and intensified with the skill of Director Richard Ridgley. The ever-appealing Mabel Trunnelle, the deft Edward Earle, the convincing Bigelow Cooper, winsome Gladys Hulette, Herbert Prior and George Wright, to round out and give added power to this tragic life story. Released Friday, July 9th.

Facts and Comments

BILLY B. VAN, about to break into the production of motion pictures, sends a glowing eulogy of New Hampshire scenery to a New Hampshire newspaper and scores with a column. No state like the Granite State for motion picture production, etc. The logical conclusion is obvious and is respectfully referred to the publicity agents.

TWO exhibitors have the same raw materials for a program. One looks at the descriptions and hands the films over to the operator. The other insists on a screen examination and does a little judicious "pruning" and "trimming." The programs are then thrown upon the screen for the public and they look different, though the original items were just the same. A couple of hours and a willingness to think has made the difference. In a film weekly shown at one theater about forty feet of corpses on the battlefield were eliminated by the painstaking exhibitor, while at the other theater they were left in. The gruesome sight spoiled the greater part of the show. Watch your details if you want to prosper and attract the audience which knows how to discriminate.

AN ESTEEMED friend and correspondent suggests that exhibitors poll their patrons on questions of taste and ethics. He thinks that a consensus of opinion might be obtained "by some such method as delivering with the ticket a perforated strip marked in each square 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., up to the number of reels shown and announcing the number of each reel as it appears on the screen." The pleasing numbers to be kept and handed to the ushers, the others to be dropped on the floor. "Several exhibitors might band together," concludes our friend, "and compare notes to mutual advantage." The experiment seems worth trying.

WE HEAR through the courtesy of a friendly reader of itinerant "premium men" and "country store promotors" who are just now infesting some of the bigger cities on the Pacific coast. These "contest-organizers" and "prize-givers," also called "slickers," prey upon the inexperienced exhibitor or the exhibitor in distress, for it is inconceivable that they will ever get any encouragement from the man who knows his business. Our friend suggests that the big producing companies take a hand by refusing service to men who listen to the "slickers." It looks as though the evil might be reached effectively just in this way. Exhibitors' organizations have sometimes succeeded in shaming their foolish brethren away from such cheapening and destructive schemes, and on other occasions an appeal to the district attorney has borne fruit. These contests are generally plain violations of the law against lotteries.

THE press has begun to pay some attention to the idea of embodying the freedom of the screen in the organic law of this state by granting it the same immunity from previous legal restraint as that which is now enjoyed by the press. The constitutional convention is ready to give the motion picture interests a hearing and THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, always in the forefront in matters that concern the vital interests of the industry, has taken the lead in this agitation. We cannot imagine that the press will take any other than a friendly and approving stand toward the enfranchisement of the motion picture. We need the aid of the press in this fight and we are entitled to have it. Our interests are identical. If the public mind gets used to censoring motion pictures by law there will be but a short step to censoring motion pictures by official edict.

ON WHAT sort of motion pictures has the editor of a local newspaper in Wilkes-Barre been feeding that he has grown so peevish? He says the effect of drinking bad whiskey and seeing certain kinds of motion pictures is just about the same. After seeing that sort of pictures our editor concludes by saying, "That's why some folks say that the way to write 'scenarios' is to have a bad dream and see things that ain't so and write it down in bad English." All of which is respectfully referred to the chief of the scenario department. Looks as if the editor needed a copy of your book, E. W. S.

Judging the Show

By W. Stephen Bush.

A FRIEND of the writer, a man who has been in the exhibiting business a good many years, remarked recently that he was more puzzled than ever about the show business in general and the motion picture end of it in particular.

We had been talking about the exhibitor's first duty (so-called), of detaching himself entirely from his own tastes and preferences and simply catering to the demands of the public. The subject is altogether too big to be discussed in all its important aspects in just a few paragraphs. One thing, however, is particularly mystifying and, as it is sure to interest the readers of this paper, I do not hesitate to mention it here. If a motion picture theatre is yielding the maximum of profit is it wise to make a change because the owner of the theater differs with the manager as to the kind of a show that ought to be offered to the patrons?

I am not speaking of a theoretical case. The thing has happened. The owners of a theater had no complaint whatever against the showing of the box office. No prejudice can stand in the presence of arithmetic. It is true that the owners firmly believed that the entertainment was conducted on too high a plane. According to the accepted principles of showmanship they should have been able to detach themselves entirely from their own tastes and preferences. It was according to the showman's creed rank heresy to go behind the returns of the box office.

Supposing that a "low-brow" show was bringing in the money, would the "high-brow" views of the owner have been permitted to count? I am inclined to italicize the "No" of my answer or to put it in capitals. To the man with "high-brow" tendencies seeking to meddle with the solid profits of a "low-brow" show the chorus of experts would have sounded something like this: "Do not try to educate the public. Give them what they want. If the 'low-brow stuff' pleases them, don't you try to raise them to a higher standard. You are not in this business to educate the public but to make money." All this has a familiar ring. It may be right and may be wrong, but most showmen seem willing to accept this dostrine and abide by it.

Do they indeed always abide by it? It does seem as if it were quite difficult after all to detach one's self from one's own tastes, opinions and preferences. We know of producers whose personality for good or evil, for profit or loss, dominates the whole producing machinery. We have yet to learn of a single producer whose personality does not in some way or another assert itself in his films. Is the same thing true of the exhibitor, whether he happens to be the owner or the manager? Does he not unconsciously or subconsciously run the show in accordance with his personal tastes? Is there such a thing at all as abdicating and obliterating one's own personality? Another question. To what extent is the exhibitor supposed to close his own eyes to the merits and demerits of a film and to what extent is he really able to view it through the eyes of his audience?

We invite discussion among our readers on these vital questions. In the consideration and solution of these problems it is not safe to trust to luck. A few years ago luck might have been depended on. I remember one exhibitor who commented upon his show in this candid fashion: "Yes, I know it's bad, but you see the crowd waiting for the second show, don't you?" This exhibitor is out of business today.

Drinking Scenes

By W. Stephen Bush.

AMONG our more or less esteemed contemporaries we count "The Liberal Advocate," a journal heroically devoted to promoting the liquor interests. We are sorry to note that the motion picture has incurred the candid displeasure of the John Barleycorn propaganda. We have, of course, known for some time that our friends the official censors have, in various parts of the country, objected to "drinking scenes." They object to "drinking scenes" because it might encourage the spectators to absorb alcoholic percentages. Now comes the devoted editor of the liquor gazette and he records an objection to the effect that such scenes on the screen "arouse the prejudice of thoughtless and weak-minded people against the liquor interests and particularly against the saloon."

We feel tempted to get out of this strange complication by referring the whole matter to Chief Censor Breitinger, whose experience with the Bosworth picture, John Barleycorn, has added so much to the gayety of nations.

The subject, however, is too important for any but serious treatment. We quote further from the language of the liquor organ:

An editorial against the moving picture show from the Liberal Advocate, a liquor paper, is being given circulation in Wisconsin:

"The moving picture show has become a powerful factor in arousing the prejudice of thoughtless and weak-minded people against the liquor interests, and particularly against the saloon," it says.

"Each day thousands of these films are portrayed to millions of men, women and children in every part of the country, and those who know better and many who ought to know better, soon become imbued with the belief that liquor is only manufactured and saloons established for the purpose of increasing lawlessness and crime."

The answer to all these objections is easy. Among the thousands of films produced and published there may have been some which obtruded "drinking scenes." These were the exceptions. The fact is that the portrayal of drinking scenes forms an unavoidable incident in the portrayal of life. The motion picture as a means of social propaganda is one thing while the motion picture as a means of entertainment is quite another thing. The screen is open to all advocates of abstinence and it is equally open to the opponents of it, exactly as the columns of the newspaper or the lecture platform. Where the screen is used as a mirror to be held up to life, whether past or present, it is impossible to entirely avoid the appearance of "drinking scenes." Not all drinking scenes are objectionable in themselves. There were drinking scenes at the wedding of Canaan where water is reported to have been changed into wine. In many portions of the far East the partaking of wine was considered an essential rite in the ceremony which welcomed the guest and the stranger. In certain parts of Europe the drinking of light beverages at social occasions is considered harmless. On the other hand, it is but too true that criminals often seek the courage for their crimes in drink, and it is no less true that alcohol has been and still is a fruitful source of poverty and that it is often destructive to the mind and the body of man.

Between the childish objections of the censor boards on the one hand and the protests of the liquor journals on the other hand, the screen will go on portraying life as it exists. It leaves the drawing of conclusions to the imagination and to the conscience of the spectators.

Fallacies of Realism

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WORSE than ignorance is a false idea that takes possession of healthy human minds and perverts what might otherwise be good judgment. Such is the mistaken association of realism in drama and literature with unvarnished truth—the application is more truly that of critics to varnished fiction. They seized upon a term which ordinarily defines a form of philosophy and applied it to what had the appearance of being an effort to exhibit literal reality in the arts, whereas the true artist appropriates the facts of life as so much rough material from which he constructs an existence more marvelous than that we daily look upon, better calculated to arrest and hold attention when it delves into hidden secrets of the soul or offers ideals through which common human nature hopes to attain perfection. It is very doubtful whether any creative author merely describes what he knows, or thinks he knows, about his own life or that of his neighbors, even if able to make it all less vulgar than reality. He depends largely upon his imagination. To critically ignore that fact is to attempt to solve the problem of creative art by denying its source.

It is quite possible that realism exemplifies what is said of persons and events of the day in which the author lives, that it is a short word for contemporaneousness combined with plausibility. What kind of realism is it when his story antedates his experience? It is even dangerous to go back a generation in a search for truth. That supposed exponent of realism, Ibsen, causes Doctor Stockmann to say in "An Enemy of the People" that most truths cease to be such after twenty years' time. The great Norwegian poet held strongly to the idea that the rights of an individual were superior to those of society as composed of individuals. His bold theories were those of a revolutionary idealist asserted through mastery of his craft. His speculations were made intelligible through simplicity of method, but his people and events were as unreal as his convictions were vascillating. He was attempting to get at great truths through vigorous idealization.

Such is the case, within individual limitations, of thoughtful authors, whatever their medium of expression, that of painting, that of sculpture, that of the printed or the uttered word, that of visualization on the screen. Whatever the art process, there is an idealization to stir thought or feeling, to make us conscious of our souls. Consistency is a jewel of this art structure and plausibility of its treatment. Harmonious agreement in all parts of the original creative work is of high importance, with an added management having a specious appearance of truth that shall make it worthy of confidence, in many works of art, and these merits constitute an EFFECT, that of being in accord with the truth.

The story may be cunningly realistic or openly romantic—to impose critical limitations on it in either respect narrows the field and dulls variety of presentation. An author deeply interested in social problems may present scenes and characters as he thinks he sees them from a purely personal point of view or from that of an artist engaged in revealing what is unknown of them. He may follow the ordinary course of events from cause to effect or plunge into the effect and bring up his cause for reinforcement. He is in either case presenting images formed by recombining what he knows, the highest power of which his mind is capable. Whatever he tells, however he tells it, the story successful is a child of his imagination.

Imagination is working overtime when an intimate friend tells of some episode in his past life. He may use it to illumine a dull point, or to bring up experence in illogical support of a losing argument, or even to entertain himself at his listener's expense, but his vanity gets busy at a time when his conscience is looking out of the window, and he rolls a large snowball of fiction around a handful of truth. Such is realism in the crude state. This realistic novelist in miniature, requiring only craftsmanship and an independent income to enter upon a professional struggle for poorly rewarded attainment and posthumous fame, is kept within a modicum of restraint, that of his hearer's credulity. When he breaks loose in print, he may rise above the ordinary level of misrepresentation and acquires a splendid disdain of dry facts to the delight of his readers and to the benefit of literature in general.

It rarely occurs to critical readers that error is a product of reason. It grows out of false interpretation. Many of the absurd notions, false conceptions and pernicious practices that we deplore in human existence have been created by realists and naturalists who argued wrongly from a fundamental truth. Peculiar quality of the unfettered poet and of the fiction-maker who does not waste his time in acquiring a heavy burden of useful information is a gift of exaggeration that is often inspiring and even prophetic. The romancer writes fiction because he loves it, the realist as if he had a painful duty to perform. The man who loves his work is sincere. He is drawing from the exhaustless font of his sympathies and not attempting to deceive us by presenting dull facts under the illusions of fiction, yet he accurately pictured the submarine fifty years ago and set the whole world thinking with the purely romantic characters of Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde.

While it is a difficult matter to properly represent truth through pretense and deception, stories realistic and naturalistic, those minutely portraying certain phases of life as seen through a temperament, may be accorded space on a varied program, especially when offering one or another form of social criticism, but realism may easily become monotonous and naturalism disgusting if untempered by contrast. Their sermonizing is rarely subtle enough to be successfully masked as entertainment, and their attractiveness at the fancy dress ball of imaginative fiction is akin to that of men who go in business suits. They look on with mingled wonder and disdain while Robinson Crusoe and Mother Goose share popularity with Rip Van Winkle, Cinderella, Count of Monte Christo, Robin Hood, Ivanhoe, Hamlet, Juliette, Othello, Beatrice and a long train of idealizations, strong or beautiful, quaint or sympathetic, the creatures of Romance.

To know truth one must feel it intuitively, as a majority of intelligent people do who are disinterested spectators of a great wrong being done at this time, or it must be acquired through patient investigation of what science is accomplishing and a clear judgment that enables a writer to choose, not only the best means, but the best ends for his work. Whether it comes through intuition or through wisdom, truth will make itself felt, will find unconscious recognition awaiting it among all classes of people. Whatever the form, throughout the wide sweep from farce to tragedy, the finest realism is that of a world idea which sways feeling through its complete rationality.

Freuler President of Mutual

Edwin Thanhouser Is Elected Vice-President and Felix Kahn Treasurer at Meeting of Directors.

WITHOUT any opposition, John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Company, became president and general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation at a meeting of the board of directors in the New York Mutual offices on June 23. The meeting, called at noon, lasted less than an hour, no alternatives to any of the candidates for office being presented. The new list of officials reads: John R. Freuler, president and general manager; Edwin Thanhouser, vice-president; Felix Kahn, treasurer, re-elected; Samuel Field, secretary and counsel; J. N. Naulty, assistant treasurer. The executive committee comprises Messrs. Freuler, Thanhouser, Kahn, Field and Crawford Livingston. H. E. Aitken, the retiring president of Mutual, declined re-election to the executive committee and Mr. Field was chosen to fill his place.

John R. Freuler.

The results of the election were not unexpected after the meeting of Mutual stockholders in Richmond, Va., on June 16, when J. W. Smith and Mr. Field were placed on the board to fill the places left vacant by the retirement of Roy Aitken and P. A. Gleichman. H. E. Aitken, A. C. Roebuck and T. H. Cochrane retained their places among the directors, numbering fifteen in all.

When the meeting for the election of officers was called to order the full board, comprising the following members, responded: H. E. Aitken, Crawford Livingston, Gerald Livingston, Felix Kahn, John R. Freuler, S. S. Hutchinson, W. E. Shallenberger, W. C. Toomey, A. C. Roebuck, T. H. Cochrane, Edwin Thanhouser, Samuel Field, Dr. George Hall, J. W. Smith and Walter N. Seligsberg, representing Miss Thomas. Mr. Aitken presided and Mr. Seligsberg, retiring counsel for Mutual, acted as chairman of the meeting.

After the minutes of the preceding meeting had been read, Dr. Hall nominated Mr. Freuler for president and general manager and he was elected without opposition, as was each of the candidates, in turn, the acting secretary casting the ballots for the board. Mr. Livingston proposed Mr. Thanhouser for vice-president and Mr. Hutchinson put up the name of Mr. Kahn for treasurer. In electing Mr. Field as counsel for the next three years it was understood that he would devote himself entirely to the affairs of the Mutual Corporation.

Starting with the old Calumet Company, which subsequently was sold to the General Film Company, Mr. Freuler has learned every angle of the film business, including both manufacturing and selling. In association with Mr. Hutchinson he organized the American Film Manufacturing Company and had much to do with planning the successful serial, "The Diamond from the Sky."

W. E. Shallenberger, vice-president of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation and large stockholder in the Mutual, Thanhouser and American film companies, when asked for a statement on the election of Mutual Film Corporation officers, said:

"Mr. Freuler brings to the Mutual a wealth of experience in the three collateral branches of the industry—distribution, manufacture and exhibition. He knows at first hand the details of all these ends of the business. Mr. Freuler has made a tremendous success of all his various ventures and I feel certain that in his new capacity he will carry the Mutual Film Corporation along to great successes. He is a man of clean ideas and high ideals; he insists on clean pictures, and he is wrapped up, heart and soul, in the establishment of the film business on a firm industrial footing.

"It is apparent to all that many changes, some vital and some merely incidental, shortly will occur in the film industry in the United States. These changes will affect, particularly, the manufacture and distribution of pictures. Mr. Freuler is singularly well fitted to be at the head of the Mutual in this transitional period of the business."

In discussing the situation immediately after the meeting, Mr. Freuler said:

"The relation of this organization to the film business combines the responsibility of distributor and jobber as well as wholesaler. Our chief task is merchandising our products so that we may all secure a reasonable return for our money. Hence the necessity of doing everything possible in the interests of the exhibitor or retailer that he may secure returns without which his business cannot be conducted successfully from either the manufacturer's or distributor's standpoint. We want to do for the retailer, everything that will prove of benefit to him. We want the exhibitor to be put into a position where our service will be helpful and will neither begin nor end with simply supplying him with films.

"I feel that there is a responsibility on this organization in the way of helpful suggestions in conducting the exhibitor's business. We want to help the exhibitor make his theater more attractive, to arrange his program so that the public will be pleased to patronize his place and continue to do so.

"You must remember that the public is the final judge and that the exhibitor must, of necessity, reflect the attitude of his patrons. Therefore, it will be the duty of the Mutual to see that the regular program is strengthened in every way. We will supply not only an attractive list of one-reelers and two-reelers, but we will see to it that the subjects are sufficiently varied so that the exhibitor will give his patrons an interesting arrangement comphehending both drama and comedy in like proportions.

"On the other hand, the exhibitor must not be passive. The best show in the world will not be a success unless the exhibitor co-operates, unless he arranges his lobby attractively and varies same with regularity. He must advertise attractions so that the public will know what he has got. The exhibitor, therefore, must realize his own responsibility and though we can do a great deal for him, he has got to be his own greatest help.

"As President of the North American Film Corporation distributing 'The Diamond from the Sky' my experience has been that the exhibitor who adopted the majority of the suggestions that we made has been very successful in handling this record-breaking continued photoplay. I advocated from the beginning that exhibitors be generous in the use of heralds and facsimile ten thousand dollar checks. It is significant that those who adopted this form of arousing public interest have seen the result in bigger box office receipts. I want to appeal to the selfish, yet natural side of the exhibitor—that side is the box office end of it.

"The regular program of the United Film Corporation will be strengthened in every possible way. I am one of those who believe that the moving picture business is one of volume. It has been so successful because it has brought to millions a form of entertainment that is interesting and instructive. Big investments have been made in staging moving picture plays and the money has come back to the manufacturers with interest because of the fact that enables an organization like Mutual to distribute many prints of these pictures. When you consider that on an average of 18,000,000 people every day go to the photoplay in this country, the importance of this volume angle will be apparent.

"While occasionally features of unusual nature may command $2 admission prices, one must not be confused over the real destiny of the moving picture business. It is essentially entertainment for the masses and not the classes. Hence it is our duty to furnish a program that may be used in a big, broad way by theaters charging fifteen, ten and five cents.

"A new form of entertainment was created with the advent of moving pictures and it is hardly wise to expect that manufacturers will ever depart from the fundamentals and we will furnish in our regular programs, the best possible pictures at prices that will not disturb this basic scheme of giving the masses wholesome entertainment at prices within reach of all.

"It is my intention, as soon as possible, to supply the exhibitors all over the country, except in perhaps two or three metropolitan centers, with a plan of model exchanges. It is my purpose to establish these model exchanges wherever practical, on the ground floor. This is done entirely for the convenience of the exhibitors. In this way, the Mutual will be able to display its merchandise to advantage so that exhibitors may see exactly what we intend furnishing them with along with the films.

"I want our representatives to sell the theater men service plus merchandise. There is a responsibility on the representatives of Mutual beginning before the delivery of the film and not ending either with the showing of the story on the screen. In other words, it is my desire that a spirit of cooperation prevail throughout all Mutual offices and I will work to that end."

Other changes among the Mutual officials have brought men well known in motion picture activities. Mr. Field is a Milwaukee attorney, who for a number of years has been closely identified with photoplay production, and Mr. Smith is a capitalist and banker connected with interests in New York, Chicago and many other large cities.

Kalem "Fours" Popular.

This Progressive Company Has Struck a Responsive Chord With Its Features.

THERE is no doubt about the fact that Kalem has touched a responsive chord in the minds of motion picture exhibitors in adopting the policy of releasing four-reel features in regular service. A preliminary announcement issued some weeks ago was well received by exhibitors, but judgment was withheld until the quality of these features could be determined.

The manner in which the press and a representative gathering of exhibitors in and about New York City received the first of these four-part subjects, "Midnight At Maxims," at a private presentation recently, however, dispelled all doubt as to the quality of these features. It was evident that Kalem was determined to spare no effort to make them quality productions, and the letters subsequently sent in by exhibitors made it plain that the new four-act productions were assured of an enthusiastic reception.

According to the policy definitely decided upon by Kalem, a four-reeler will be issued on alternating Mondays, commencing with Monday, July 12th. These features in turn will alternate with the three-part productions now being released, and, like the latter, will be "Broadway Favorites" features. A popular player of the legitimate stage who has won success on Broadway will be presented in each subject.

"Midnight at Maxim's" will be followed by an elaborate four-act photoplay production of the famour romantic drama "Don Caesar de Bazan." This play, generally regarded as the most popular of the dramas the action of which is laid in the swashbuckling era, will be the vehicle for W. Lawson Butt, the English star. Mr. Butt has played Don Caesar upwards of three hundred times upon the legitimate stage.

In fact, a visitor at Kalem's New York, New Jersey, California and Florida studios would find these working at full blast on four-reel features. And, if he knew any of the players who have appeared on Broadway, he would meet many friends at work in these studios.

Incidentally, Kalem is issuing a novelty in connection with "Midnight At Maxim's" which should be welcomed by exhibitors. This consists of a button containing a full figure of the prettiest of the Maxim beauties. This miss is shown in the act of executing a graceful step. A caption containing the words "Midnight At Maxim's" is directly underneath the dancer. The "Maxim Girl" button should be of decided help to exhibitors in arousing interest in the four-reel Kalem feature, in addition to forming an unusually attractive souvenir.

Metro Day At World's Fair.

Panama-Pacific Committee Will Have a "Bushman Day" on July 15th.

WHAT constitutes the most important recognition of motion pictures and motion picture stars is, without a doubt, the announcement this week from the Administration Committee of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco of Francis X. Bushman day July 15th, with the noted star and his leading woman, Marguerite Snow, as the special guests of honor with special functions and awards in honor of the event. The following telegram from Sol Lesser, California representative of the Metro Pictures Corporation, outlines the affair:

> Richard A. Rowland,
> Metro Square,
> 42d Street and Broadway,
> New York City.
> Have received notice from Exposition Committee July 15th to be Metro day with Bushman and Snow guests of honor. Entire fair given over to us for day. Special award of gold medal to Bushman and Snow following enactment of silent dramatic piece in front of Administration Building. Entire evening devoted to fireworks display and Bushman's likeness to be burned in set piece fifty feet high. Metro will be luncheon hosts to all photoplayers and exhibitors attending. Am forwarding official document from Exposition Officials.—Sol L. Lesser.

Harry Reichenbach of the Metro forces will leave New York for San Francisco July 7th. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Reichenbach and a number of Metro stars and will take with him the artistic display Metro will use at the Motion Picture Convention.

Francis X. Bushman, who is now at work at the Quality-Metro studio, Los Angeles, will arrive at San Francisco about July 10th and when he gets off the train he will be the most surprised man in the world, for the Metro Company, appreciating the deep honor paid their leading star, will plaster the coast cities with twenty-four sheet pictorial paper announcing July 15th as Bushman Day and inviting the people to witness the enactment of a thrilling silent drama.

Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow will be accompanied to San Francisco by Willard Bauman, the director, Fred J. Balshofer and Charles "Feature" Abrams. The dramatic document Bushman will use for his public performances will be a powerful one act playlet from the pen of Robert W. Service, the American Kipling, who is responsible for "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," "My Madonna" and "The Spell of The Yukon," and "Through the Door" was written by Mr. Service for the late Clara Bloodgood and the latter died a suicide before she could realize her ambition to play the Service piece. Mr. Bushman will be supported by the Quality Pictures Corporation players. The piece will be staged on a hugh platform to be constructed in front of the Administration Building and according to Mr. Lesser, seating arrangements for twenty thousand people is going forward.

For the firework display, General Manager Rowland of the Metro Company has completed arrangements with the directors of the Consolidated Fireworks Company for the constructing of a set piece fifty feet in height, with as near a likeness of Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow as it is possible to arrange.

Thousands of souvenirs are being made now bearing likenesses of Bushman and Snow, and one of these will be given to each visitor to the Exposition on Bushman Day.

By telegraph, Harry Reichenbach has arranged for two pages in one of the big San Francisco dailies, in which the life story of Bushman and Snow will be published, and in another, 'Through The Door," will be run serially for a week previous to the date of its enactment.

The Metro party will leave New York for San Francisco on the Exhibitors' Special, arranged for by the Convention Committee at the time of Mr. Cory's visit here. Metro will have one of the largest, if not the largest, representations at the exposition.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT HEARING.

A hearing on the proposed amendment to the constitution of the State of New York to give motion pictures the same immunity as the press from previous restraint was held before the bill of rights committee of the Constitutional Convention at Albany on Wednesday, June 23. All the members of the committee were present.

Delegate Eisner, who introduced the amendment, spoke in its favor. He was followed by W. W. Irwin, of V-L-S-E, Paul H. Cromelin of the Cosmofotofilm Co., J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship, S. L. Rothapfel and W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World.

The hearing lasted for two hours and the remarks of the speakers were listened to with close attention. The committee reserved its decision.

Kessel-Baumann-Aitken

A Big Three Combination for the Production of Feature Photoplays.

HAVING withdrawn from the presidency of the Mutual Corporation, H. E. Aitken will figure in a new alliance for the production of feature pictures in which Ad. Kessel and C. O. Baumann, with D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett as the chief directors, will be the most important factors. The new $4,000,000 company is being organized at the present time and probably the program will be ready for release early in September, on the expiration of the New York Motion Picture Company's contract with Mutual.

From a source of indisputable authority, the Moving Picture World has learned that the New York Motion Picture Company will not renew the Mutual contract. Enough Keystone, Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino productions have been completed to fill the program demands up to September 1, and at present the energies of the entire Kessel and Baumann organization are being expended in preparations for the new feature output. In this respect, it is significant that Mr. Kessel spent more than six months on the Coast during the past winter and expended nearly $100,000 on studio improvements. He is now busy at his New York office placing stars of the legitimate stage under long-time contracts.

An erroneous statement appeared in several daily papers to the effect that the productions of Directors Griffith, Ince and Sennett would be marketed to theaters charging a two-dollar scale of prices. There will be no such stipulation, although it is probable that a novel method of distribution will be devised. As planned at present there will be a weekly output of fourteen reels, two five-reel subjects, two two-reelers, with a star featured in each production. The program will be so arranged that exhibitors will be supplied with a full seven-reel program the first of every week and another for a mid-week change. It is not unlikely that the new brand will be called Sig Feature Films, a combination of the initial letters in the names of the three famous directors who will make the pictures.

Clune Buys Studio.

Big Los Angeles Exhibitor to Embark in the Production of Pictures—Has Capital Pledged.

(Special to the Moving Picture World.)

W. H. CLUNE, Southern California's big exhibitor, has bought the studio acquired a few weeks ago by the Famous Players from the Fiction Company, of which Louis Joseph Vance was the head. All the buildings are new, of most approved design, and rest upon a large plot of ground at the corner of Melrose and Broson avenues, South Hollywood.

Mr. Clune for some time has been confronted with the problem of obtaining big pictures for exhibition in the Auditorium, with 2,900 seats, on which he holds a long term lease. It is his intention to produce four or five subjects a year, and to select such stories as will be adaptable for presentation in a big theatrical way, with special music and atmospheric settings. These, of course, will first be shown in the Auditorium. If successful here they will be sent to New York and other large cities.

Lloyd Brown, manager of the Auditorium, will be manager of production for the new company. Mr. Brown is not yet ready to name the technical director who will assist him, but it will be a picture director of wide experience. There will be no change in the management of the Auditorium other than the appointment of an assistant to Mr. Brown.

It is expected that the work will begin in about thirty days. Mr. Brown says it will be the aim to feature the story rather than any particular star or stars, the cast for each subject being selected by type. While Mr. Clune has personally taken over this fine property, this step is only preliminary to the organization of a company, capital for which is already pledged.

V. L. S. E. AT CINCINNATI AND DETROIT.

Announcement is made by the V-L-S-E of the establishment of two new offices; one at Cincinnati, Ohio, and the other at Detroit, Michigan. The Cincinnati office will be in charge of R. S. Shrader, well-known in film circles throughout the middle west, and the Detroit office will be looked after by R. R. Hutton, who has distinguished himself as a member of the new school of business boosters.

With the opening of these two offices, the "Big Four" family has increased from six to sixteen branch offices in less than three months time, and every one of the sixteen offices now in operation is working to capacity.

Kalem Featuring Baroness.

"Midnight at Maxim's" Offered as Feature With an Exceptionally Wide Appeal.

IN exploiting "Midnight at Maxim's," the spectacular four-act "Broadway Favorites" feature, which they have prepared for release in the regular General Film Service Monday, July 12, the Kalem company are paying particular attention to the personal popularity of the various stage celebrities whome they engaged for the production. Chief among these celebrities is the Baroness Imgard von Rottenthal, born a member of the Austrian nobility and known throughout this country and Europe as one of the most earnest and artistic exponents of the classic dance. The Cameron Girls and Leo Pirnikoff and Ethel Rose, who have been featured in practically every vaudeville house of consequence in the United States, also appear in the picture.

With these names to conjure with, picture idea which is unusual in character, and a production which is particularly pretentious, the Kalem company feel that they are offering exhibitors one of the best drawing cards which they have sent from their studios in many months.

The Baroness Imgard von Rottenthal is expected to prove of particular value to the picture, not only because of the splendid work which she has done in it, but also because of the unusual breadth of the appeal which her appearance on the screen will have. The Baroness has danced in the ballrooms of such people in New York City as Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Taylor Pyne, Judge Elbert H. Gary, Mrs. Benjamin Guinness, and the Prince Troubetskoy, in Newport for Mrs. Mitchell Clark and others, and in Chicago with the internationally famous Theodore Thomas orchestra at a special engagement in Ravinia Park. Because of such engagements, the Baroness is particularly well known among society people.

In New York and other important American cities, the Baroness has established quite a following because of her numerous appearances for charity. Ever since she has been dancing professionally she has made it a rule to appear at least once a year at some big performance in aid of the poor and unfortunate. A notable performance of this nature was one given not long ago in Columbus, Ohio, under the auspices of the municipal department of charities when the Baroness' audience of approximately 5,000 people was made up practically without exception of orphaned children. For them she presented a specially selected program of dances which, though classic and artistic in the extreme, sent each youngster out with a recollection of the Baroness Imgard von Rottenthal which will certainly be turned into capital by the Ohio exhibitors who play "Midnight at Maxim's."

In the big Kalem picture, the Baroness appears in two of her best known dances, namely, "Sea Mist" and "Snow Flurry." In a recent interview she said that she had been deeply impressed with the opportunities which were offered artists of her type by the photoplay screen.

Lasky Will Build Studio.

Goldfish Announces That New Edifice Will Be Erected At Los Angeles.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH of the Lasky Company has returned from a trip to the coast renewed in health and renewed in his abiding faith in the picture. He also brought back a budget of interesting news. The Lasky Company is going to build a magnificent new studio in or near Hollywood. Negotiations for acquiring a large tract of land have been completed.

"We plan to have this new studio of ours the best that money and experience can possibly procure. It will embody the improvements that the experience of the last few years have made possible. All the big things in a studio will be there and likewise the minutest details for perfect work. Of course, it will be absolutely fireproof. Some of the minor features will be a shower bath in each dressing room and a perfectly equipped gymnasium. In the gymnasium our artists will have the amplest opportunity for cultivating health and strength and thereby increase the value of their work, for health and strength beget grace and ease of motion and a certain artistic playfulness which are most pleasing to the spectator. There is a spirit of athletic improvement in the studios now, as witness the informal boxing matches between the reels as it were. We will make a careful and painstaking examination of all the great studios in Europe before we begin work on our new plans."

Mr. Goldfish spoke with an air of deep conviction on the final triumph of the clean picture over the sensational feature which does not aim to be clean and wholesome.

"There may be times," he said, "when it might seem as if the sensation hunters were in the majority and when the man with the sensational picture with its undercurrent of suggestiveness may seem to be in the ascendant and may seem to draw the bigger crowd. This appeal, however, cannot last. The public which is fed on hot spices will come back for more and more and, of course, the craving cannot be gratified all the time. When the patrons, therefore, come and look for a new sensation and do not get it they are disappointed and they go back to the man with the clean picture. In the end the clean drama must win out. No lasting structure can be erected on a program of sensationalism and salaciousness. We are overwhelmed with congratulatory letters from exhibitors who say that they know the Paramount pictures have the strongest average and are, therefore, the most reliable. I will tell you without fear of contradiction that at the coast the Paramount pictures are the pictures that have the largest and the steadiest patronage. It is that way all over the country. There must come a time when the supply of so-called legitimate stars and plays comes to an end. What then? Then we must have men who can write directly for the screen, appealing to this wonderful medium of dramatic expression immediately and not mediately or at second hand through a novel or through the adaptation of a drama. With this end in view we are paying most particular attention to the development of a genuine screen school of dramatists. I think I may say that we have become experts in the art of extracting film values from plays originally intended for the speaking stage. Our scenario department, consisting of the very best men available and occupying from four to five rooms, is acquiring valuable experience in this difficult art of adaptation. Lots and lots of plays that we rejected long ago because their film values were so slight or because they depended altogether too much on the dialogue are now being taken up by newcomers in the art. Every man and woman who has ever had a few speaking lines in a Broadway play proclaims himself or herself a legitimate Broadway star and is lionized on the screen at the expense of the people who are rich in hope and poor in experience, and whose spiritual possessions are often reversed in the process. These people or some of them, at least, do not scruple to create a demand for their films by an unashamed appeal to what is morbid or often downright indecent. They hurt the whole business in that way. It is difficult for the reputable producer to undo what these unscrupulous men have done.

"I am thoroughly convinced that California is the only place in the world for taking motion pictures if you want to get the best results in photography and in atmosphere. I had been inclined to favor a transfer of our forces to the East, as so many of the big men in the histrionic and dramatic field are here, but I have been converted by Mr. Lasky and Mr. De Mille. The results of California light and climate cannot be equalled anywhere. I think we have shown that in a number of pictures, notably in "The Arab", where the Oriental atmosphere is just perfect."

New Combination Formed.

United Producers Desert United Film Service and Arrange With New Distributing Concern.

THE past week has seen some radical changes in the motion picture map of this section, not the least of these being the practical failure of the United Film Service, which is now in the hands of two receivers appointed in an action in bankruptcy and what appears to be the abandonment of that distributing organization by the group of producers, the United Producers' Corporation, which has been providing the United Film Service with pictures.

When it became apparent that the United Film Service would not be able to meet its obligations to its producers the proprietors of the several companies banded together as the United Producers, began to look around for a dependable outlet. The result of those efforts came to an issue on Tuesday night when the formality of organizing a new combination of producers to be known as the Combined Photoplay Producers, Incorporated, was performed.

The officers of the new combination are Ludwig G. B. Erb, president; J. A. Golden, treasurer, and H. M. Goetz, secretary. Included are the following producing companies: Crystal, Gaumont, Erbograph, Ideal, Pikes Peak, St. Louis Motion Picture Co., Albuquerque, Grandin, Smallwood and Mittenthal. The offices of the combination will continue at 110 West 40th street.

Warner and Lichtman Form Distributing Company.

Following the announcement that the United Producers had reorganized and decided to abandon the United Film Service came the news that A. and H. M. Warner and Al. Lichtman had formed the Standard Pictures, Incorporated, for the purpose of handling the product of the Combined Photoplay Producers. The incorporators of the Standard are well known to the trade as exchange men of the widest experience and ability. Speaking for the new distributing organization, Mr. Warner explained that the exchange connections were practically completed and that they would be ready to serve customers within a week or so.

The Standard will not lease its pictures, but will sell them outright to the exchange. A very advantageous contract has been signed by the producing companies which will give the Standard control of the quality of the pictures offered and enable the officers of the distributing organization to maintain the excellence of the program. Both Mr. Warner and Mr. Lichtman are pleased with the prospect and believe that little difficulty will be experienced in putting the project upon a paying basis. They point out the fact that theirs is a strictly business proposition, operated by experienced motion picture men and in no sense will it be promoted for stock jobbing purposes.

ROTHAPFEL GETS A DINNER.

As a fitting testimonial of appreciation of the efforts of S. L. Rothapfel to improve the science and art of projection of motion pictures and to give ambitious productions a proper presentation to the public, representatives of the leading producing companies joined in a testimonial dinner to Mr. Rothapfel at the Hotel Astor on Thursday evening, June 24.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

MASSACHUSETTS LEAGUE OUTING.

Exhibitors Have Big Time at Pemberton on June 16.

MEMBERS of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts are now rejoicing over the success of their annual outing which was held at Pemberton during the past week. All who attended agreed that it was "one glorious time."

Nearly one hundred members of the league assembled at the Nantasket Steamship Company's wharf on Atlantic avenue, Boston, at 10 o'clock on the morning of June 16. All were prepared to enjoy themselves and they certainly did.

Before boarding the steamer for the sail to Pemberton each person in the party was decorated with an "iron cross." The weather seemed to be rather doubtful at first, for as soon as the steamer left the wharf a heavy shower started, but when the outgrounds were reached it had cleared up and the sun was shining brightly.

The first event and feature of the day was a baseball game between the exhibitors and the exchange men. This contest was won by the former by the score of 26 to 17. Like all baseball contests the game started most peacefully. It was not long, however, before arguments of every description prevailed. Umpire "Joe" Di Pesa was accused of favoring the exhibitors in his decisions and was finally mobbed, not in reality, but for the cameramen of the Hearst Selig News Pictorial and Pathe's Weekly, both of whom decided that a little action was needed.

The contest was full of excitement from start to finish. More than once did "Jake" Lourie of the exhibitors' nine start an argument in which Scorer Ernest H. Horstmann was involved. These were peacefully settled by Vice-President P. F. Lydon, whose word was never disputed.

The members of the winning team were each presented with a small silver loving cup. The team was also presented with a large loving cup, donated by Fred B. Murphy of the New England United Film Service. The latter trophy was donated by the team to the league and will be presented to the winning baseball team at the next outing, which will be held at Suntaug Lake, Lynnfield, on July 16.

The winning team was composed of the following: Catcher, J. Lourie, Beacon theater, Boston; pitcher, Louis Boas, Academy, Fall River; first base, C. Wesley Fraser, United Booking Office; second base, C. E. Daniels, Dreamland theater, Lynn; third base, Henry Burke, Princess theater, Marlboro; shortstop, H. G. Jacobs, Animated Slide Company; right field, J. Cohee, Olympia theater, Lynn; center field, . H. McCloskey, Moving Picture World; left field, S. McAdams.

After the ball game, a light lunch was served on the grounds and then all enjoyed themselves in any manner suited to their liking.

At 3.30 P. M. the track events took place. The list of winners follows: Potato race, W. I. Cowan, World Film Corporation; hop, step and jump, Victor Morris, Orpheum Theater, Boston; three legged race, V. S. Cohen and E. R. Daniels; spoon and potato race, C. Wesley Fraser; fat men's race, S. J. Bernfield, Pathe Exchange; 50 yard race, F. A. Grady, V-L-S-E.

Dick Sears and Sam Hutchinson, camera men for the Hearst-Selig and Pathe, respectively, made some interesting pictures of these events. They claim to have caught Sam Bernfield in action, as he fell while running in the fat men's race.

An award of the prizes followed and a shore dinner was served at the Pemberton Inn. The success of the affair is entirely due to the work of the committee, which comprised Samuel Grant, Louis Boas, J. Lourie and Glover Ware.

Those who attended were President Ernest H. Horstmann, Olympia Theaters, Inc.; Vice Presidents John F. Patten and P. F. Lydon; George Bolsden, V-L-S-E; H. I. Wasserman, Roxbury; F. Swett, Nicholas Power Company; H. Sivovolos, American Feature Film Company; Glover and Harris Ware, Beverly; Harry N. Farren, Boston; W. B. Sproul, Charlestown; F. A. Grady, V-L-S-E; H. Mailee, Scollay Square Olympia, Boston; H. G. Jacobs, Animated Slide Company; C. Wesley Fraser, United Booking Office; H. Cohee, Olympia Theater, Lynn; W. I. Cowan, World Film; Louis Boas, Academy, Fall River; Representative George Curran; S. McAdams; J. Eyster; Sam Grant; Joe Cahill, Brockton; S. Frankel; J. CONVENTION OUTLOOK GOOD.

Extensive Plans Formulated by Local Committees—Coast Exhibitors Will Turn Out in Force.

THE various committees having the planning and local arrangements for the coming National Convention at San Francisco in charge are making splendid headway and there is every indication that the meeting will be a great success from the standpoints of both attendance and results. Many applications for hotel reservations have been received from all points of the country, indicating that exhibitors are intending to take advantage of the opportunity of attending the National Convention and at the same time inspecting the greatest exposition in all history. The committee in charge of hotel arrangements wishes the fact emphasized that normal rates will prevail during the convention week, and throughout the life of the exposition for that matter. The exposition management has formed a hotel bureau, with which most of the hotel owners have affiliated, and rates are absolutely guaranteed. However, there will be a heavy rush during July and August and those planning to come to San Francisco are urged to communicate with M. E. Cory, chairman of the convention committee, 948 Market street, and arrange for accommodations.

Convention badges have been ordered and these will doubtlessly be cherished as souvenirs of the Jewel City. The top part is of metal and shows the wonderful Tower of Jewels at the exposition, with the words and date, "San Francisco—1915." The usual space is provided for the name of the wearer, and below is the official league emblem of rose colored metal. The ribbon used is of the exposition colors. A very attractive one-sheet poster has been made and these are being sent to every exchange and producing plant in the United States, as well as to large houses.

Although the exhibiting space at the Civic Auditorium is much larger than has ever before been the case it has all been taken and the committee in charge of this part of the convention has been compelled to seek additional facilities. Several of the leading makers of equipment have asked for double the space formerly contracted for and many new applications are on file.

California exhibitors will attend in almost a body and the interest being taken by them is clearly shown in the great increase in the membership of the State League during the past month. A steady stream of applications has been coming in in response to letters sent out by President H. L. Beach.

As a result of Chairman Cory's trip to Los Angeles it is announced that the attendance of the following screen stars at the grand ball which closes the convention is assured. Blanch Sweet and Carlyle Blackwell, of the Lasky Co., House Peters, William Hart, Bessie Barriscale and Marguerite Thompson, of the New York Motion Picture Co., William Duncan, Myrtle Gonzales, af the Vitagraph; Mary Alden, Mae Marsh, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, of the Majestic; Katherine Williams and Tom Santchi, of Selig; Charles Chaplin, of Essanay; Ruth Roland and Thomas Allen Rector, of Balboa—this couple will be featured in exhibition dancing—Ford Sterling, Owen Moore and Mabel Normand, of Keystone; Beatrice Michilena, of the California Motion Picture Co. Francis Ford, and Grace Cunard, Bob Leonard and Ella Hall, Herbert Rawlingson and Marguerite Little; Cleo Madison, Al Christy and the entire Harrigan Company from the Universal.

In addition to the above stars, Mr. Lasky is trying to induce Geraldine Farrar to attend and has placed a private car at her disposal for the trip if she will consent to make it. D. W. Griffith, the world's famous director, has consented to address the exhibitors during one of the business sessions of the convention. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, will be at the convention the entire week and will make an address at one of the business sessions. Col. W. N. Selig will also be in attendance and give the boys some good, fatherly advice. Col. Selig plans to make the trip from Los Angeles to San Francisco to meet the Selig Special and will return to Los Angeles immediately after the close of the convention. It is planned for the entire party to come to Los Angeles and spend several days in visiting the large studios. Elaborate plans are being made for entertaining the visitors. At the Selig plant, after inspecting the Zoo, a luncheon is to be served, followed by a dance in the large open air dancing pavilion. Universal is planning to film a spectacular scene and also give the visitors a chance to watch Nat Goodwin and Director Otis Turner, producing the Universal feature. Visits will also be made to the Majestic and Ince studios.

This will undoubtedly be the greatest gathering of motion picture people in the business and if the exhibitors throughout the country realize the importance of the event, many of them will undoubtedly make a special effort to attend. The floor space has all been contracted for and the committee is now trying to arrange additional space for those who neglected the matter until the last minute. A great many concerns have also doubled the space originally contracted for. The Paramount people are a notable example, as they will now use four booths instead of one. One booth being used by the Paramount Exchange and one by each of the three Paramount producing companies.

Gov. Johnson has consented to make the welcoming address at the opening session of the convention. The Governor and Mayor Rolph will both be present at the dance and officiate in leading the grand march, introducing the screen favorites. The day following the close of the convention is Liberty Bell Day at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The players will be guests of the Exposition Company on this date, and participate in the ceremonies being arranged.

It has been found impossible to arrange the special trains as originally contemplated, owing to the fact that a great many of the exhibitors from the east are leaving ahead of time and making various stops en route. Also the people having charge of the exhibits for the various companies have found it necessary to arrive in San Francisco several days in advance of the opening date. The same condition applies to those coming from Los Angeles. The first contingent, comprising representatives of the press and the publicity men of the various studios, will leave Los Angeles in a special car Sunday night, arriving in San Francisco Monday morning, July 12. The San Diego and Los Angeles exhibitors will leave in two special cars the following night, while the actors and actresses will leave Thursday night. A great many others, in addition to the artists above mentioned, have expressed their intention of attending the convention during the last day or two, and taking in the dance. In fact Joe Brandt says it seems they might just as well close up Universal City entirely and let everyone go.

Hotel Manx has been selected as the official headquarters and those expecting to attend the convention, are urged to write or wire the committee immediately regarding the desired reservations.

At Los Angeles the party will be quartered in the Hayward and Angelus. Messrs. Ince and Sennett have promised to attend unless called to New York on business.

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITORS' OUTING.

Members of League Local and Their Friends Will Go to Atlantic City.

ACCORDING to latest indications the Atlantic City excursion of the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League, to to be held on July 18, will be of much larger proportions than was at first indicated. Practically every member of the Philadelphia center will be in attendance and many of the exhibitors of Camden and other points in New Jersey have signified their intention of joining the party. Ben Zerr of Reading, president of the Pennsylvania Exhibitors' League, has promised to attend accompanied by fifty of the moving picture men from up the State. Many of the Lubin stars have also promised to attend. It is expected that there will be at least several hundred aboard the special train provided for the occasion when it pulls out of the shed in Camden. The folks from Reading have also arranged to come to this city in a special car.

Mayor Riddle of the famous seashore resort, will meet the visitors at the station, accompanied by the members of the Atlantic City Exhibitors' League and a band of twenty-five pieces. With the musicians playing a spirited air the entire party will march to the Continental House where they will satisfy their appetites during their short stay in the city by the sea.

Due to the untiring efforts of E. J. O'Keefe, proprietor of the City Square Theater, Atlantic City, all of the piers have been secured free of charge for the visiting motion picture exponents and it is an assured fact that every opportunity will be grasped in taking advantage of this generous offer.

In the evening a dance will be held on the Steeplechase Pier, and the best dancer will be awarded a handsome loving cup. The judges have not as yet been appointed, but no matter who serves in this capacity, there will be a decision handed down that will be based on merit alone. Following the dance the excursionists will repair to the hotel in order to prepare for the journey homeward. The special train of the moving picture party will leave Atlantic City at 12 o'clock midnight.

It may well be added here that anybody who is desirous of accompanying these pleasure seekers is most cordially invited. The expenses of the trip will be very small and for the small sum of three or four dollars one will be able to enjoy a day's outing that could not be had for that price anywhere in the country. Now then, Mr. Exhibitor, see that your face will be in the picture that is to be taken of the party as they are about to depart for the land of pleasure.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS HAVE STAMP PLAN.

At a recent meeting of Cleveland Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, at headquarters in Moose hall, the members adopted the co-operative stamp idea. Stamps, issued to members of the league only and redeemable for face value—through the league—are to be given patrons of the theaters thus affected. It was the concensus of league members that the stamps will serve as a premium for patrons and awaken a new interest in their theaters.

Ben J. Sawyer is the new president of the league, succeeding S. E. Morris, who was voted life membership without dues, a mark of tribute to his long service as executive of the organization.

Pedro de Cordoba Joins the Lasky Company

THE Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces that it has engaged the services of Pedro de Cordoba, one of the most popular of the younger generation of Broadway romantic actors. Mr. de Cordoba has already reached the studios in Hollywood, California, where he will begin work immediately.

Pedro de Cordoba is a direct descendant of Gonzalbo de Cordoba, known in Spanish history as Lel Gran Capitan, who lived at about the time of Columbus and who became a historic character by driving the Moors out of the southern part of the Spanish Peninsula.

Pedro de Cordoba.

Pedro de Cordoba, of mixed Spanish and French parentage, was born in New York City and early became proficient in playing the violin. His first ambition was to go on the operatic stage but his voice was such a heavy bass that he could only be cast as the "King" or "father," whereas he always wanted to be the hero. He therefore decided to go on the stage and attended the American Academy of Arts.

Daniel Frohman observed his work during the graduating performances of his class and engaged him to do minor roles with E. H. Sothern in Shakesperian repertoire. During the first year of this engagement he played with Mr. Sothern in "If I Were King" and "Hamlet" and during the second year in "Hamlet" and "Proud Prince." At the end of these two seasons Sothern and Marlowe reunited as joint stars and de Cordoba remained with them, playing some more important roles, such as Lorenzo in "The Merchant of Venice" and Paris in "Romeo and Juliet." During the second year of this joint starring engagement, which was the fourth year of de Cordoba's experience with Sothern, he added "The Taming of the Shrew" to the other plays in his Shakesperian repertoire.

After this, Mr. de Cordoba became ill and remained off the stage for a period of about two years. The only work which he did during this period was to give a number of concerts, for he took up the violin again with pronounced success. At the end of this enforced vacation he returned to the stage, playing the leading male role in "The Three of Us" on tour. His next engagement was as Lancelot in "Merely Mary Ann." After this brief excursion into the modern drama, de Cordoba returned again to Shakespearian repertoire, going on tour with John Griffith in "Othello," "Macbeth," "Faust" and "Don Caesar de Bazan."

Mr. de Cordoba then became associated with the New Theater, which had just opened under the direction of Winthrop Ames, and appeared there in a number of the leading productions such as "Sister Beatrice," "The Blue Bird" and the "Arrowmaker." Following two years at this endowed playhouse he returned to Broadway, playing such parts as the Prince in "Turandot;" Jacob in the "Five Frankfurters," and the musician in the "Master of the House." He also had an important role with Mme. Simone in her presentation of "A Scrap of Paper," and in the elaborate Liebler production of "Joseph and His Brethren." At this point Mr. de Cordoba returned again to the Shakespearian stage, appearing with Mr. Faversham in "Othello," "Julius Caesar," and "Romeo and Juliet." He then joined Margaret Anglin in her Shakespearian productions, such as "As You Like It," and "The Taming of the Shrew," and in her revival of "Lady Windermere's Fan."

Mr. de Cordoba's most recent engagements have been in the "Song of Songs" and "Beverley's Balance."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Attractions.

"THE LORELEI MADONNA," written by Lulu Case Russell and produced by the Western Vitagraph Company, under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon, is this week's novel feature at the Vitagraph Theater. This three-part feature tells of an artist who is ambitious to paint a Madonna to fill an unoccupied niche in the chapel of the mission where he was raised. While in Tahiti the artist meets a girl of the dance hall, "The Lorelei," who captivates him, and he paints her as his ideal Madonna. Dramatic consequences follow his act. The scenery of California and Tahiti has furnished any number of beautiful landscapes. Alma Reuben, Juan de la Cruz, George Kunkel, Marcia Moore, George Stanley and Edgar Martin Teller, are included in the cast. Chapter VIII. of the Vitagraph Serial, "The Goddess," shows several very interesting episodes this week. Twelve of the Vitagraph stars, headed by Anita Stewart and Earle Williams, are in the cast. Four comedies are also on the program. "Billy, the Bear Tamer," introducing Billy Quirk and Constance Talmadge, is an amusing love story. "Welcome to Bohemia," played by Wally Van, Nitra Frazer and Albert Roccardi, illustrate how an artist and his friends were tamed by a mother-in-law. "The Honeymoon Pact," in which Lillian Walker and Evart Overton, as a pair of newlyweds, play a joke on themselves; and Number 14 of Roy McCardell's Jarr Family Series, "Mr. Jarr and Gertrude's Beaux," complete a representative Vitagraph program.

Victor Moore at The Strand.

"Chimmie Fadden," with Victor Moore in the stellar role, is the main attraction at the Strand Theater this week. The plot of the play tells a story of the Bowery in the days when the Irish and the Germans were the prevailing nationalities and the man with the strongest punch had the greatest authority. The author, E. W. Townsend, wrote a series of sketches for the New York Sun, in which "Chimmie" was the principal character. Victor Moore makes an ideal Bowery boy, and the other parts are assigned to Camille Astor, Raymond Hatton, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Ernest Joy, Anita King, Tom Forman and Harry de Roy. The picture is by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Arthur J. Aylesworth's pictures of animal life and hunting big game in the Canadian Rockies and Alaska, the Strand Topical Review, Morati's Operatic Ensemble in new selections, and the Strand Concert Orchestra under the direction of Carl Edouarde, are the remaining features of the bill.

"The Wild Olive" at the Broadway.

"Myrtle Stedman in "The Wild Olive" is the leading feature at the Broadway Theater this week. This Oliver Morosco release is an excellently produced photoplay, and Miss Stedman gives a fine impersonation of the heroine. The Broadway Animated News, Paramount South American Travel Pictures and several clever comedies are also shown.

"The Birth of a Nation" at the Liberty.

D. W. Griffith's marvelous spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," still continues to attract crowds to The Liberty Theater.

Important Tax Decision

Allows Exhibitors to Transfer Internal Revenue License to Airdomes.

A MOST interesting and a really very important decision having a bearing on the special tax liability of motion picture theaters and airdomes has recently been handed down by Commissioner of Internal Revenue W. H. Osborn. In a notice to collectors of internal revenue, revenue agents and others, Commissioner Osborn states:

"This office has previously held that proprietors of airdomes, in which operatic, dramatic or other representations, plays or performances, motion picture shows, etc., for admission to which entrance money is received, are given, are required to pay special tax under the provisions of the eighth sub-division of section three, act of October 22, 1914. However, upon further deliberation, it is now of the opinion that the proprietors of such airdomes are required to pay a special tax under the provisions of the sixth sub-division of section three, act aforesaid, such tax being based upon the seating capacity of such airdomes.

"Where such airdome is adjacent to a theater, for which the special tax has been paid, and the seating capacity of the airdome does not exceed the seating capacity of the theater, and performances are not given simultaneously in the airdome and theater, the special-tax stamp, secured to cover the theater, will cover performances given in the airdome.

"Where the proprietor of a theater operates an airdome at another location, upon closing his theater he may transfer the special-tax stamp issued for such theater to the airdome, provided, of course, the seating capacity of the airdome does not exceed the seating capacity of the theater, and the special-tax stamp, issued to cover performances given in an airdome, may be transferred to cover a theater owned by the same party under the above conditions.

"Proprietors of such airdomes who have paid special taxes under the eighth subdivision of section three, act aforesaid, unless they hold special-tax stamp for a theater which may be transferred to cover such airdomes, will be required to take out special-tax stamp under the sixth subdivision of section three, act aforesaid, and thereupon present for redemption special-tax stamp secured under the eighth subdivision above mentioned. Of course, under such circumstances, liability to fifty per cent. penalty will not be incurred.

"All previous rulings conflicting with the above are hereby revoked. W. H. OSBORN,

"Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The subdivisions of section three, referred to, are as follows:

"Sixth. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, where a charge of admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than 250, shall pay $25; having a seating capacity of more than 250 and not exceeding 500, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding 500 and not exceeding 800, shall pay $75; having a seating capacity of more than 800, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories, rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, that whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

"Eighth. Proprietors or agents of all other exhibitions or shows for money not enumerated in this section shall pay $10: Provided, that a special tax paid in one state, territory or the District of Columbia shall not exempt exhibitions from the tax in another state, territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be required for exhibitions within any one state, territory or the District of Columbia: Provided further, that this paragraph shall not apply to Chautauquas, lecture lyceums, agricultural or industrial fairs, or exhibitions held under the auspices of religious or charitable associations."

SUMNER GARD ENGAGED FOR "THE IMPOSTER."

Sumner Gard, remembered for his performances in "The Spendthrift" at the Hudson theater; in "Brewster's Millions" at the New Amsterdam theater and with Arnold Daly in "You Never Can Tell," has been engaged by the World Film Corporation to portray the juvenile lead in the new William A. Brady picture, "The Imposter." Jose Collins and Alec Francis, and in addition Robert Cummings, Dorothy Fairchild, and a host of lesser lights will be seen.

Yale Benner

YALE BENNER'S versatility got to work early in life, allowing him to make many entrances and exits from the stage—playing a sort of hide and seek game with business and the profession, until his success tied him down to the stage.

About twenty years ago—who'd thing it to look at him—he was industriously sawing his way to success in the electrical business when the dramatic bug hit him and he forthwith—gadzooks!—developed a swelling which he called "The Brooklyn Dramatic Society." With such managerial success, he provided more infectious material in the shape of other amateur societies—and his name spread, until he just couldn't help chucking his job and taking to a repertoire company playing the smaller towns of the eastern states. He languished in these confines until he found vaudeville which, slowing up, he jumped again and went into the natural gas business in West Virginia—this having no reference to "hot air," despite the fact that Yale is branded as a humorist.

Yale Benner.

A number of years spent there and the old longing for the grease paint was too much. He was off again to play with his brothers as Linton, the reporter in Jesse Lynch Williams' romantic play, "The Stolen Story." James Lee Finney's part, Captain Arnold Sylvester, now fell to Yale in the Zira company and in it he did some of the best work of his career. More versatility—he leaves this to play the trying part of the absinthe fiend, Raoul Burton, in "Leah Kleschna," later, with charactertistic nimbleness of adaptation, becoming one of the triplets in Harry Winters in "The Three Twins" with Clifton Crawford and Bessie McCoy. Then came two seasons in vaudeville as Miss Hope Booth's leading man, playing the dramatic critic in a sketch, "The Little Blond Lady."

But it was not until Yale wandered into motion pictures that his marked comedy was signally registered. He came east to visit his parents in Mount Vernon when he, out of curiosity, wandered into the Edison studio, and there he has remained, true to his first motion picture love.

In comedy Yale should be renamed "Gale" for that's what he excites in laughter. His fun is so natural, so free of straining after effect and so unctious that it "gets over" with unfailing certainty. At facial expression he is a master of convulsing faces, yet never overdone. He is probably, one of the best-known "butlers" on the stage or screen and many a time and oft has Yale pulled down the honors—and the laughs—when cast for that role, seemingly unimportant.

He has appeared in Edison films innumerable times, some of which, within easy memory because of their funniness, are "The Stuff That Dreams Are Made Of," "The Dumb Wooing," where he has a nervous affliction; and in the inimitable comedy, "Going to the Ball Game." Then, in more serious roles, in "The Man in the Dark;" as the scheming butler in "Olive's Opportunities" series, and as the fun-making "indispensable" valet in the "Lord Stranleigh" series.

WORLD FILM CATERS TO 1,000 PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITORS.

The Philadelphia branch of the World Film Corporation started out with three employes in one room about 18 months ago. It now occupies an entire building at the most prominent corner of Film Row, with a personnel of 14 people, open 24 hours every day.

Improvements have been made week by week; service has been improved. Every possible attention has been given to the publicity end and 1,000 names of satisfied exhibitors make up the service list of the corporation.

The offices are spacious, light and pleasant. The projection room is well equipped and a little theater in itself, and Manager George J. Beihoff insists upon the most courteous treatment and a hearing for everybody.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Deplorable Passing of Warren A. Patrick.

THE sudden and wholly unexpected passing away of Warren A. Patrick, of this city, at his home, 636 Fifty-first street, Friday evening, June 18, while suffering from temporary mental aberration, came with the force and nature of a paralyzing shock to his many friends and thousands of acquaintances throughout the amusement world.

From what has been learned, Mr. Patrick had been suffering from severe nervous prostration for some weeks past, with consequent great despondency, and he disappeared from his home for a period of ten days without any seeming knowledge of the distraction and agony suffered by his wife and little daughter, Salome, to whom he had ever been a devoted husband and father. He was taken home Friday evening, June 18, through the efforts of a friend, who found him wandering in a dazed condition, at Rhodes avenue and Thirty-fifth street. A short time afterwards Mrs. Patrick heard a cry from the bathroom to which he had retired. A physician was in the house at the time; but all efforts were fruitless to save the life of the unconscious man.

His wife and daughter are inconsolable, indeed, utterly broken down, by this awful affliction; and to them goes out a flood of sympathy that they may be able to bear their agonizing bereavement. As a friend of theirs and of the departed, I take the liberty to remind them of the words of a great master:

"In the night of death Hope sees a star,
"And Listening Love can hear the rustle of a wing."

The funeral services were held Sunday afternoon, June 20, at Hamburg's undertaking parlors, 4649 Prairie avenue, where a great gathering assembled to show their respect for the dead man. The Rev. Joseph Milburn, pastor of St. James Methodist Church, and McKnley Lodge No. 868, A. F. & A. M., Chicago, of which Mr. Patrick was a member, participated in the ceremonies. The services were held under the auspices of the Showmen's League of America, of which the dead man was founder and national secretary. The Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, of which Mr. Patrick was chairman of the board of governors and largely instrumental in its organization, was also represented in force, among the members present being: R. R. Nehls, president; L. A. Boening, treasurer; Walter Hildreth, secretary; Richard C. Travers, Chas. E. Nixon, Ralph Bradford, Robt. R. Levy, N. F. Sawyer, Watterson Rothacker and others.

The casket containing the remains left Chicago for California, Mo., Sunday evening, in charge of a guard of honor, comprised of prominent officials and members of the Showmen's League of America. In that town, about sixteen years ago, Mr. Patrick met his bride, and in the quiet graveyard, where many of her forbears lie, the remains of her husband will be placed at rest.

Peace to his ashes and his memory!

It is only fitting that in this brief dedicatory article reference should be made to the activities of Warren A. Patrick in his short life of 40 years. He had an early hankering for the circus. When only a small boy in his first pair of knee pants, he saw his first big show, under the watchful eye of a beloved uncle, much to the disturbance of his good stepfather, who was a Methodist minister in Janesville, Wis.

Warren never forgot that experience, and, most probably, it is due to it that he joined the Ringling shows in the capacity of ticket seller some years afterwards. He rapidly rose to the position of chief auditor of the Ringling shows, and was considered the best in that line in America when he resigned. About this time he was married to the woman who survives him.

Then he was offered the auditorship of the Barnum and Bailey shows and accepted; but his newly-wed wife objected to the nomadic life and Warren resigned. This led to his settlement in Chicago as the local manager of The Billboard.

In that capacity he made the biggest success of his life, as he succeeded in giving that publication a firm standing in the trade to which it appealed. No one can deny him that honor, no more than they can deny—if they know the facts as I know them—that he was very shabbily treated by the home management of that paper, after he had made it a success.

Some day I may tell the story.

Then came the ill-fated "Show World," in which Mr. Patrick failed, after a brave struggle. After that, up to the time of his death, Mr. Patrick was western representative of the "New York Clipper."

The Olson Bill Passes Both the Senate and the House.

The Olson censorship bill, which provides for the censorship of moving pictures throughout the state of Illinois, was finally passed at Springfield on June 18.

The Chicago board continues, but no picture subject can be run in Chicago without having first been passed by the state censor board. Thus a double tax has been imposed on all films shown in the city:

The state board will be composed of three members, appointed by Lewis G. Stevenson, secretary of state, each receiving a salary of $2,500 per year. The political power back of the secretary was shown by the vote of 95 to 10, in favor of the bill, in the house.

The Olson bill provides that film companies shall pay one dollar for each reel of film shown in the state. In Chicago an additional charge of 50 cents will be made by the Chicago board.

The supineness and negligence shown by most of the big film concerns in Chicago, in permitting this bill to pass, have been amazing. What was everybody's business became nobody's business until the final stroke aroused them.

It is now hoped that sufficient influence can be brought to bear on Governor Dunne so that he will veto the measure; but what can excuse the lack of interest taken in the bill, during its passage in the senate and house, by those so vitally interested?

The Jackson bill, which was passed in the house some time ago, has been defeated in the senate at Springfield. The bill prohibited the public display of any hanging, lynching or burning that would tend to race riots. It was introduced in the house by Jackson, a colored representative from Chicago, and was specially aimed at "The Nigger" and "The Birth of a Nation."

The "Chicago Tribune" had the following editorial concerning the state board of censors, in its issue of Tuesday, June 22:

The assembly has passed a bill creating a state board of moving picture censorship. The Chicago board is not affected, so patrons of the movies in this community will have their amusement sifted through two official strainers.

This leaves us in a deplorably exposed situation. There is only the extra legal national board, the state board, and the city board between our susceptible moral natures and destruction. What are our other officials doing to protect us? The county commissioners surely will set up a county censorship, township trustees will create a township censorship; the ward should not ignore its responsibility, nor the precinct.

It may be Gov. Dunne is sufficient of an old-fashioned American to believe a community like Chicago should be credited with adult intelligence and conceded the right to choose its own entertainment without the oversight of beadles. It may be he believes Americanism does not lie in the direction of the multiplication of agencies controlling the individual, overseeing his private life, bolstering his moralities with bureaucratic props, but in the direction still of private initiative and individual responsibility.

If he does he will veto the state censorship bill as an ill-considered expression of an unwise and un-American tendency toward bureaucracy.

The "Chicago Examiner" printed the following editorial on the state censorship bill, on June 21, under the heading, "A Bill That Needs a Veto":

Governor Dunne should veto the bill that provides for a State Board of Censors in addition to the local inspectors of moving picture films. It is an unnecessary, un-American measure, directly opposed to the principle of freedom of speech and of the press, and is the first step toward this restriction of the stage and the newspapers and magazines against which our ancestors sought to guard us.

There is no more reason for imposing excessive regulation on the moving picture than on any other means of displaying the written or spoken word. Only the immorality of a publication—and this includes the drama, film and stage, the art of painting and that of writing—should be an excuse for suppressing it. If the presentation is likely to cause an increase of vice or crime, if it is offensive to morals and ethics, the law may justly step in, but to submit the expression of opinion, the picturing of the dramatic moments in the country's history—as was recently attempted in Chicago—to the heavy-footed judgment of a lot of political appointees is so offensive as to be more indecent than anything the motion picture producers could possibly display.

This country got along for a century and a quarter without feeling the need of censoring its amusements or its publications, except by the ordinary action of the laws against indecency and libel. During this same period censorship, which is a peculiarly monarchial institution, was in full effect throughout Europe. Neither in licentiousness nor in recklessness were American institutions comparable with the censored press and stage of Europe.

The complications likely to result from two boards of inspection are beyond computation. The opportunity for bigotry and for blackmail are more than doubled.

A Board of Censors is going to justify its existence if it can. It will delve for objectionable features and make the opportunity to interfere.

Instead of attempting to so order its activities as to permit the greatest liberty it will inevitably see how much it can suppress.

The moving picture business is a vast industry. The fact of its newness is no reason for making special enactments for it.

America does not have to be told what to see and what to think.

The Jefferson idea that the country is best governed that is least governed has not been made obsolete by the invention of the motion picture.

Governor Dunne can serve a democratic ideal by vetoing this insidious advance of the spirit of oppression.

CHICAGO FILM BREVITIES.

C. W. Cook, owner of the Bijou Theater, Indianapolis, Ind., was a caller at the office last week. The Bijou seats 328 and charges an admission of five cents for three reels of the General Film Company's first run pictures. Ten cents is charged when five reels are shown, including Broadway star features. Mr. Cook stated that business is fair in his home city. He also informed me that my old friend, Mr. Zepp, for the last two years traveling representative for the General Film Company's branch office in Indianapolis, died about six weeks ago. Mr. Zepp started the first moving picture theater in Indianapolis and was connected with the trade in various capacities ever since. Many will regret to hear of his death.

No pains have been spared, I see, to make it worthy of the superior company that has put it before the public. Please extend my thanks to Mr. Gilson Willets, the adapter, and, if possible, to the very able actors who have given the story fresh life. I am very much pleased with the production in every way."

The banquet of the Photodrama Club of Chicago, marking the close of the season, proved to be a great success. Thirty-five of Chicago's leading scenario writers were present and a number of motion picture stars. In addition to a splendid program, speeches were made by Mrs. Hawthorne and Messrs. Van Patten, Walker, Jaxon, Zimmerman and Clarke. President Clarence A. Frambers spoke of the splendid progress of the club and the good it has accomplished, as evidenced by the fact that, with a few exceptions, the majority of the members had sold one or more scenarios, notwithstanding the fact that when they applied for membership they were amateurs with little or no experience in writing scenarios. Wilmuth Merkyl of the United Photoplays Co., made a pleasing impromptu address. Maude Moore Clement, the winner of the Edison-Mirror contest, closed the program with a musical number of her own composition, the "Photodrama Glide," which she intends to publish. Treasurer Charles A. Buckley demonstrated that in addition to his ability in writing scenarios he is an excellent vocalist. President Frambers was then presented with a handsome token of esteem and appreciation by the members of the club. A promise of a new club next fall on a much larger scale, was made and all members pledged themselves as loyal supporters. Among the invited guests were William Lord Wright, Wilmuth Merkyl, Willard Case, Grace Darmond, W. E. Wing, Russell E. Smith, Frank E. Woods, Ruth Stonehouse and Richard Travers.

Doings at Los Angeles

THE past few weeks certainly have been full of interesting, exciting and sad events. The photoplay colony has not yet recovered from the shock of learning of the sudden death of Elmer Booth of the Mutual, who with George Seigmaun and Tod Browning, drove into the rear end of a string of flat cars loaded with rails. The two injured men are recovering nicely now and will be out of bed in a few weeks.

The Universal National Beauties have come and gone, and caused no little flurry. After visiting the producing plant of the Big U firm they went to San Diego and then to the fair at San Francisco where they visited four days. They left on the twenty-first for their several homes.

P. A. Powers, of the Universal, left this city to rejoin the special in San Francisco, and went on east with it. Joe Brandt stayed right with the train of fair ones, returning direct to the New York office. Carl Laemmle went to San Diego and north, but returned here and is now looking over the western business. He will leave for the east in a few weeks. Buck Massie, who so successfully piloted the five dozen beauties through Los Angeles, went on the special to the south and north and returned here to resume duties in the publicity department of the Universal.

David W. Griffith returned this week from Chicago and will be here for some little time looking after the business of the Mutual studios.

Four big feature productions were started simultaneously this week at Inceville. They are "The Conqueror," with Willard Mack; "Matrimony," starring Julia Dean; "The Last Act," with Bessie Barriscale, and "Redeemed from Bondage," with Forrest Winant. Thomas H. Ince is supervising the work, assisted by four of his feature producers, Reginald Barker, Scott Sidney, Walter Edwards and Charles Swickard.

The "Clansman" has been closed at Clune's auditorium, after having been projected steadily for sixteen weeks, creating a record which is expected to stand for some time. The new show is a mixed one and will be followed by another great program.

The Los Angeles school children's pageant pictures were shown successfully at the Majestic theater this week. Many tourists and, in fact, everyone who saw them was surprised.

Next week we will bid farewell to the Biograph players, who have been here for several months. Many new players will be added to the stock company and leave for New York, while some Bioplayers will stay here with other firms.

J. A. Crosby has taken charge of the laboratories at Universal City, succeeding Billy Foster who, for some time, was in charge there. Mr. Crosby is an old hand at the picture game and knows the film-making business from every angle.

Jacques Jaccard, director of J. Warren Kerrigan, was wedded here this week to Miss Helen Leslie. The wedding was a surprise as it was not known that the popular couple had any intention of marrying. The best wishes of the hub are extended to the happy ones.

John Sheehan, who did so well as the little politician in Carlyle Blackwell's "The High Hand," has joined the Flying A forces and is now at work there. He is in the Beauty company.

"Judith of Bethulia," although now two years old, has been showing to packed houses at the Broadway theater this week.

Out at the Keystone studios, where so many people are working on fun pictures, they have diversion in the form of swimming. The Keystone plunge is always full of fresh cool water, and at the end of a hot day's work the players all jump into bathing suits and plunge for half an hour. The other day there were about twenty filmers in, and it was fun to watch the boys and girls enjoying the water.

Chance Ward, who directed "Ham" comedies for Kalem in Hollywood, has left that company and is enjoying a brief vacation before he accepts another position, several having been offered him, but he refuses to work for a few weeks. Rube Miller is now in charge of the Hamilton-Duncan forces, making screamers every week.

H. Fichtenberg, of New Orleans, was one of the shining lights when the Universal Beauty special rolled into town last week. He was right "there" and enjoyed the trip immensely, returning with the bevy of beauties to the old southland.

Frank Darien has joined the Mutual and is working in Komic pictures at that studio. The story is "Beppo the Barber" and the title role was being portrayed by Elmer Booth, who was killed in an automobile accident.

Blowing Up a Bridge at Inceville for a Scene in "The Torch of Fortune."

The Universal is establishing a new branch studio at Lake Tahoe, way up in the fastness of the California mountains. Jacques Jaccard is the director to work there first. He will have Helen Leslie, J. Warren Kerrigan and Hazel Buckham as his leads and Ben Cohn as scenarioist.

House Peters, formerly with the Lasky company, has joined the N. Y. M. P. company as has Lola May and Wedgwood Nowell, who will arrive some time this season to appear in Ince features.

Cyril Maude, the English actor, is busy at the Morosco studios in a big picture. Myrtle Stedman, the charming leading woman, appears opposite. Mr. Maude is just getting used to the film stage and seems to like it quite well.

Geraldine Farrar has been transformed from a stage woman into a picture player. The event took place this week when Cecil B. DeMille directed her in the first scene of the big story in which she is appearing. Miss Farrar is said to be quite a good fellow at the studio. She delayed lunch until three o'clock just to finish a few scenes in a certain set, then ate lunch, insisting that everyone stop work and eat, the party having a grand time.

Sunday, June 19, the Selig Zoo is scheduled to open. The great $750,000 farm will be thrown open to the public and the animals, which are valued at $300,000, will be on exhibition in the fine new buildings of the park. Selig's is to be one of the amusement show places of this city, and will be one of the permanent exhibits of the southland. It is expected that many hundred people will enjoy the opening day celebration. A baby elk was born here several days ago and named "99," after the Los Angeles lodge, which is number 99.

V-L-S-E TO BUILD SEATTLE OFFICE.

To house the Seattle Branch of the V-L-S-E contracts have been let for the erection of a building at 416 Olive street.

When formal possession of this building is taken by the Seattle branch it will mark the first film exchange to exclusively occupy a building, especially constructed to its order.

THE OMNIPRESENT REVOLVER.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

IS IT a psychological phenomena that the minds of the producers seem to run at given times in similar channels? It is often surprising to notice the great similarity of ideas pervading even the various productions of the more varied types of picture film makers.

Not long ago when the love drama was being worked to its fullest possible extent, and love making seemed in the air, the engagement ring became omnipresent. The engagement followed so hard and fast upon the first acquaintance, and marriage, often by elopement, followed in still faster time, that "marry in haste and repent at leisure" was the ground work of nearly every production. All this seemed to be brought about because every young lover seemed to be supplied with an engagement ring ere he started out to seek his life partner, indeed, vest pockets seemed to grow engagement rings until the abundant supply caused their use to become a "drug" upon the love market, and after a few criticisms they passed away.

In a very similar way we are now suffering from what may be called the revolver epidemic. In a recent monthly bulletin of an eminent firm in about twelve illustrations of as many new films, the central point of the majority of them is the revolver. A New York theatre of no mean character recently showed six revolver tragedies in eight pictures. A New York paper which illustrates moving picture features in one publication showed two large quarter page illustrations in each of which the revolver was the controlling power of the scene. It must not be supposed that the omnipresent revolver always means tragedy, the humorous pictures have been caught in the epidemic.

In a recent comic a man was thrown overboard in the sea and was pictured as nearly drowned; no sooner was he rescued, however, than from his water soaked clothes he produced the omnipresent revolver. During the last few weeks the revolver has appeared in attack and defense, in robbery and in capture, in murder and in suicide, in hold-up, in hunting and, of course, in every conceivable tragedy, and in many inconceivable comedies. As it is well known that whatever a moving picture actor does, he does it correctly, it can be readily understood that at all times the use of the revolver is more professional than amateur. If a hold-up it is of true robber style, if in "gun work" it is with true Western readiness and accuracy, always and ever correct, and with the following evil results.

William Walsh, a young New Yorker of eighteen years, recently arrested for holding up at least five different tradesmen and after robbing their cash boxes, making an effective "getaway," boasted before the Magistrate that he "learned the secret of gun fighting by studying the tactics of the moving picture gun fighters." This is without doubt a piece of effective educational moving picture work which was never intended, nevertheless it was there and brought its evil results. To make the matter still worse this same young man is supposed to be able to aid in clearing up a gun murder mystery.

Reviewers of moving pictures are tired of the omnipresent revolver. Since the carrying of a revolver is prohibited its appearance in pictures has increased. Probably producers thought the prohibition removed a possible evil. This, however, did not make it more welcome on the screen. It has now become a common nuisance, people are tired of it, and the bad taste of its constant appearance is seriously hurting the better business. Evil under any circumstance cannot thrive beyond its first inception, its continuance is its own danger and the revolver must be relegated to its own regular and legitimate uses. A killing weapon it has killed itself, it will kill every picture in which it appears. Let the epidemic be stayed and its omnipresence replaced by its oblivion; it is as dangerous on the screen to the picture as it is in the hands of the criminal to the person attacked. Let its use be, if not entirely stopped, at least brought within its own limited confines.

EDUCATIONALS FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

By Clarence L. Linz.

MOTION PICTURES are playing a prominent part in the research work of the Department of Agriculture, according to a recent statement issued by the Committee on Motion Picture Activities, which declares that the work of the department in developing motion picture films has fairly passed the experimental stage in at least one important particular. The motion picture laboratory is a part of the section of Illustrations of the Division of Publications. It has fully demonstrated its ability to produce educational films of a photographic excellence which easily equals the work of the best commercial motion picture photographers. Since the commencement of the work the photographers, although handicapped for nearly a year by a makeshift laboratory and inadequate equipment, have taken and developed thirty-two complete films aggregating over 30,800 feet of valuable negative. In addition to this there are under development at the present time over 5,000 feet dealing with certain subjects either completed or now being taken as seasonal opportunity permits field work in the various stages of the films.

The laboratory was recently moved into new and especially equipped quarters in the basement of the building at 1358 B Street, Southwest, and should soon be in position to produce an even greater amount of film.

Several problems yet remain to be solved before any wide outside use of the films can be made, and before any exact definition of the films as adjuncts in agricultural education can safely be formulated, states the committee, for it is realized that before any films of this character can be made fully helpful to the farmers, for whom they are primarily intended, means whereby exhibitions can be given in places where there is no electric current must be devised.

With this in view, tests are now being made of all known motion picture projectors, and the help of electrical and automobile experts is being sought in order to develop a method whereby current can be developed from an automobile or other portable outfit in remote farming districts.

This investigation also includes tests of means other than electric power for generating the necessary light and in this work the War Department has placed at their disposal the results of tests of motion picture apparatus conducted by its engineers.

The application of motion picture films to education is still in its infancy. The term "educational film" as commercially understood is applied commonly to any subject which is not the portrayal of dramatic action. Very few of the so-called educational films, the committee declares, have been designed with a view of teaching the spectators to perform any definite process. Most of them are simply pictures of places and events and are educational in the sense that an illustrated book of travels would be placed in this class in distinction to a volume of fiction. Attention is being given, therefore, to the application of pedagogical methods of visual instruction. In showing such subjects as the germination of seeds, or other processes which must be taken intermittently over a long period, the department is determined that the film shall be an honest scientific record of the process depicted, rather than the result of optical illusions.

The degree to which motion picture films can be made direct teachers of agricultural processes is another problem which is being investigated. Several of the films secured or made by the bureaus before the work was formally inaugurated, and a number of films since developed, have been used before audiences in various sections and careful estimate has been made of their value and effect. In general the lecturers who show these films report that they attract favorable attention and certainly are received with great interest by the audiences. Some of the lecturers assert that showing the films had a direct educational effect. The more experienced held that the chief benefits were in attracting larger audiences, the pleasure the people derived from seeing the pictures, and the aid to complete understanding of the lecture or subject that the pictures afforded. The pictures enabled those who saw them to visualize into concrete action the otherwise abstract points of the propoganda. The pictures also served to break the ice for a more cordial reception of the new ideas. Undoubtedly, the films have a value in indirect education, in stimulating general interest in the subject, and as an element in propaganda.

Many educational and philanthropic institutions and organizations and a number of commercial activities have requested the use of the department's films. Commercial motion picture companies also have become interested in securing the use of the department's subjects for general showing in public motion picture theaters throughout the country. However, because of the fact that the laboratory with its present equipment and available funds, has not yet been able to produce enough positive prints to supply the needs of the department's own lecturers, it has been unwise to undertake, for the present at least, any wide distribution of the films. All requests from outside agencies to purchase, rent, or borrow department films have been refused, and such films as have had a public showing have been exhibited only under the direct control of one of the department's representatives. In all probability, additional legislation would be necessary before the department could successfully undertake co-operation of this character without very heavy expenditures of Federal funds. Under present conditions any money received from the sale of films must be turned back into the treasury, and the department accordingly would be forced to deplete its own special photographic appropriations.

To meet the many requests for private showing of the many films, the period after two o'clock each Friday afternoon is devoted to such exhibitions. In fact, the laboratory has been beset with these requests but it is impossible to grant them at other times because of the fact that it is necessary to use the projecting room for assembling films, preparing titles, and similar work, and such exhibitions have a tendency to interfere with and delay the work of production.

A GOOD WORKING LIST.

By G. D. Crain, Jr.

THE fact that Louisville was the birthplace of the movement whereby moving pictures for children, or special children's moving pictures, which has since spread all over the country, has placed that city at the head of the movement, and proprietors of picture houses in various sections of the country have repeatedly requested suggestions concerning film service, films that have been shown, and films which the local Board of Moving Picture Censors for Children's Motion Picture Shows, had already seen and approved of.

During the past few weeks the number of these inquiries has increased so rapidly that Mrs. Frederick Levy, chairman of the board, deemed it a wise move to compile a complete list of the titles shown at the Mary Anderson theater where the first show was given on October 10, 1914, and the last show of the season on June 12, 1915. These children's shows have been discontinued until school "takes up" again, when it is hoped that another good selection of special children's pictures will have been made available for use in the theater.

A study of the list of films shown will reveal the good work done by the local board in maintaining the shows at a high degree of desirability, and selecting educational and instructive pictures. This list, which should prove of considerable value in aiding other exhibitors in the selection of educationals, is as follows:

More Than Seven.

Mr. Earl S. Rogers, Majestic Theater, Paris, Ill., says: "Have been a constant reader of the Moving Picture World for years, and never miss reading your suggestions in the musical department. I have been playing pictures for over seven years, piano and drums, Style K. Wurlitzer and orchestra director. I find that either a Wurlitzer or a piano alone is the most satisfactory for playing descriptive music for pictures. Of course, we can arrange music so that it will almost follow the picture, but when an orchestra is used it is very difficult to follow the expression and action unless the director is not playing an instrument, but simply directs his instrumentalists in crescendo, accel, ritard, etc." (I think it depends a great deal on what kind of an orchestra you have and how they have been trained. I know of many leaders who watch the pictures and direct the orchestra and also play an instrument—violin or piano. But they must follow their leader; not be dragged or pushed.—Ed.) Mr. Rogers continues:

"Music can easily be made to fit the scene, but if the expression is followed invariably as marked in the music it may often be exactly the opposite to the action. I agree with Miss Currier of Barton, Vt., in that the musician may be greatly assisted by studying the characters; also what she says regarding modulations and change of tempo. I find that the use of these will detract less if played p. or pp. and when fully modulated accelerate or crescendo as the scene demands. In hurries, mysterious passages, etc., keep below the action of the picture, and as the action becomes stronger rise with it, but never above it, or you will attract the attention away from the picture, and lose in a moment what you have been trying for an hour to gain. Watch the attitude of the audience and see if they are following the picture closely. If they seem restless, change the tempo of your music or use another theme or passage. Of course in comedies use popular songs, rags, etc., and when you can play some old song and get a laugh, do so. But burlesque your comedies and in this way give your audience a change, and variety is necessary if you would please your audience."

Mr. Rogers is right about keeping the music subdued, under the action as he terms it. It is much more readily humored to fit the action when kept down and unobtrusive. When your music is loud it becomes conspicuous, insistent, it compels attention to itself; then any change of time or figure or key, any modulation or change of expression is noticed by the auditor because you have been forcing your music on his attention; you have made it predominant instead of sub-dominant to the picture. Don't think the operator is there to illustrate your music. You are merely supposed to accompany the pictures.

Hidden Music.

Burr Delmar Nickle, proprietor of Delmar Theater, Medina, N. Y., says:

"I have a big house and have turned it into pictures mostly, and got an original idea that by setting my stage with a parlor scene (which has an old colonial window) and hiding my pianist at the side of the stage so she could see the screen through this old window, has proven many things. First, her mind is on the picture and not disturbed by any of the audience. Second, the people have their eyes on the picture at all times and not on the piano player. I have heard much favorable comment on this and it really appeals to the public greatly. I have good music, pay a high price for it and in doing so I find I can do away with an orchestra. I installed a pipe organ and placed it out of sight also and am so well pleased with results that I have come to the conclusion that all music should be hidden when playing for pictures."

Mr. Nickle has the right idea. Music should never be conspicuous.

Some managers think that when they pay an artist to play for them they must turn a spot light on said artist while he plays solos, so the public will realize what a lot it is getting for its money. Some musicians are equally anxious to get the spot light. Both may possess a keen desire to give the public a good show, though not necessarily a good picture show. They are concentrating on something aside from the picture instead of concentrating on things to boost the picture. Good music is an added attraction certainly. Sandwiches and coffee passed around in the audience might also be an added attraction, if they were good. But it isn't necessary that every dollar you spend should shine. Pay for good music but let it accompany your pictures, that is, if you are running a picture theater.

"The Hypocrites."

Dick Bertram, musical director Palace Theater orchestra (pianist), Burlington, Ia., sends musical program for above mentioned picture. Mr. Bertram says: "This program was played with four pieces, violin, piano, cornet and drums, and with this instrumentation proved very effective. In addition to favorable comment by the public the newspapers gave us more space than that alotted to the picure itself; when a newspaper gives something for nothing there must be a reason. No doubt a more effective program could be lined up for a larger instrumentation, but for the instruments mentioned I think my program is hard to beat."

FIRST REEL.

At Opening.—Tacet. When Monk stricken blind at sight of truth:
1. La Fontaine Idylle (Lysberg—arranged by Hildreth). Play once through.
2. At title: "People Gathered as on Fete Day." "Stabat Mater," by Rossini. Play until end of reel and work up to climax – unveiling of statue.
3. Open reel with Dorn's Fantasie on "Il Trovatore" (piano arrangement). Use fourth movement of this number alternately in major and minor. Use piano only until ready to work attack on Gabriel, then bring in rest of orchestra.
4. (Gabriel stabbed.) Start on "Miserere" (same number as above) and play until finish of piece. Use cornet and violin on this.
5. At title: "Gates of Truth," play "Within the Gates" (sacred song pub. by Remick) as a cornet solo, once through.
6. As choir passes out, use organ. If no organ, I would suggest leaving the scene silent.
7. (After last of congregation has left church.) "O Salutaris Hostia," by John Wiegand. (Use arrangement in C, which is duet for soprano and alto. Violin carries soprano, cornet the alto. Once through and stop.)
8. Priest dies. Start at duet movement of "Salutaris" and play finish softly. Wait until title: "Broad Roar or Narrow Way."
9. Play "Pilgrim's Chorus" (not march) from "Tannhauser," in G, violin and piano, once through as written, then D. C., playing first 10 bars an octavo lower, then finish strain loco.
10. At title: "Truth Is Ever Elusive," play Chaminade's "Scarf Dance" (caprice style) once through, making repeats as written.
11. At Gate Scene, first strain of "Within the Gates."
12. Start Reel IV. with Hildreth's arrangement of "Lost Chord" (pub. by Jacobs) twice through, regardless of the dancing, and ut[illegible] introduction first time only.
13. At title: "Modesty," play "Heart's Sorrow" (piano solo), regardless of dancing, until Gabriel and Truth pass through gates.
14. Women discover Gabriel dead. Start at duet of "Salutaris" and play to finish.

You will notice that Mr. Bertram doesn't believe in continuous music, but has left several pauses between numbers in the above program. Such pauses can be made very effective if their reason for being lies in the action of the story and not simply because the musician has reached the end of the number and don't want to go back. No. 6 in above program is an illustration of a logical silence. Mr. Bertram evidently likes to keep his music rather subdued for which he deserves credit. There is nothing blatant about that program. To my mind there is a hint that he likes to finish some of his numbers diminuendo to pianissimo, and stop unperceptibly. This covers up the "stall" considerably when it is made for other than dramatic reasons.

What Do You Mean, "Pupil?"

This is a part of a letter sent to Mr. Sargent and passed on to me: "I should like to enlist your influence to prevent other sins such as we had to suffer from a misguided pupil(?) of perhaps your co-worker Clarence E. Sinn. This happened in one of the better class Los Angeles picture houses where they run the same film for a week. It was at the close of that remarkably fine production, 'On the Night Stage,' after Texas has removed forever the scandal menace from the life of the woman he loved and lost, and then is told unwittingly by the 'sky pilot' that he was a tribulation to the authorities and a nuisance to the community. He crossed to his horse, laid his cheek against that of his dumb pal and said in a leader: 'I have nobody in the world but you, Midnight; nobody but you.' The organist then 'holed out' with a beautiful 'put' by playing the chorus, 'I Need Sympathy' at a time when silence was golden. J. D. P."

Well, the organist lacks the sense of proportion along with other sense. What's the use of saying any more? No use. He'll do it again anyhow the first chance he gets.

Past Performances

IN racetrack parlance the kell known addage, "blood will tell," is quoted frequently in speaking of thoroughbreds. This also obtains in theatrical circles and in the silent drama branch, as exemplified in the Rising generation.

Phil Rising and Will S. Rising Jr., are chips off the old block, and judging from a program sent in from The Flatbush A. C. they are following in father's footsteps, as the well known actor-singer, Will S. Rising (Dean of M. P. Actors and Producers) is their dad.

Both sons are talented and possess good singing voices, and participate in many operas, dramas and comedies in the social life of the Cortelyou Club. They seem to be especially strong on minstrelsy, as per programme of B. P. O. Elks of Brooklyn Lodge No. 22.

Recently the minstrel show staged by Phil Rising for The Flatbush Baseball Club at Cortelyou Club was a tremendous success.

Another aphorism again creeps in, from "sire to son," as the mantle falls on them through their pop's varied career, for at one stage of his popularity he was a member of "The Moore and Burgess Minstrels" at St. James Hall in London.

Phil and Will are both of military training (ex-members of Seventh N. Y. N. G.), and Will Jr., is one of the crack buglers of the First Regimental Cavalry, Troop L. Both are football and baseball experts of Flatbush A. C.

On the maternal side their grandfather was Hon. Wm. C. Conner of Conner's Type Foundry, New York City, founded in 1828. On the paternal side their grandfather was Philip Rising of Lancaster, Ohio, a veteran of the Mexican War, and friend and neighbor of General William T. Sherman and General Phil Sheridan. Prior to his death he bought and gave to the city of Lancaster, O., "Standing Stone," or "Mount Pleasant," famed in Indian legends in the early days of Ohio, as the rendezvous for the Indian tribes of the East and West as they were driven westward by the encroachments of the palefaces.

The novel, "Forest Rose," was written around incidents connected with "Standing Stone," and was produced by the late C. J. Hite as a feature reel for the Thanhouser Co. It was here that the Indian tribes met and arranged for the battle which culminated in Braddock's defeat when George Washington was in command of a detachment of Virginia militia. "Standing Stone" was purchased by the philanthropic pioneer, Philip Rising, at a cost of $25,000, and donated to the "city he loved so well."

Ben Wilson (of Universal) and Geo. Botsford (Remick) are connected by marriage to Phil Rising.

Charles Bennett

ONE of the oldest of the West Coast photoplayers is returning to the East with the Biograph Company. It is nearly four years since Charles Bennett has worked before the camera in the East, he having come to California with the original Vitagraph Company in 1911. It was two years before that that Mr. Bennett left the stage and after in turn working with the Essanay, Vitagraph and Edison, joined the Vitagraph shortly before the organization of the Western company. He remained with Director Rollin Sturgeon for almost three years. In the first year he was in practically every cast, in characters, in heavy roles and all around interpretation.

Charles Bennett.

Mr. Bennett was with Keystone for five months. While there he appeared in "Tillie's Punctured Romance." He will be remembered as the uncle who fell down the mountainside in the snow, as well as for other adventures and misadventures in the course of that striking comedy. It was for the snow scenes that Mr. Bennett took a number of players to the summit of Mount Baldy, camping for nearly a week near the top. During his stay with the Keystone Mr. Bennett was working most of the time with Charles Chaplin. Since February Mr. Bennett has been at the Biograph studio. He will be seen in the forthcoming production of "Under Two Flags," in the role of the commander of the French soldiers.

Mr. Bennett's first engagement on the stage was with Edwin Booth, under the management of J. H. McVicker, Booth's father-in-law, at the Lyceum Theater, now the Fourteenth Street, in New York City. His next engagement was with the Broadway Theater stock company in support of Charles Fechter, the great romantic actor. Mr. Bennett has played with Clara Morris, Frederick Warde, Mary Anderson, Willie Collier and John Drew among others. He has at times worked under Dion Boucicault, A. M. Palmer and Augustin Daly, as he describes them, "America's greatest stage directors." Mr. Bennett has been associated with practically all of the great stars of the last generation. He has an impressive stage presence and a most pleasant personality. He also possesses a fine speaking voice, which, of course, the screen does not reveal. Mr. Bennett will make a strong addition to the Biograph stock company.

HEWITT ASSISTS JOHNSTONE.

Earl R. Hewett, who has been on the scenario staff of the western Universal plant, has been made assistant to Calder Johnstone, manager of that department.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

STORIES are frequently told of the reunion of long separated friends and relatives by motion pictures. The newspapers quite often tell of how a mother or sister in New York, through seeing the face of her son, daughter, brother, or sister, upon the screen in a motion picture theater, located the relative in some far distant city. We have yet to learn that the pictures have been of equal value in aiding wives to locate recreant husbands and the absence of such reports has been responsible for many looking upon the other stories with a belief that they are part of press agents' work to attract attention of the public to the pictures. However, it is a certainty that motion pictures have been instrumental in bringing about many reunions. One of the most interesting of recent cases, although the screen did not play a part in it, was the meeting of Capt. Jack Crawford, known as the poet-scout, and Leonard Grover, Sr., one of the oldest survivors in the American theatrical profession. The latter has been doing picture work occasionally for several years. Capt. Crawford only recently turned his attention to that field. In fact, he did not visit a motion picture studio until a few weeks ago. He has now become enthusiastic over the work and will soon be prominent in pictures. "If opportunity affords," he said the other day, "I think I will spend most of my remaining days in motion picture studios."

Reverting to the meeting, Capt. Jack, as he is better known, was making a sightseeing tour of a studio when a mutual friend introduced Mr. Grover to him. The introduction brought an expression of mingled surprise and pleasure to the old scout's face as he looked Mr. Grover over with critical eyes. For a few moments he stood speechless, retaining a firm grip of Mr. Grover's hand. The latter seemed in doubt as to how he should look upon the reception. "Pardon me," the poet-scout said finally, "but are you the Leonard Grover who managed a theater in Philadelphia years ago? Years have whitened your hair, wrinkled your face and bent your form, but the name is strikingly familiar." When Mr. Grover got a chance to make reply, he said: "So much time has elapsed that I had quite forgotten. Now that you mention it, I recall that I did manage the Chestnut Street theater. When, I cannot remember." Throwing his arms about Mr. Grover and giving him a most hearty embrace, Capt. Jack exclaimed, "God bless you, Grover! This meeting is indeed a pleasure to me. I'll tell you a story and refresh your recollection."

This is the story: "In 1863 I was on the Union side in the Civil War and was wounded at Spottsylvania. They took me to a hospital in Philadelphia. Upon my discharge I left the hospital on crutches and started on a tour of the city. One of the places that attracted my attention was your theater, although at the time I did not know it was such. I thought it was some meeting place, or public institution like Independence Hall. I hobbled into the lobby and was about to pass through the entrance to the auditorium when a man standing there stopped me and asked if I had a pass or a ticket. I cannot recall the conversation that followed, but I remember that you came from where you had been standing in the lobby and asked me who I was. Noticing my uniform and the crutches, you became interested in me, and after hearing my story invited me in to see the play. I asked what kind of a place it was and you replied that it was a theater. I retreated as well as my crutches would allow and said, 'A theater! No, no, my mother always warned me against such places. I have been taught that they are institutions of the devil. I have made a mistake. I dare not go in.' You took hold of my arm in a friendly manner and eventually overcame my scruples. You led the way into the theater and personally conducted me down the aisle to one of the best seats in the house. I remember my appearance, as that of all crippled soldiers in those days, attracted considerable attention. I am inclined to think, too, that your solicitude for my welfare may have had something to do with it. Do you remember what the play was? You don't? I do. It was 'Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp.' Effie Germon had the leading role. I never forgot one of the songs she sang. It is my favorite in tune and sentiment to this day. It was 'Beautiful Dreamer.' I think I must have made myself appear foolish in displaying my enthusiasm over that show. I was seventeen years old at that time, Grover; I am now sixty-nine. Just think of it! After a lapse of fifty-two years we meet again for the first time, yet both of us have been in the theatrical field for years."

"There is a sequel to my story, Grover. A few weeks ago I gave some of my recitations at a benefit held in the Actors' Home on Staten Island. I also told the dear old people there some of the incidents of my life and, singularly as it may seem, I told them the same story I have just told you. My object in doing so was to tell of the false impression I had of theaters in my early life and I told them that in view of the attitude of many people towards motion picture theaters, which they have never visited, it is not surprising that I, a boy, should be so impressed. I also spoke of Effie Germon and 'Beautiful Dreamer.' As I finished my last recitation and was leaving the platform a dear old lady met me in the aisle, threw her arms about me and wept as she rested her head upon my shoulder. It was Effie Germon, the 'Beautiful Dreamer' of my boyhood. And now, Grover, I meet you. I have been a staunch admirer of the screen pictures; I hope to become an enthusiastic worker in their production, and I shall never be able to adequately express my gratitude to them, in that it was through their agency that I have been permitted to again meet one who was so kind to me in one of the darkest periods of my life. Oh, say, Grover, I forgot one thing for which I again thank you; although I had few opportunities to use it, as I re-entered the war. As I left the theater you handed me a pass for the season." As the poet-scout who bears such a striking resemblance to Buffalo Bill in facial features and build started away, he again embraced Mr. Grover with unmistakable affection.

By the way, despite the fact that he is on the border of three score and ten in years, Capt. Jack can kick several inches above his head and can place the palms of both hands, not the tips of his fingers, upon the floor without the slightest bending of his knees. He is a remarkably well preserved man. He appeared in a Vitagraph production lately. It was a patriotic subject and the poet-scout was given latitude for expression of his patriotism. Standing with the national colors at his side he made a strikingly beautiful picture. Capt. Jack took occasion to criticise the song "I Did Not Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier." He declared that such sentiments aroused his indignation to a point that made his blood boil. "No mother, with a love of country in her heart, ever made such an expression," he said. "My mother loved me and raised me to be a man. When my country's call came, like all patriotic mothers, she let me become a soldier. To offset any effect the song I refer to may have I have composed one with the title, "My Mother Raised Me to Be a Soldier," and I intend to give it the widest publicity. I thank God that the moving pictures have given me an opportunity to start this ball of mine rolling. War is hell. I know it. I hope this country may always be able to avoid it, but dread of it must not be allowed to eat into the vitals of patriotism."

WORLD FILM ACTIVITIES.

Five of the greatest directors in the world are simultaneously working at World Film studios, Fort Lee, N. J., and elsewhere on five great productions which will shortly be seen on the screen. Maurice Tourneur is making "The Cub;" Albert Capellani, "The Imposter;" James Young, "Marrying Money;" Emile Chautard, "The Little Dutch Girl;" and Frank Crane, "The Stolen Voice."

Clara Kimball Young, Jose Collins, Vivian Martin, Robert Warwick, Martha Hedman, John Hines, Alec B. Francis, and Chester Barnett are the principal stars working in these pictures.

NAT C. GOODWIN IN "THE MASTER HAND."

Nat C. Goodwin has again succumbed to the picture, and will be starred in the Premo Film Corporation production of "The Master Hand," of which the production is already under way.

Assisting Mr. Goodwin in the cast are Claude Flemming, Theodore Babcock, Florence Malone and Catherine Lee.

STANTON DIRECTING A DETECTIVE STORY.

Richard Stanton is putting on a mysterious detective story, this week, at the studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. It is entitled "The Hammer" and has to do with the exoneration of a young illustrator, who is suspected of being guilty of a crime he did not commit. The scenario is by J. G. Hawks.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Booming a Special.

OVER here the Universal Company did a lot of extra work to help the Exhibitor realize "The Master Key" but George U. Stevenson, who used to run the Universal Weekly, but who is now in London for the company, built up on the original layout. Over in England the sales managers expect to give the Exhibitor more assistance. For years B. Nichols has been getting out specialties and others followed suit, but Mr. Stevenson has been doing some tall hustling for the Key. Of course the stamp books were used, and these were more popular there because the advertising stamp craze has not yet hit this country very hard. In addition they sold scarf pins and brooches in "gold" showing the master key; costing but three cents each and there were Master Key bracelets, which opened with a key, the girl getting the bracelet and the man the key on a souvenir night. There were celluloid buttons for the kiddies and paper key cut outs for straight advertising; puzzles, to be used in connection with prizes, free lantern slides, all sorts of cuts and suggested advertisements. It is about the most comprehensive layout of advertising that has been shown and proves that Mr. Stevenson is very much on the job, for he has added to the matter supplied from here just those features that the English market demands. That's the reason some men fail and others succeed when they open up a foreign market. Some work the home way and others adapt themselves. Mr. Stevenson even says that the "blocks" or "pierced," instead of mortised and offers a "bit" of copy.

An Intermittent.

The Jamestown (Ohio) Opera House sends in a one page sheet published occasionally. Manager Galvin writes that it is their first attempt gotten up in three hours, adding that "it may look like five minutes to you, sitting at a New York desk." It is "published occasionally," but Mr. Galvin seems to think he is going to get it out weekly.

Jamestown boasts only 1,100 population, but the first announcement is that of Lyman Howe and at the Lyman Howe prices. Did it ever occur to you that if Mr. Howe can get fifty cents for educational stuff that even in a small town a feature might be worth a quarter? But getting back to the opera house, the sheet is an eight by ten, three column affair printed on one side in semblance of a newspaper. It is all straight run eight point, a short chat about the house affairs with no display matter. It sounds the right note of friendliness and it will do the house more good, particularly as it seems to be a new venture in an old establishment, slightly run down, than would three times as much big type stuff. It is a good start and continued along the same lines should, in time, grow into a two or even a four pager and make some money through trade advertisements. This house chat stuff makes more friends than brag and boast in a small town.

On the Cards.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., explains that their black envelope recently commented upon in the department was to advertise the film of the same title. Just to prove that they have not quit work they send in four cards, three of them for "Who Pays" and another for another attraction. One is simply a large question mark and four circular cuts, giving also house, day and date. A third shows the devil playing on a malformed saxehorn. It is evident that they are keeping at it, which is the only way to do. The sister house in South Bethlehem seems to stick closely to posters and their well devised program.

A. V. P. Folder.

Joseph Forster, of the Globe theater, Brooklyn, sends in an eight-page folder, 2¼ by 5 inches. The front carries rather too much copy. It looks crowded and uncomfortable. It would be better to take some of the information over to the inside pages, as the front is too small to carry all adequately. Inside it is full, but not overcrowded, and there is a good proportion of small type to the large. It is not all display, and the types are not the culls of the bell-box. The best line comes in the house announcement and runs:

> We do not offer Prizes in money or any other so-called Premiums as an inducement for you to pay your money at the Box-Office. We offer Prizes in sound Dramatic principle and interest unflagging. The money that might have been spent upon Prizes (that nobody gets) has been put on productions and so
> EVERYBODY WINS.

It would be a good idea to underline the dated days with two point rule, to throw these up. Mostly they rise to the top of a page, but some do not, and all would look better if given this slight prominence. It is a useful little issue, but then Mr. Forster writes that he has been a student of this department and that means not merely a reader.

Both Sides Work.

"Value for both sides of your dime," is the slogan of the Princess theater, Orange, Texas, and "Prinsessize your idle moments" is another creation of Arthur Kent Watson, the advertising manager. Both are useful and can be adapted by others. He must have hit a snag, though, when he announced "That inevitable funniest of funny men." Mr. Chaplin seems to be inevitable these days, but we'll bet Mr. Watson meant to write "inimitable." He calls attention to the first of a series of "Common Sense Stuff," the first of which we reproduce.

> Say, Bo! we feel like we are not treating you right without telling you you can get an hour of solid enjoyment down at the cozy Princess theater every afternoon. Pa and Ma, Johnny and Mary are always welcome at our show. The man with the honest corns on his hands can while away an extremely pleasant hour, get a good rest up and profit by a little visit. YOU are just as welcome as anybody. There is nothing in the world to keep you away. Our pictures are always GOOD pictures. Our music is always GOOD music. Our breezes are always COOL breezes, and you don't have to hunt for them.
> Life is not life without the movies. We give you a chance to exercise your emotions. A good hearty laugh is the Lord's own medicine, and to weep at times comes in mighty handy. Our pictures afford both. The price is cheap as dirt and the pictures are as good as gold.

That "Say, Bo" is out of place. It is intended to start off the paragraph breezily and give an air of intimacy to the whole, but it is too cheap. The two words could have been dropped without hurt. It is to be questioned whether the allusion to the man with the corns is going to tickle him to the point of spending his dime. It sounds as though he was told: "You are apt to wear old clothes and smell of the livery stable, and perhaps you are ashamed to come to a nice place, but we don't mind, come along." And he is apt to remark he'll be durned if he'll come where he is permitted to enter as a favor. It sounds genial and welcoming if you read it in a hurry, but it will not sound that way to the man who is being reached after, and to others it may carry the suggestion that the audience is too miscellaneous. This personality stuff is apt to be loaded at both ends and should be handled with extreme care. It is very easy to give unintended offense. Some of the lines on the bills are much better. Mr. Watson confesses to being new on the job and we imagine that he will make good when he has learned a few more of the kinks, but if he ever again sends in a bill printed in yellow on white paper, we are going to advise him to shoot the printer. A throwaway should stand out. This does not.

From the Start.

The Strand theater, Fostoria, Ohio, sends in its first program issue with a request for suggestions. The only suggestion we can make that will count for much is that others who want a really pretty program will do well to beg a copy from M. A. Humble, the advertising manager.

It is in silk green on a light green stock, but the color will be changed with each issue to mark a distinction. The size is about four by six and three-quarters and the front is printed from a plate. This seems to be the case with the back, unless they have found a new type. It will please the Projection Department to know that the badge of the A. A. T. S. E. is run as a part of the decoration with the words "union operator."

Within the arrangement is very simple. After the heading the program runs for two weeks, day, date and title in twelve point bold italic and from three to five lines of description in eight point Roman. It is full to overflowing with type, yet the simplicity of the arrangement leaves it easy to read and inviting instead of repellant. It might be well to run the players in italic and run more names, but apart from this the form is too good to be changed.

We're for Mr. Russell.

Fletcher Russell, of the Windsor theater, Hampton, Iowa, sends this breezy note:

> I am enclosing my first herald. My printer says he ought to kill me for my bad spelling, and I tell him that my spelling is no worse than his composition, and to prove that my contention was correct, I am going to send you a copy for your opinion.
> I know you will balk at the Old English headline, but he thinks it is great for titles and the average man takes so much time figuring out what it spells that he can generally recognize it at a glance the next time he may see it.
> Spare neither of us. Go to it.

If the printer didn't like the spelling, he might have changed to a more accepted style, it would seem, and that is hardly an excuse for the way he lays his type, though Mr. Russell is partly to blame. For example, he sets a cut of Miss Pickford into a paragraph. He does not supply enough copy to go around the cut and naturally the stuff is double leaded and looks like what the printer probably said. When you run in a cut be certain that you supply enough copy to go around the cut. We are for Mr. Russell, but it would be a good plan for him to have a nice long talk with the printer and establish a modus vivendi, or something or other, that will bring about a better understanding. There are some things that printers cannot do. As a compromise, Mr. Russell should write more copy and then plan with the printer for a better display.

When Picture Theater Advertising is ready Mr. Russell can study up on the printer's end of it and argue on his own ground. Meantime we would recommend a smaller body type, two columns to the page, display advertising for the house and enough foreign advertising to pay the cost of the additional composition. In his letter Mr. Russell speaks of bad composition when he means that the type is badly laid out. Composition is the setting of the type; not the display of faces.

Mr. Russell may not know it, but he can write stuff of the sort that has character. No paste pot and shears for him. Look at this copy for the Hoosier Schoolmaster, after a formal introduction of Max Figman and the play:

> The production of the film version is thoroughly in keeping with the greatness of the subject, and the genial Max makes an ideal Hoosier. He has just the right kind of a nose for a Hoosier. Notice it in this picture. All Hoosiers have characteristic noses, and as Max was born in Indiana he can't help it. If you ever think about it at all, you would know him the minute you saw it. But, casting the nose aside (an uncomfortable thing to do) Max's genial smile will be seen here next Monday at the Windsor. Don't miss it.

Then take this about Carlyle Blackwell:

> You will all notice that Carlyle chooses leading ladies with raven locks to play opposite himself. His own hair is black, and according to all laws of psychology he should choose a light-haired maiden for a partner; but he has his own opinion about light-haired women. I believe he is scared of them, and in proof of this I have noticed that all the blondes seem to be partial to Carlyle and take particular pains to be here when he appears upon the screen, so to make it real easy to see him in "The Key to Yesterday."

Then notice this automobile copy:

> After we limber up the springs of the auto in the spring of the year and riding without a destination becomes more or less a bore, why not wind up your trip with a visit to the Windsor theater. Get here at 8.00 p. m. for the first show, or about 9.00 o'clock for the second. There is nothing that I myself dislike more than just "running around, running around" in aimless riding, but when I've some place to go, at a certain time, I enjoy trying to get there without a blowout. Try it. I bet you will notice an added zest and enjoyment to the ride.

If you've ever just "ridden around" for a few hours, you can sense the appeal of this paragraph. Mr. Russell should simply write more stuff and not worry about an occasional misspelled word. He doesn't have to when he can make his film announcements readable.

Arrested.

Paul Langheinrich, Jr., of the Burleigh theater, Milwaukee, sends in a red card, printed in black, the most prominent words on which are the name of the house and "Arrested," the text explaining that your attention is arrested for a few moments. The attraction is Traffic in Souls. The card is nicely balanced for type display and the lines are run to get this display for the proper sections. It is something of an art to get the right lines where they will get the right display and not crowd. Mr. Lengheinrich seems to think that the use of a sensational word as an attractor is new, wherein he is mistaken. It is common, but always good.

A Home-Made Souvenir Program.

Anees K. Maluf, of the Lion, Glasgow, Ky., sends in the program for his third anniversary. It is an eight-page with a cover, and Mr. Maluf set the type and printed the issue himself. In one point he fell down a little, and that is on the use of gold for the cover. It looks as though he had dusted the bronze on black ink instead of gold size and you have to hold it slantwise to get the effect. Next year he should use regular size and red or green bronze instead of lemon gold. Outside of that he has done a good job, and his little note of thanks is better, even, than his printing. A graceful act was a tribute to John Bunny, taking an entire page. He comments on the fact that a man choked to death on a piece of steak while hurrying through his meal to go to a picture show and suggests a Board of Steak Censors. It would be just as sane. Most of the text tells how hard he tries to get the best and how well he succeeds: the latter in a modest and becoming way. There have been more pretentious souvenirs for anniversaries, but none that breathes more truly the proper spirit.

Mr. Maluf is getting ambitious and going in for two-color work on his throwaways, but we've got a bet on with ourself that he did not print the paster cut on the front page. If he can make ready cuts with that skill he is entitled to a diploma.

From New Zealand.

E. Miles Samuel, who now and then favors us with a chat from Wellington, New Zealand, writes:

> Enclosed is a local picture show's advertisement from one of the daily papers. You will note that they give the musical program equal prominence with the films. The music put on is all high-class stuff and the orchestra fine.
> Programs here don't run to anything very artistic (see sample), the whole space being given over to advertisements, and the program squeezed in here and there as opportunity offers. This doubtless is a good proposition from the point of view of receipts, but vastly different from the artistically set-up work reproduced and described in your "Advertising for Exhibitors" columns.
> The following idea may or may not be new to you. As far as Wellington is concerned the idea is original. The Empress theatre here recently ran Keystone's "Sea Nymphs," featuring Roscoe Arbuckle and Mable Normand in diving stunts. In the entrance of their lobby they had on either side a painted wing representing the end of a jetty. From these projected spring boards (real ones) and on each was set up a life-sized figure of either of the artists painted in colors on tin. The effect of the figures, standing out from the scene on the end of the spring boards, was quite realistic and the novelty helped to good business.
> Despite the war, the picture business here seems to be be in a healthy condition.

Evidently the public (Mr. Samuel is not an exhibitor) is the same the world over and they feel the same about too much foreign advertising in a program as they do here. One program is apparently used on a circuit, for it is printed in blue with a red border, but the house imprint is done in black. Probably the films are run over the circuit locked and the same program, with various imprints, does for all, the same as a herald. It is a strip four by eleven inches and lists seven titles, the program running for an entire week. The same house, The King's, also runs a book program, the titles and musical selections running wherever it happened they did not want the space for some advertising. Including the front cover, the house gets 18 inches out of a possible 65, only twelve inches going to the announcements including the film and musical program. The Eagle's Mate carries eleven selections and the selection for each of the smaller subjects is announced. The newspaper clipping of the People's Picture palace carries six titles and thirteen selections. The music is piano, violin and cello, but it is given seventeen lines in the space, at space rates. "Down under" they have been taught that music is a part of the entertainment and not merely an accessory. Some day it may be the same way here.

The suggestion for the spring board cut out is a good one. It might also be utilized for the Kellermann picture, By the Sea, and other swimming stuff.

Mr. Samuels writes that Miss Sweet is still known as "Daphne Wayne," a name given her by B. Nichols when the Biograph would not divulge names, even in England, but that Miss Pickford is now known as herself and no longer as "Dorothy Nicholson."

In Defense.

Ben H. Weisberg, of the Ralph theater, Brooklyn, in commenting on our recent criticism of one of his house programs, writes:

> The remarks as to the type and too much on the front page were justified, BUT I ran such lines as "High Class Photoplays," and "Where the best people go," to meet the awful competition in this neighborhood and bring out the strong points. I am the only house in the neighborhood getting ten cents on Saturday and Sunday, but one of my opposition is giving a bigger show and killing business for five cents.

He still uses too much type for the front page, and if he wants to get the better class of business he will have to make his program so attractive that the ten-cent people will read it and come. To do this he will have to bid a fond farewell to those two lyres on the front, and he will have to content himself with a single front page announcement. He must make his program look like the program of a ten-cent house, and if he does, and runs the house the same way, he can get a ten-cent crowd. We don't live in Brooklyn, we just sleep there, but there is no part of the town where there are not people who prefer the ten-cent price. There are persons who do not care to mix with the five-cent crowd. These are not the people who want to read a crowded page of type. They must be appealed to through elegance and not wholly through black ink. To such "Ten cents—and WORTH it," will mean more than "High Class Photoplays." It will appeal to them. Mr. Weisberg runs the right sort of attractions to get that patronage, but he advertises a ten-cent show with a five-cent program.

The printer has given him a neater border, and he has moderated the display on the inside pages, but the front carries about 358 points of type in 507 points of room, not counting rule work. As a result the space is overcrowded and unattractive. The current issue sent carries two announcements, one for Charles Chaplin week and another for the Tuesday bill. Either would have been ample to fill the space without crowding.

Five-cent features hurt others than the exhibitors who use them, but it is almost always possible to get the ten-cent people interested if they are properly approached, but they must be given the sort of advertising they will read. It must be remembered that they are not, as a rule, confirmed fans. They will not trouble to puzzle over solid type. They must be caught quickly or not at all.

Try This.

From the Tampa Theater Review (and that Florida sheet is getting into tthe magazine class) we clip this item, credited to the Tampa Tribune in commenting on an item in the Jacksonville Dixie:

> Jacksonville Dixie: Some weeks ago Robert McNamee, editor and owner of Dixie, in an editorial said if he was a minister he would tell the congregation to meet him at a motion picture house Sunday afternoon, and that his sermon at night would be based on some feature seen in the picture. If ministers would do this they could get many novel ideas of intense interest which would result in great good. The church is a great moral institution and so are the motion picture houses. There has never been a motion picture exposed that was half as vulgar as "Rev.' Billy Sunday is in the pulpit. Human interest stories are cleanly presented at motion picture theaters and God should have mercy on the narrow soul that believes he is too pious to see the lessons on the screen. The religious people should make it a point to see the pictures every day and especially on Sundays.—Tampa Tribune.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Is This You?

EITHER more frank or more intelligent than most, a correspondent writes:

> I'll have to confess that I was green enough two years ago to enroll with a correspondence school, also in Chicago, for a course in scenario writing, and after being encouraged through a series of lessons, did my part toward enriching Uncle Sam's postal department, and making life miserable for the editors. I finally got hold of a copy of the Moving Picture World, and read some of your well-directed remarks about the would-be writer who never sells because he does not realize that he is not writing stories, but incident. At first it did not occur to me that these remarks could apply to me, and I enjoyed what I considered to be a good slam at the greatly inferior novices. Wish to say right now that the "Pipe" I was smoking at that time has GONE OUT. I am still reading the "World," studying the pictures, and people, and working for time when I know enough of both to turn out something worth submitting to an editor. I am not discouraged, but thoroughly alive to the fact that the writing of photoplays is a profession which must be as carefully and painstakingly studied for as any other, and not the child's play which the cleverly worded advertising of certain correspondence schools would lead one to believe.

We wonder how many there are who are still in the same position of enjoying the digs at the other fellow when they, themselves, are aimed at? A letter like this is a blessed relief from the whines of the writers who want a little encouragement or who complain that they are not given help. They are getting the best help they can receive if they are discouraged to the point of quitting. If they can be discouraged, they are not writers. They are merely people looking for some easy money and sore because they cannot find it and are told that they are foolish to look. If they really are writers they cannot be discouraged. If the writing of scripts were to be declared illegal, they would find a place of safety and go on writing anyhow. This department is not designed to hold the hands —or the head—of the weakling. It is not designed purely as polite reading for credulous fools who believe what they see in school advertisements. It is designed to help the manufacturers and exhibitors, who are the real supporters of this publication, by helping those who really deserve help and who can, in the end, make good for the effort by turning out better than the current stories. It is willing to help all who have the courage and ambition to keep up with the procession, but it is not, in any paragraph or line, designed to encourage the man who never can write and who is so little a writer that he can be discouraged by anything less emphatic than an axe.

We are not printing a paper of a hundred pages plus—mostly plus—to carry a two-page message to the man who knows he is writing better stuff than he sees on the screen. We are trying earnestly to help those whose intelligence permits them to get the message and to that end we are giving up two pages that might very comfortably be devoted to other matters were it not that this department, in the three years it has been running, has done much to assist in the development of many of those who now are either close to the top of the ladder or who are climbing rapidly.

We are preparing a staff of writers against the time when the original script will be imperatively demanded because the stock of available plays has become exhausted. We are training men and women for the production of one-part plays against the time that these come into their own again. We give encouragement to the deserving, but we are not going to sit down and slobber over every fretful child who wants someone to make a path just in front of them and clear even the pebbles as well as the rocks away.

See if some of the stuff you have been laughing at doesn't mean you. If it does, either grit your teeth and go to work or quit. If you are going to quit, the sooner you quit the better.

Not many remember "Coal Oil Johnny" and the rest of the suddenly enriched petroleum well owners. Not many can trace back to those golden days of the Pennsylvania oil fields. Most persons are familiar with the wonderful organization of the Standard Oil Company.

The situation in the motion picture end today is not wholly dissimilar. There are too many unqualified men and too few experts to ensure good pictures, just as the refined oil of fifty years ago bears small resemblance to the products of today. But the good refiners of that early period were well paid by the grinding trust, for the trust produced a better article at a cheaper price through centralization and concentration. The good script writer of today and the man in preparation, as well, will profit by the new era when it comes and find it worth while to work and wait. The others will never get anywhere, no matter what the conditions, so it does not matter when they quit.

Get informed as to yourself, and make up your mind. The correspondent quoted never commenced to learn until he realized how little he knew. Then he began to acquire real and useful knowledge, the first item of which was that he knew practically nothing.

Synopses Only.

Here is a new angle on the synopses only. It is by a well known staff man with many hits to his own credit. It is not written in a spirit of complaint but from an academic point of view:

> There are two women who consider themselves successful, I suppose, from whom we buy a large number of stories. One has stopped submitting action, and the action of the other is so poor that I throw it away and do it all over. She precedes every scene with a leader, and is the most careless person who ever tapped a type. These people get the credit for the stories on the screen. I don't mind from my own standpoint. I'm working for ———, not the public, but it is really unfair to other manufacturers who see the plays. They naturally think that the product is all from the author credited, and judge the writer accordingly, whereas the writer would hardly recognize her illegitimate child when she saw it on the screen.
> Miss ————, in some way, gets very good plot ideas. I don't think she is a real plot-founder, since many of them go "blooey" in important places, but they usually have good themes. It's up to me to put in the logic, and attach the tatting and herringbone stitch adornments. Now, here is a little more dope on my "unfair to mfgs." idea. Please read it through glasses of the proper color to eliminate any rays of self-esteem that may seem to be in it. I am writing from an abstract viewpoint.
> An outside writer sends in a synopsis that has the nucleus of a good story. I get it and go to work. By spraining every seam in my brain, I manage, maybe, to do a good job, with something that looks like artistic handling. I put into it what knowledge I have gained in eighteen years of writing, trying to make the story flow along; giving due time to proper development of dramatic situations; throwing in a retard element here and there to heighten suspense; carefully selecting leaders to suggest rather than tell the explanation when it is necessary, endeavoring to put the cut-ins in just the right place, and in just the words to give the greatest force to the speeches —in short, I lay myself out in a strong effort to produce as nearly perfect a piece of work as possible, and maybe I succeed, and the picture is a knock-out. Now what happens? It is released and some other manufacturer sees it. Maybe he doesn't know just what makes the picture good, but sees that it is. He might say to himself: "Fine! Muriel Oppenheimer Sonstonstall has certainly put up some picture. She ought to be writing for us. I'll get some of her scripts!" He does so, and because Muriel's picture, "The Sobbing Sponge," was so good, he thinks that what she sends him must be all right, and he tells his director to put it on just as it is written, because Mury knows what's what. It does go on, and is rotten.
> Maybe this would be impossible, because the mfg. would know that many things happen between the writing and the showing, and he might consider that. Suppose he does; he says: "The director who made the S. S. must be great, too, to produce such a picture as that. I'll get him to do Muriel's pictures (having put Muriel on salary), and he does. Still Muriel's dope is rotten, and maybe, in the course of time, the mfg. has discovered that little Eddie Smith rewrote Muriel's story and made it what it was. He tries to get Eddie, perhaps, but in the meanwhile, Ed has died of overwork, and all the mfg. can do is to send a belated violet for his bier. Also, in the meanwhile, the mfg. has spent a few cents on Muriel.
> Maybe this couldn't happen either, but it is conceivable that Muriel might get a job on the strength of what she has had released, when really, little Ed has made her reputation for her.

This picture is not in the least overdrawn. We know intimately the work of the Miss Blank mentioned. We know that it "goes blooey" in spots because she does not write action and so cannot see how the action is worked out. Three studios take much of her work and put it out with her name on it. She ranks as an author and yet she could not write a play were she offered a thousand dollars a reel for stuff that could go from her paper to the screen. There are many others in the same position and the synopsis only idea encourages this slipshod, shoddy work and continues the deception. It does not seem fair. It is not encouraging to those who work for the better end, but the tipsters will gain no lasting success, for they will not and cannot make progress. It is not worth worrying about, but this new viewpoint is interesting.

Mechanics.

"Then, if never before, you will agree that photoplay writing is NOT a gift, but a TRADE."

This is taken from a recent circular issued by the A. W. Thomas school. Mr. Thomas has something to sell and in order to sell the largest possible quantity, he gives utterance to this downright and deliberate misstatement of fact. He prostitutes an art to the dollar of his victims. The chief objection to the school is not so much that it swindles its pupils by taking their money without giving adequate return. If it were merely that, it would be a matter between the school, the credulous and the Post Office Inspectors. The real objection to the school is that in its feverish pursuit of the money profits, it spreads broadcast an erroneous impression of the entire matter. It is not that this school or that takes the money of the widow and the clown. It is not that, as in one authentic case, a woman may half starve herself for weeks to get together the money that will open to her an income of fifty or one hundred dollars a week. That aspect of the case is bad enough in all truth, but there is a more serious side.

The intelligent writer knows that the schools are fraudulent and purchases text books instead of the same instruction disguised as a "course." The money for these schools must come from the ignorant and uninformed. To get it, lies must be told that react upon the entire body of authors.

And now comes Mr. Thomas with the statement that photoplay writing is a trade and not a gift. In other words any person can learn the "trade." The statement that "anybody can write plays" has been hurtful in the extreme, but this is more specific and therefore more vicious.

In spite of all that has been said and written, the bulk of studio submissions still come from the uninitiate, the man or woman who has been told that anybody can write and who therefore write what they suppose to be plays and keep on writing until their patience or their postal fund is exhausted. Fully ninety-five out of every hundred plays sent any studio are utterly worthless. They are written by persons with untrained imaginations or who utterly lack the proper quality of imagination. One play in every twenty is probably worth consideration, but an editor, tired of reading rot, becomes disgusted, turns them all back and gives an order to a writer known to be able. The schools, to a very large degee, prevent the progress of the qualified because they are largely—if not wholly—responsible for the bulk of the submissions, either through their teachings or their advertising.

Editors are supposed to read all scripts, selecting the good. But there is not an editor who does not pass over some good material simply because his brain has lost its fine selective faculty for the moment through a perusal of so many bad scripts. The habitual smoker who ordinarily can afford nothing beter than a five cent grade of cigar cannot fully appreciate the excellence of a fifty cent Havana and a ten cent cigar may even seem to be poor because its flavor is rather more delicate than the coarser leaf. It is the same way with scripts. An editor reads until all seems poor and only the most remarkable story will appear in the least attractive, and this will not be read with full appreciation.

Mr. Thomas has at least enriched the language. He has given to us the "trade script;" the product of the laborer rather than the artist, an exact classification we have hitherto lacked.

For the Tired Feeling.

For the tired feeling that comes when you drop on plot, try the homeopathic treatment and cure like with like. Read plots to get in the plotting habit again, but do not plot the plots you have read. This is particularly good when your failure to plot is due to the fact that you have not been writing for a time. You get out of the plot habit and to get back you must either evolve plots until you improve to your regular standard or read the plots of others. Plots in some fashion are necessary. The reading of printed plots saves time. If you have to stop work to do something else for a time, you are almost certain to find that you must get back into the habit. You cannot start right in and do work of your usual grade; you must work up to that.

Certainly Not.

A correspondent wants to know if the fact that he is a Canadian makes any difference in his chances. Since he uses the United States return stamps, it does not. He is moved to ask this seemingly foolish question because his sole acceptance followed its submission through a staff writer. It was the staff writer and not the point of submission that made the difference. It is for this reason that we recommend repeated submissions to a company and consentration, in initial submission, on the few that seem most apt to be able to use the style an author writes. It is necessary to first get the editor familiar with the name before much success may be hoped for. He reads so much piffle that his discrimination becomes blunted, and it is necessary to work for a cumulative effect.

Technique.

Coincidences sometimes happen and in a recent mail came three belated letters. Awo of these were savage denunciations of the scheme of employing staff writers to the hurt of the free lance. The other was from an editor who but lately climbed over the fence. He writes:

> Another thing I would like to suggest to you personally is that while I have always been in favor of open markets for outside contributions, I can see now the justness of the position of many companies, for we are receiving daily scripts in all forms imaginable written in lead pencil on sheet block paper and wrapping paper and many, too crude in form, for description, showing that the first principals of submission have not been learned.

And the same week a producer explained that he used the work of a writer known to him because this man turned in a script handled in the precise manner the director liked. He could put the script in work at once. He did not have to rest his company for a day or two while he laberod to get a promising idea into technical form.

It is the idea that sells, but this idea MUST be given proper expression in technique. If the salary list is three hundred dollars a week and two days are lost in licking an idea into shape, one hundred dollars are lost to utilize a ten dollar idea instead of paying for a proper script.

The man who writes in fairly good form can only keep on writing and hoping. It is not the staff writer who makes business bad for the free lance. It is the boob writer who clutters the mail with his monstrosities who forces the editor and directors to turn to the man who has learned his business.

Polishing.

Since the premiere of Pinafore we have known that Sir Joseph Porter became an Admiral through his industry in polishing up the handle of the big front door, but probably even at that he used a little judgment and did not polish so industriously that he wore the handle down to a button.

It is the same way with scripts. There is a tendency to polish to the point of extinction. The script becomes very nearly perfect technically; every bust and leader and insert is just right, but the soul of the story has been polished out of the script through this refinement of technique. The proper time to polish a story is when it is still in the plot stage. Build up the plot and then, when the story goes on paper, give it good technical form and rest content with that. Learn to write good technique and then you'll need only to polish the plot, and do this before you express it in action.

Designating Scenes.

An author has a chase series of scenes. Jim, in a rowboat, is pursued. The chase leads to the shore, where Jim is captured. He uses "Boat 1" and "Boat 2" to designate the scenes, but he feels that something is wrong, and asks light. He adds an extract from his scene plot. Here are the scenes:

1—Open sea—Boat 1 comes in—Jim rests on his oars—registered that he is pursued—rows on.

2—Open sea—Boat 2 in pursuit of Jim.

3—Boat 1—Jim rowing.

4—Boat 2—They row through scene.

5—Boat—Jim among the rocks of the shore—Boat 2 comes in—he is captured.

In the scene plot he gives—

Boat 2— 2—4.

If the scene plotting were correct, he should have added No. 5 for boat 2 since that also appears in five. But as a matter of fact there are four distinct scenes in the open sea, each one number apiece, and one on the coast, so the scene plot should read—

And the action should first designate the set or location and then the action. The first four are all "open sea," but the action tells whether it is the boat with Jim or with his pursuer, so it is not necessary to number the boats.

In writing scenes give first the number of the scene. Then tell what the set is. Then tell if the set has been used before, if such is the case, then tell the action in the set for that scene. If scenes are very similar, then letter them or give them Roman numerals. Say that scene three in the above is "Open sea C." or "Open sea III." to distinguish this from other scenes in about the same set. In the same way, if there were several scenes on a rocky coast, they would be "Rocky coast E." or "Rocky coast V." as might be required. The director would then know that coast E. was different from coast D. and shift the camera.

We Have, Indeed.

From the Bronx an author writes:

> Have you noticed or does it ever happen, in working up a story from the plot germ, that the final production does not contain the germ with which you started, that the original idea from which the story has been written is lost in working up the plot?
> I have just completed a rough synopsis, rewritten several times, from which I am going to write a play and on looking it over carefully was surprised to find that the idea from which I thought I was writing was not even contained in the story.

We have indeed noticed that self-same thing. For that matter we have used the same germ to start many more than a single story, each time putting the germ back in the culture tube to wait for the next time. All good writers know that the story may be bigger than the idea that suggested it, and when the novice finds this out it's generally a sign that he is doing very nicely, thank you, so the man from the Bronx can buy himself a cocktail that made that Borough famous and be rejoiced.

On the other hand if you are still at the point where everything revolves about the first layout and you have to use this in every revision, you are still in a parlous state. Nothing hampers a writer more than lack of a free and unrestricted imagination.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed, or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 91.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear on the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What are the effects of high amperage and low amperage as applied to the crater, and what are the objections to using very high D. C. amperage, say in excess of 45? What A. C. amperage would, in your judgment, be required to equal a 45 ampere D. C. illumination of the screen? What is the approximate temperature of a 45 ampere D. C. crater?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 85.

Again the Roll of Honor is short. It consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; P. Reg. Dey, Brandon, Manitoba; John Solar, Watertown, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas, and F. V. Poyser, Brandon, Manitoba.

I have selected the reply of Brother Larmour for the reason that it covers the ground, tells the story and does not waste any words. Some of the others were almost equally as good, particularly that of Friend Dey, but the explanation was no more clear, and consumed nearly twice the space. This would not matter except in a case where two replies were of practically equal merit in other respects.

Answer to Question No. 85.

By W. M. Larmour, Waco, Texas.

The Question: What would be the effect on the screen if you took off the rheostat casing and, with the arc burning, using a piece of asbestos as a shield for your hand, grabbed a handful of the coils and squeezed them together in a bunch? What would be the effect on the fuses? Supposing one of your fuses blew; you put in another and it blows immediately. Tell me, in detail, exactly how you would proceed to locate the trouble.

The Answer: This would short the wire coils squeezed together, cut down the resistance of the rheostat and, if there were enough shorted, blow a fuse, which would, of course, cut out the light on the screen. If the coils not disturbed had enough resistance to keep the current within the capacity of the fuses, then the above described action would, by decreasing the resistance, increase the amperage and make the picture brighter.

If the fuses blew I would first ascertain that the line was not overloaded, and the fuses were the right size. I would then give the entire circuit from the blown fuse to the arc a careful examination, in an endeavor to locate any faults there might be such as a ground or short. If unsuccessful, I would disconnect the wires from the fuses and, with a test lamp or bell and battery, test the circuit for a ground or short. If the ground or short was present I would then move to some convenient place near the middle of the circuit and, after disconnecting the wires, test both halves separately. I would then proceed as before with the section found to be grounded or shorted. This process of elimination can be continued until the individual rheostat, lamp, apparatus or section of wiring causing the trouble is found.

A Fool There Was.

This department has, for almost six years, contended for better operating room conditions and better salaries for operators. It has based this contention on the proposition that knowledge and high-grade skill on the part of the operator are absolutely essential to high-class projection. There can be no manner of doubt but that the work of this department along these lines has convinced many managers of this fact, and has caused thousands of others to at least give the matter serious consideration.

I have taken this stand because I am, and have been firmly convinced that it was the only right stand, and that the moving picture art, when all other things are considered, depends after all for its final success on the excellence of projection, and that excellence of projection is impossible or at least highly improbable except where the projection is in the hands of a high-class operator, possessed of both knowledge and skill in his chosen profession or trade. I have based my contention for better operating room conditions and better salaries for operators on the proposition that it required brains to properly project a moving picture, and that knowledge, skill and brains can only be had where adequate salaries are paid.

This for years has been my position, and I may say that that position has been maintained against pretty heavy opposition from a good many directions. It is still my position, and will continue to be, but it is a rather discouraging thing to see operators themselves dealing sledge-hammer blows at this particular proposition after the following fashion: Time, time and time again I have gone into operating rooms, even where the operator was paid a fairly good salary, and found him attending to anything under the sun but his projection. I have seen him actually, where a motor drive and arc controller were used, not even look at the screen for at least two or three consecutive minutes, and I may say that very seldom have I gone into an operating room where these appliances are used (and I heartily approve of their use, too, because they are in themselves excellent) and found the operator at his post in front of the observation port where he ought to be, with his hand on the speed controller, projecting his picture in the best possible manner.

Now, gentlemen, what do you think is the effect on the mind of the manager when you demand high salaries and he knows that about all you do is thread up the machine and adjust the light at the beginning of the reel? What position are you placing yourself in when you wander around the operating room like a lost sheep while the arc controller and motor project the picture, and the manager stands there and watches you do it, or at least knows that you do do it? Can you blame the manager when you ask him for forty dollars a week if he makes a pointed inquiry as to what you are doing to earn that forty? To me these things are discouraging. Not very long ago I went into a high-class theater and, unknown to the operator, stood for half an hour in a position where I could watch him and the projection. He had a motor drive and arc controller and out of that half hour I venture the assertion he did not spend five minutes looking through the observation port, and did not spend ten minutes beside his machine, and during all that time I will take oath he did not touch the speed control of either projector once, notwithstanding the fact that the last half of one film was run too slow, and practically all of the next film too fast for the best effect. When I finally stepped into the operating room this man actually had the gall to swell up, and, in a tone of very evident pride, ask me "what I thought of his projection." Believe me, I told him! And I told him good and plain, too. True, the screen illumination was even, for the arc controller took care of that end of it, but the speed was bad, and most emphatically if the manager stood there and watched that operator he would not gain the impression that he was doing anything which by any stretch of the imagination be termed worthy of high salary. On the other hand, had he remained at the observation port, watched his picture and governed his speed, the manager could have no such criticism to make.

It is quite true that by thorough organization operators may succeed in raising salaries considerable in excess of what they are now, but if they want to get really good salaries they will have to wake up, attend to business, and let no opportunity slip to impress upon managers that fact, that there is something more about projection than threading the machine, setting the arc, and then turning your back on the whole proposition.

Think it over, gentlemen, and remember the old saying that "God helps those who help themselves," to which I might presume to add the statement that he is not very good to those who do not.

New Local.

M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida, writes:

> A local was organized here January 1, 1914, and is getting along fine. Its officers are Frank Farrell, president; Douglas Blount, vice-president, and David M. Brown, secretary and treasurer.

My compliments to the new local. May it have a long and prosperous career and accomplish much good for the Tampa men.

High Voltage.

John Beck, Hutchinson, Kansas, says:

> We are having some trouble as follows: In our Amusement Park we have A. C., which I don't like at all, and 550 D. C. from the trolley line, which we are using through a No. 9 iron wire rheostat. The throw is 125 feet, with a 16-foot picture. Results are not as satisfactory as we desire. In fact, not as good as in the uptown houses, where projection is excellent. Will it be practical to secure as good results from the 550 as from the 110 D. C.? If so, I wish you would line the matter out for me. If no other complications arise would prefer to use high amperage, as the juice is free and I want brilliancy on the screen, which is non-reflective. Am not using ¾-inch above and ⅝ below, both cored; pulling 40 amperes. The arc burns all right for a time, and then seems to go mad, and runs around and up and down the carbons before it settles down again, which makes bad spots in the picture.

I do not know, Brother Beck, positively, just what the answer to this is. It has been many years since I projected a picture with 550 volt current, and then only occasionally on one-night stands. I think, however, your trouble lies in the fact that you don't watch your arc closely enough. I am not sure, but should imagine the thing would work about as follows: As the carbons burn away and the arc gap becomes longer the voltage rises, and I think that when using 550 volts a comparatively slight difference in arc length would make a big difference in arc voltage, and that this is the secret of the thing. The arc burns all right when it is normal in length, but as soon as it gets a little long the arc voltage rises and has such value that it forces the arc out of the crater and to form on spots on the carbon which happens, for some reason or other, to offer low conductivity. Now, mind you, old man, this is only a guess, but even so I think you will find it is right.

There is no reason, so far as I know, why you could not use any amperage you want to. You could cut in a second rheostat, and use 80 amperes as they do at the "Strand" here in New York, but you would then have a very large crater and you would then need your lens system matched up carefully. Send me the exact diameter of the objective lens, the exact distance from the surface of the rear lens of the objective to the film, and the amperage you are using, and I will tell you the condensing lenses you want, and the distance from condenser to lamphouse. For high amperage, however, you will need an objective of comparative large diameter, say, not less than 1½ or 1¾ inches—meaning by "high amperage" 75 to 80.

I. A. Men Read This.

A gentleman who is intimately connected with the business and whose part in the affairs of picturedom brings him into intimate connection with operators, and causes him to visit operating rooms in various sections of the country, sent the editor a personal letter, some portions of which I feel should be printed. He says:

> During my wanderings through the country I have been watching, with much pleasure, the good work of your department. I have particularly noted its effect on operators and can say that invariably I find the department and Handbook used most in towns where we find the better class of operating rooms, better class of operators and better projection. Incidentally, I might also say I find the department to apparently have a decided influence in inclining the men toward organization—a thing I am myself a firm believer in.

This letter was not written for publication, and I suppose that, in all human probability, the writer will kick like a bay steer because I have used any portion of it. However, I am going to take a chance of incurring his displeasure.

Its writer bears testimony to the correctness of the position of this department both when he says he finds it most in use in towns where he finds better conditions, better operators and better projection. This means in other words that the better or higher class operators are the ones who most appreciate the department. I wonder if those who have voiced a desire for the suppression of the Handbook and department really ever stopped to think what their idea means when put into concise terms. It is just this: "With the department and Handbook out of existence we would not have to study and could slip along in the same old rut without much of any exertion." Put in another form, opposition of unions to the department and Handbook simply means: "D——m that fellow Richardson anyway! He compels us to get busy and improve our knoweldge in order to keep ahead of the non-union 'gink.' If we could squelch him we would not have to do that." Of course, that is not a nice way of putting it, but it covers the real facts, nevertheless.

The Right Spirit.

Recently I visited J. H. Genter, manufacturer of the mirroroide screen, and remained two days. While there many topics of conversation were, of course, engaged in, and among other things I expressed a wish for one or two things, of comparatively small value, which we spoke of. After my return Friend Genter and his good frau sent me these things as a present. I at once wrote Genter and told him that while I fully appreciated the fact that the act was one of pure friendship and without the least shadow of ulterior design (knowing Genter as I do I can safely say that is an exact fact) still the acceptance of favors of this kind, even though the intent be the best in the world, might at some future date place me in an embarrassing position, because the time might come when the situation will be such that I would consider other screen surfaces as superior to mirroroide, and that under those conditions the fact that I had accepted a present, even though of small value, would naturally make my duty harder to perform since I would be compelled to set forth the facts as I saw them. To this Brother Genter promptly replied:

> You know very well I would not do anything to place you in an embarrassing position. You are following the right line in your work and should by all means continue to do so. There are a great many good and honest people in this world, and, naturally, if these people are manufacturers, and "produce the goods," they deserve credit in proportion to the worth of their product. I have a spirit of friendship for all men who use the proper judgment, and express a candid opinion of things as they find them, and I certainly have the highest feeling of friendship for yourself and other individual members of the staff of the Moving Picture World. I fully appreciate the position you are placed in, and you deserve great credit for your appreciation of that position, and your honest and above board method of conducting your department. And right now let it be understood, once and for all, that if in the future you should knock the very life out of mirroroide I would take it good naturedly, for if the time comes when I cannot produce a screen surface the equal of any screen manufactured then it will be time for me to quit business.

This is the right spirit and I most heartily wish that all manufacturers viewed things from Genter's standpoint. I know Genter well enough to be certain he means exactly what he says. His policy is the kind that will win out in the long run. The man who says: "If any goods are not equal to, or, better than those of my competitors it is time for me to go out out of business," views matters from the right standpoint. He has the right idea.

You may think it strange that I have put this matter into print. Well it does look queer, but there are those who I think will have a pretty good idea of my reasons when they read it.

N. I. Cement.

A. B. Neeb, pathologist, Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, Sanatorium, Mt. McGregor, New York, says:

> If you deem the following worthy of publication in the projection department of the Moving Picture World, it is my pleasure to submit it. Having, on several occasions, had difficulty in obtaining a cement suitable for the repairing of non-inflammable films, I tried to make one, and discovered that by adding one part of glacial acetic acid to four parts of flexible collodion, or to any of the film cements, a very satisfactory cement either for the N. I. or regular film is produced.

We are obliged to Friend Neeb for the information. Its publication is the best answer as to its value.

Day and Night Screen.

Recently the head of the concern making the Day and Night Screen called at my office and submitted samples of the various scren surfaces used.

I expressed a decided doubt as to the effect of using such a smooth surface. The Day and Night Screen is made of tin foil, pasted and pressed on a cloth backing, and covered with a light coating of celluloid. The surface of some of the samples was quite smooth, and it seemed to me there might be distortion, haze, and that there certainly would be trouble the moment you viewed the picture from an angle. Since that time, however, I have visited several theatres using the Day and Night Screen, and have made a careful test, viewing the screen from all possible positions, both straight in front, at all the different possible side angles, and from a very high gallery. I was surprised. From a seat in a box the picture, while not as sharp as further back, was very good. From a seat down front within fifteen to twenty feet of the screen the definition was certainly as good as any I have ever seen on any screen at a similar distance. The brightest picture was viewed from straight in front, but there was but comparatively little loss of light at the various angles, and, taking these various things into consideration, I am prepared to do the same with the Day and Night Screen I did with the Mirroroide, viz.: Give it the endorsement of this department, qualified only by the fact that time has not yet fully demonstrated the lasting quality of the surface. However, the Day and Night has been in use near the ocean front, where conditions are perhaps as bad as would be found anywhere, for considerable periods of time and there has been no apparent deterioration of the surface. As to lasting qualities of the surface, in any event, the purchaser has only to secure the proper guarantee from the manufacturer. The surface is thoroughly waterproof and may be wiped off or washed; the back is not waterproof, and I believe the addition of waterproofing to the cloth at the back would lessen any possible danger of the tin foil loosening from the fabric in the course of time. Understand I don't know that it would ever do it anyhow, and, as a matter of fact, it has not done it where the screens have been used at the ocean front where the air is very moist.

Travel Ghost.

D. C. Clark, Mulberry, Indiana, says:

> Am running a Powers Five on A. C. two nights a week. Take current through a compensare. Get a good light and a good picture except in titles, which are streaked. Is this caused by the shutter? Have just put new bevel gears on shutter, and it has absolutely no lost motion; also new star and intermittent, which are in fine working order.

According to your description your trouble is due to travel ghost. Is the effect only present when the carriage is clear up or clear down? When the framing carriage of the Powers Five is in either extreme there will be slight travel ghost, but there should be none when it is in the central position. If there is, and the streaks are only in one direction, the shutter needs setting; if in both directions the shutter is too narrow, but the latter is an impossibility with the Powers Five, unless the shutter has been changed.

150 Per Cent. Better.

Vernon Kidd, Victoria, British Columbia, says:

> I received the question booklets and when I get the answers worked out I will be about 150% better than 0. I cannot say enough in favor of the questions. If an operator once gets started he will soon get the habit, and it will be study, study, and then some more study, but it won't end there for he will have acquired the habit of studying, and a habit is a mighty hard thing to get rid of.

All of which is eminently correct. The habit of study is a mighty good one, and if these questions induce men to form that habit they will have done wonders.

New Speed Controller.

For some time past the editor has been waiting patiently for the Precision Machine Company to get ready to let him spring, on an unsuspecting public, something that looked good. That "something" being their new variable speed controller, the invention of Mr. Frank Cannock of the Precision Machine Company.

Frank Cannock is a mechanical genius; also outside of the fact that he is a darned crank, and a few other little things like that, he is a pretty good scout, and certainly we have got to remove our chapeaux and make a deep bow to his accomplishment along the line of projector inventions.

The new speed controller, designed for use on Simplex machines and which can be readily applied to any model of that projector, is, I believe, a thoroughly efficient and excellent device of its kind. It will give an almost limitless number of graduations of speed, and the operator of the future who uses it certainly will have no excuse for failure to properly govern the speed of his picture. The device has been given a very thorough breakdown test in the factory, and also has been tested for thirty days in one of New York's largest theaters. It has withstood both the breakdown and the practical test without showing any signs of weakness.

The controller is simple in construction, and has but few wearing parts. All parts are interchangeable, that is to say, if a part wears out, or breaks, you can order a new one with the assurance that it will fit. There are no adjustments to make, either, when installing the controller or afterwards. It does not matter at what angle the machine is placed, the controller always remains in the same relative position to the mechanism, and altering the angle of the machine or the rotation of the machine on the pedestal does not in any way affect the controller. To install you loosen up the set screw which holds the motor drive pulley shaft in the lug on the base of the mechanism frame. You then insert the driving shaft of the speed control, which has the small gear on it, in the hole in the lug, being sure to mesh the gear on the shaft of the speed control with the main driving gear on the mechanism. When this adjustment is made the set screw should again be tightened up. At the same time the idler pulley shaft on the pedestal fits into the opening on the right of the speed control, and is held there with knurled-head screw from underneath. However, complete directions for installing the device will accompany the same, therefore it is unnecessary to go into details of installation here.

The device operates essentially as follows: R-152-X, Fig. 1, is a steel bar ½ inch square, which is rigidly attached to the casting carrying wheel X-11, Fig. 2, and disc wheels D-110-X and X-7, Fig. 1. Please get this fixed in your mind that all these parts, including X-11, F-116-X, spring S-470-X and the shaft they are carried on, are attached rigidly to this bar. Part X-3, carrying the end idler belt pulley P-248-X is also rigidly attached to bar R-152-X, Fig. 1. On the other hand part F-115-X, Fig. 2, carrying the other idler belt pulley P-248-X, Fig. 1, friction wheel X-8, Figs. 1 and 2, and its shaft, adjusting wheel X-9 and its shaft and spring S-471-X, Fig. 2, slide on the square bar, the movement being governed by regulating wheel X-9.

Now stop right there and get all that firmly fixed in your mind. It means that the device consists of two main set of parts, one being attached to either end of the bar, and the other, carried by F-115-X, Fig. 2, sliding, as a whole, on the bar.

Now look at Fig. 1, carefully. Friction wheel D-110-X is attached to a shaft which you can see between the two discs X-7 and D-110-X. This shaft is a continuous one. It extends through and at its proper location, F-116-X, is fastened to it by means of a set screw.

Disc wheel X-7, Fig 1, on the other hand, is attached to this shaft, around which D-110-X revolves, and the shaft extends through a spring S-470-X, upon the end of which are two nuts, N-136-X.

Now, if you study this for a moment, you will see that F-116-X, being attached to the shaft carrying D-110-X when the nuts N-136-X are screwed up, this compression on spring S-470-X has the effect of bringing the two disc wheels D-110-X and X-7 together, and they will be held together with a pressure proportionate to the pressure exerted by the spring. These revolving parts are attached to the belt wheel X-11, Fig. 2, by means of two cast extensions on the side of the belt wheel, one of which is indicated at X-11, Fig. 1.

The shaft to which is attached disc wheel forming assembly X-7,

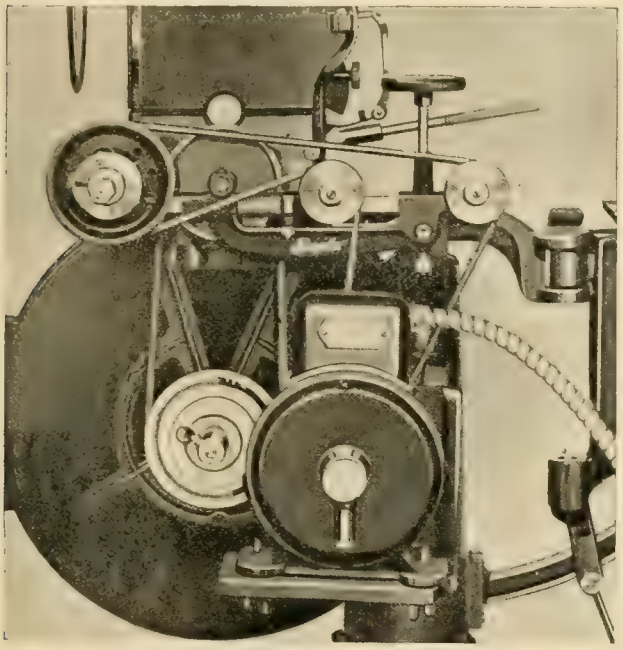

Fig. 1, is held in synchronism as regards its revolutions with the whole assembly X-11, including the belt pulley and bushing. Assembly X-7, which includes the disc and the shaft serves as a bearing for the friction disc D-110-X which revolves in the bushing indicated by C-141-X. F-116-X, bear in mind, is also fastened to the shaft by means of the set screw as stated above, therefore, as belt pulley indicated by X-11 is keyed to this part, it is held in synchronism as regards its revolutions with friction disc X-7, also fastened to the shaft.

D-110-X, while it is assembled loose on the shaft, also revolves with X-7 and X-11 and is always carried along, being engaged with disc X-8. C-141-X is an oil hole. S-464 is a screw by means of which this assemblage is attached to crank bar R-152-X.

And, now we will take another step in the explanation. Examining first Fig. 2, and then Fig. 1, you will observe that from what has already been said, and with the further explanation that shaft X-9, Fig. 2, has a gear on its end which engages with the rack on side of bar R-152, when adjusting wheel X-9, Fig. 1, is turned in one direction, F-115-X will move toward or away from disc wheels X-7 and D-110-X, and since it carries with it friction wheel X-8 if it moves towards these wheels X-8 will be thrust further between them. Now disc wheels X-7 and D-110-X both have a crowned face, therefore the driving point will always be at a point at the outer rim of X-8, and as X-8 is thrust further between the disc wheels if disc wheels X-7 and D-110-X are driven by the motor at a uniform rate of speed any alteration of the distance of contact between them and X-8 from the center of these two wheels, will instantly change the speed of X-8, and, consequently, of the projector to which X-8 is attached by the pinion shown on its shaft.

The method of attachment to the machine is shown in Fig. 3. Spring S-471-X, Fig. 2, is merely to provide tension to the belt. The belt is made of such length that when it is in place inter-pulley P-248-X, Fig. 1, will be thrust back and spring S-471-X compressed.

I know all this is a little bit complicated, but I believe that with the excellent illustrations presented you will be able to dope it out, and understand it fairly well.

CAUTION. Operators must see to it that no oil is placed on the friction surfaces of X-8, X-7 and D-110-X. These surfaces must be kept perfectly dry.

At first I was inclined to criticise the position of control wheel X-9. The manufacturer, however, called my attention to the fact that placed as it was it was not only easy of access from either side of the machine, but in addition to that it furnished a most convenient rest for the operator's hand in framing; all of which is perfectly correct.

The operator can alter the tension of spring S-470-X at will by changing the position of nuts N-136-X, but no more tension should be supplied than barely sufficient to prevent any slippage between the friction wheels. Anything in excess of this would mean unnecessary wear of the parts.

This device has the unqualified approval and endorsement of this department.

Not later than June 15th all Simplex machines will be so equipped.

Minusa Gold Fibre Screen.

Recently Mr. Nat Brown, vice-president and director of sales, representative of the Minusa Cine Products Company, St. Louis, Mo., called on the editor and, in the vernacular of trade, displayed his wares.

The Minusa screen surface is unique in the variety of matte presented. The surfaces are almost numberless in their variety, and due to a peculiarity of manufacture, as described by Mr. Brown, no two surfaces would be exactly alike.

The screen surface is prepared by spraying on a specially made linen fibre cloth a preparation containing a percentage of ground glass mixed with a patented substance known as trlansatine. No virtue is claimed for the ground glass insofar as curtain brilliancy be concerned; it is merely used because it combines with the liquids and other materials to form globules which when sprayed on the screen presents a stippled effect, of varied coarseness according to the consistency of the fluid. I can see no earthly reason why the Minusa screen surfaces should not produce good results. One of the screens is in use in the Hippodrome theater, New York City, where the conditions are perhaps as trying as those to be found anywhere in this country. It is delivering good results. So far as the gold end of it goes it is a generally known fact that the editor has never favored gold surfaces, yet it must be conceded that there are arguments on both sides of this question. The claim of Mr. Brown is one which, so far as the editor is concerned, is a new one. Mr. Brown's contention is that the addition of the gold tint breaks up and destroys the halation, or glare present in metal surface screens containing no color. His claim is that photographic tests made across the light rays near the surface of a gold surface and non-gold surface screen shows an effect which can best be described by using the term halation in front of the non-gold surface, whereas with a gold surface this effect is not present.

Mr. Brown tells me that Professor Stutz, of the Washington University, St. Louis, professor of geometrical optics, informed him that this was in fact, the reflection of the violet ray. Now, I don't propose to enter into that argument, because I don't know any more about it than a clam. I merely give it as an interesting idea. I am not disposed to be dogmatic, or take the position that I cannot be wrong. I have opposed the use of the gold color wholly and solely because I believed that it operated to lessen the curtain brilliancy without giving any particular benefit in return. If I am wrong I shall be glad to have that fact proven.

But all this is beside the question. We are talking about Minusa screens, and, in view of the fact that the Minusa Cine Products Company offers to recoat any gold fibre screen at any time within a period of five years from the date of purchase, absolutely free of charge, regardless of whether the fault lies with the company or with the purchaser, it seems to me that the purchaser is very well protected, and that a proposition of this kind ought to have the approval and the endorsement of this department.

There is an impression abroad that the Minusa Company is connected with the old Atsco outfit of New York. Mr. Brown desires me to assure our readers that his company has absolutely no connection, nor has ever had any connection of any kind whatsoever with the defunct Atsco Company. This impression doubtless arose through the fact that some of the officials of the Minusa Company were formerly employed by the Atsco.

Will Try It.

W. L. Henderson, Reardon, Washington, writes:

> Am owner of the "Palm theater." Reardon has a population of 800. I have three years' experience as operator. Have the new Handbook, and you bet I read the department. In the issue of May 29 I agree with you with regard to G. D. Bullock's letter; also concerning article in same issue entitled, "New Scheme." I am going to try that proposition myself. I experimented with the following, to my sorrow: Made a frame with wedges at corners and stretched twelve ounce canvas over same; gave it four coats of whiting and rubbed it perfectly smooth. This made a fair screen. Then I put on three coats of aluminum which did not give satisfaction, and I finally covered it with two coats of calcimine, the last having a little bluing in it. Am using 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C., through a transformer, and get a fair 10½-foot picture at 57 feet.

It is not necessary to rub the calcimine surface smooth; in fact, it is hardly desirable. A little roughness in the surface is, I believe, to be commended, even in a calcimine screen. Shall be very glad indeed to have your report on the oilcloth-muslin idea, but, you will understand I am not endorsing that particular scheme, merely recommending it for trial.

Would As Soon Miss a Meal.

W. C. Evans, Sherman, Texas, sends in answer to Question 85 and says:

> Have been in the operating room since December, 1905, and for several years have been a regular reader of the Moving Picture World. I would just as soon miss a meal as miss the projection department, and, in fact, I am going to submit my answers to the questions more regularly.

Comment is, I think, unnecessary. We appreciate letters of this kind. Words of appreciation give us courage to go on with what is at times a pretty hard task.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

A ROMANCE OF OLD CALIFORNIA (Biograph), June 14.—This love story of the days of Spanish rule in the land of the Golden Gate will find many admirers. Rich local color and picturesque scenery assist in making the film attractive. Mary Malatesta, Ivan Christy and the rest of the cast, maintain the acting at a high level.

WHOSE WAS THE SHAME? (Essanay), June 14.—A rather misleading title for a mild one-reel drama, pleasantly romantic in plot. Beverly Bayne, Jack Meredith, Frank Dayton and Jack Milton treat it with due consideration.

THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW ("Road o' Strife" Series No. 11) (Lubin), June 14.—In this chapter of the serial, Crane Wilbur, in the character of Robert Dane, is the central figure. Determined to solve the mystery of Gilbert Jerome's death, Dane steals the silver cup from the court records, believing it holds the answer he is seeking.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 47, 1915 (Selig), June 14.—A visit of school children to the Brooklyn Navy Yard comes first on the list. Then follow: Miss Spokane hands out apple pies at Panama-Pacific Fair; graduating class at Annapolis given diplomas; Stadium Day fete at Tacoma, Washington; latest fashions; Coast Guard reunion at New London, Conn.; pageant of children, Chicago; London's "Little Italy" rejoicing at outbreak of war; Italian reservists leaving New York for Italy; pictures of W. J. Bryan and President Wilson.

RASKEY'S ROAD SHOW (Kalem), June 15.—Admirers of "Ham" and "Bud" have been given many examples of their versatility and willingness to tackle any kind of job if the work isn't too heavy. In this one-reel release, they appear as, more or less, skilful stage hands. They also assist the lady lion tamer, by impersonating two of her most ferocious wild beasts, and win their customary meed of laughter and applause.

CAPTURING BAD BILL (Lubin), June 15.—A half-reel rough-and-tumble farce, written by Epes W. Sargent, and produced by Will Louis. The theme is without novelty, but Ray McKee's acting of the restaurant keeper gives it a stiff comic "punch."

CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS (Lubin), June 15.—A bit of rural comedy, on the same reel with "Capturing Bad Bill," this offering has been adriotly constructed for laughing purposes, by O. H. Middleton. George Welch and Mabel Paige present carefully wrought character types.

THE HEART OF THE SHERIFF (Selig), June 15.—Tom Mix's threefold endeavors as author, producer and star of this one-reel drama have resulted in an energetic, colorful western photoplay. A liberal quantity of expert horsemanship adds greatly to the value of the film.

CARTOONS IN THE PARLOR (Edison), June 16.—The novel form in which these animated grouch chasers are produced makes them doubly welcome. The present reel contains the following subjects from Raoul Barre's clever pencil: "The Three Loose Jointed Dancers," "The Hicks in Nightmareland" and "The Lovers' Version of a Chaperone." Mrs. Wallace Erskine, Jean Dumar and Raymond McKee, act the introductory scenes with skill.

IN THE SWIM (Essanay), June 16.—Another "Dreamy Dud" cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson. A fanciful bit of amusing nonsense, on the same reel with travel scenes in the Southwest.

PHILANTHROPIC TOMMY (Vitagraph), June 16.—This story never has and never will happen. And more's the pity. Although apocryphal, as a possible picture of life, the lesson it teaches is brought home with vivid and lasting results. The author, Frank Dazey, should be encouraged to produce more scenarios of the same class. Lucille Hammill and her associates in the cast, also producer Harry Davenport, have treated Mr. Dazey's work in the proper spirit.

HIS WARD'S SCHEME (Biograph), June 17.—Gus Pixley and Irma Dawkins have the major portion of the acting in this one-reel comedy, which puts but a slight strain on their ability. The story is mildly pleasing, and has been given the advantage of an artistic production.

THE BROKEN PLEDGE (Essanay), June 17.—The environment in this one reel comedy a camp in the woods, is greatly in its favor, and most of the situations are full of novel fun. Wallace Beery in a male role is another unusual feature.

A MIX-UP IN MALES (MinA), June 17.—The always reliable "mistaken identity" motive is given a free hand in this one-reel farce. The fun is kept moving at a rapid rate, and the other fellow's troubles are, as usual, a source of hilarious joy to the onlooker. Goldie Colwell and Dolly Larkins make a pretty picture, when tucked up safely in their little bed.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 48, 1915 (Selig), June 17.—Art Smith scattering flowers from an aeroplane over the spot where Lincoln Beachy was drowned, opens this number. Tablet to airman Arch Hoxey, at Mill Valley, Cal.; Brookline, Mass., school children in novel drill; Mt. Lasson Volcano, Cal., in eruption; baby parade at Glen-New London, Conn.; Robert Lansing and W. J. Bryan, at Washington; Lucile fashions; Chinese Commercial Commission visit Edison; hippos dale, Cal.; testing armed motor, at Kenosha; Harvard crew training at transferred to summer home; Gov. Whitman at Fair on New York Day; New York building at the Fair; war pictures, and scenes at West Point, complete the film.

TO THE DEATH (Vitagraph), June 17.—This grim and grisly one-reel drama is made up entirely of primitive passions. There is no end of excitement during its progress, and the climax is startling. The two leading roles are competently acted by Alfred Vosburgh and Jack Mower.

BRONCHO AND THE LAND GRABBER (Essanay), June 18.—The lively fight which winds up this one-reel drama has been put on in the most realistic manner, and, as events leading up to it clearly justify the proceedings and the stand taken by Broncho, the picture gets by with flying colors. G. M. Anderson embodies Broncho with all his old-time vigor.

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS (Lubin), June 18.—The plot of this one-reel drama, by Will M. Ritchey, is cast in a tragic mould. A young bridge contractor permits himself to be entangled in a crooked deal in connection with a bridge, and blows out his brains on his wedding night rather than face the consequences of his folly. The film has been well produced by Bert Bracken. Velma Whitman, Raymond Gallagher, Henry Stanley and Charles K. French supply an excellent grade of acting.

A MISTAKE IN TYPESETTING (Vitagraph), June 18.—The expert typewriter of W. A. Tremayne has "mixed the babies up" in this one-reel farce, in a very amusing fashion. The fact that one of the infants is a pet doggie makes the consequences of the mix-up doubly ludicrous. Good, clean fun. Spirited acting by Flora Finch, Jay Dwiggins, Templer Saxe and the rest of the cast.

A TRAGEDY IN PANAMA (Selig), June 16.—Wheeler Oakman, who wrote this one-reel drama and produced it in Panama, has given it the proper title. The film is packed with tragedy, guilty love being its theme. The tropical scenery forms an excellent background for the story. Lamar Johnstone, Norma Nicholas, and Harry Lonsdale, do justice to the acting.

THE ANGEL OF SPRING (Selig), June 16.—Aside from unnecessary realism in the physician's costume, this one-reel drama is a rather poetic treatment of a familiar subject in these days of eugenics and the "twilight sleep." A young wife, who has a horror of becoming a mother, is visited by a dream, while under the influence of the new method of painless childbirth, and undergoes an entire change of feeling at sight of her offspring. The drama is interesting and will find universal favor.

LOVE IN AN APARTMENT HOTEL (Biograph), June 18.—This reissue of a D. W. Griffith production, in which Henry Walthall and Blanche Sweet played the leading roles, is a forceful reminder that the "Wizard of the Screen" was early a master of his art.

RIVAL WAITERS (Kalem), June 18.—A short, slap-dash farce, played in the right tempo by a competent cast, George Hoffman and Frank Meeker having the rival roles. A very good offering of its class. Two nature studies, "The Eagle Owl" and "Pigs Is Pigs" are on the same reel.

THE WAY OUT (Biograph), June 19.—A tragic one-reel drama, brought to a logical finish. Well acted by Claire McDowell, Lewis Wells and Harry Carey.

THE CORPORAL'S DAUGHTER (Edison), June 19.—Captain Jack Crawford supplied the scenario for this one-reel western drama, the story making a better-than-average photoplay. The following discrepancies in the production are noticeable; the placing of a catch basin to a sewer within a few feet of a stockade in the unsettled West, and attiring the heroine in a most unbecoming cross-saddle riding costume. Ladies did not ride astride at the period of the play. Gladys Hulette, Arthur Housman and their support, give a spirited and effective performance.

NEAR ETERNITY (An Episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), June 19.—Nearing the borders of the Great Beyond has become such a commonplace experience for Helen, that her adventures in the present film will cause no surprise to her admirers. The picture ranks on an equality with the preceding numbers of the series.

A SAFE INVESTMENT (Lubin), This one-reel Billie Reeves comic finds that gentleman married and settled—or done for, to put it more truthfully. Billie's matrimonial experiences do not fill him with joy, and viewers of the film have found the earlier numbers considerably more amusing. Mae Hotely plays Billie's better-half.

General Film Company Specials.

LETTERS ENTANGLED (Selig), June 14.—A very human story is told in this two-reel drama, but the separation of John Wilson and Grace Livingston at the end is unnatural and entirely unnecessary. The producing has been done with care. The cast, headed by Henry King and Dorothy Davenport, is thoroughly capable.

MRS. VAN ALDEN'S JEWELS (Biograph), June 15.—A consistent plot, action, and the sensational wrecking of an automobile, are incorporated in this two-reel thief drama. The production has been thoroughly well done, the acting of Franklyn Ritchie and Louise Vale being a prominent factor in the success of the photoplay.

THE LITTLE DOLL'S DRESSMAKER (Vitagraph), June 15.—There is a suggestion of the real Dickens atmosphere about this wholesome two-reel drama, by Anne Maxwell. The humanity in it bulks large and engenders the same warm glow of friendly feeling that the creator of Tiny Tim so frequently fanned into life. Lillian Walker gives a sympathetic portrayal of the lame girl who brightens her own existence by her service for others. Capital impersonations by Frank Currier, Lillian Burns and Evart Overton supplement the adept work by producer Wilfrid North.

THE VANISHING VASES (Kalem), June 16.—The scenes and incidents in this two-reel detective drama have an agreeable degree of novelty and a firm grip on the attention. The weaving in of the underplot between Micky Weston and Mamie Kelly adds a phase of life that bears the imprint of truth. Frank Jonasson and Ollie Kirby satisfy every demand of these two characters. Marin Sais, Arthur Shirley and W. H. West are also happily cast.

THE INSURRECTION (Lubin), June 16.—Not since the days of the celebrated melodrama, "The White Squadron," has a fleet of U. S. warships and their crews figured so prominently in mimic warfare, as in this three-reel photoplay by George W. Terwilliger. The story is the not uncommon one of love and strife in some South American capital, and there is no lack of stirring realism and dramatic incident. Ormi Hawley, Herbert Fortier and Earl Metcalf have congenial roles.

FROM CHAMPION TO TRAMP (Lubin), June 17.—Romaine Fielding, who wrote and produced this two-reel drama, made no mistake in casting himself for the leading part. The plot is out of the beaten track, and developes an unexpected amount of exciting situations and a properly concluded love story. Vinnie Burns and Roscoe Karnes are prominent in Mr. Fielding's support.

HIS FATHER'S RIFLE (Selig). June 17.—This three-reel romance is erected upon an admirable groundwork for an interesting photoplay of the Selig Jungle-Zoo series. The incidents all fit perfectly a drama of this nature, and the scenes are many and diversified. Stella Razeto shows excellent emotional powers as the heroine, and Guy Oliver is manly and quietly effective as Kirke Warren.

VAIN JUSTICE (Essanay), June 19.—A two-reel Civil War drama, by Clinton Dangerfield, with Richard C. Travers as the Union officer, and Lillian Drew as the Southern girl. The author has followed the usual formula for this class of photoplay, but has put his work together with skill and pleasing results. The production, save in one particular, is praiseworthy. The Southern mansion, used in the play, was obviously not erected until several decades after the Rebellion.

MISS JEKYLL AND MADAME HYDE (Vitagraph), June 19.—No statement has been given out as to who furnished the stage settings and properties used in this three-reel psychic drama, but, it is quite clear that Charles L. Gaskill, its writer and producer, obtained his psychology from Stevenson, Molnar, Goethe & Co. However, they are the best in their line, and Mr. Gaskill has shown equal judgment in his choice of everything pertaining to his photoplay, and produced it in a manner worthy the reputation of the Vitagraph Company. The drama is full of interest and power. Helen Gardner and Paul Scardon head a strong cast.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 24, 1915 (Mutual), June 17.—Among the more interesting items of this issue are scenes on Lake Waban, where the Wellesley girls exhibit their skill at rowing; a review of the graduates of West Point; remnants of the Army of Gray holds a reunion at Richmond, Va., and other scenes of topical interest.

WHERE BREEZES BLOW (Komic), June 30.—A beach parade in California has been taken advantage of for the filming of this comedy in which Fay Tincher takes the prize for her brief black and white bathing costume. The comedy has been directed by Edward Dillon, and is an excellent one.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

UP FROM THE DEPTHS (Mutual Masterpicture—Reliance), June 17.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 2108, issue of June 26.

THE OLD CLOTHES SHOP (Reliance), June 19.—This is a two-reel production showing how book-learned romance carried into real life is sometimes disastrous in its effects. The picture is fairly interesting, but has weak spots where unnatural development occurs. There is a lesson to be learned, however, from the story of the girl who listened to an imaginary hero and is led into untold trouble, and the moral weight of the story in a measure over-balances the technical faults of the production.

THE WOMAN FROM WARRENS (Majesic), June 20.—In this two-reel drama we are shown how one woman saves another from a fate which would have been similar to her own. The opening of the picture is not as clear in its significance as it might be; but on the whole the production is good. Lucille Young plays the role of the "woman from Warrens" and "Billy" Hutton that of Alice, who so barely escapes the clutches of a bad man. Charles West and Fred Thompson play the principal male roles.

THE LITTLE TEACHER (Keystone), June 21.—A two-reel rural comedy, with Mabel Normand as the teacher, and Mack Sennett and Roscoe Arbuckle as her most fractious pupils. Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison in another part of their issue.

THE REWARD (Mutual Masterpicture—Kay Bee), June 24.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 2105, issue of June 26.

THE SEA GHOST (Broncho), June 30.—A two-reel number telling an old-fashioned "treasure island" yarn, which is worked out in a very pleasing way. The girl and her father set a message adrift in a bottle and this is picked up by the captain of a brig. The castaways call for aid in the note and tell of finding vast treasure. The captain decides to hunt for them; the first mate leads a mutiny and sends the captain afloat in a barrel. He is flung up on the island and the girl and her father restore him to health. This contains good atmosphere for an adventure story and the final scenes are exciting and full of interest.

THE FAILURE (Domino), July 1.—A two-reel Western offering, featuring Walter Edwards and Leona Hutton. This harks back to a very familiar situation in which the father decides to rob a stage in order to pay the doctor and his grocery bill. He does not, in fact, rob the stage himself, but shoots one of the bandits who does so, then helps himself to the stolen money to pay his debts. Later he leads the sheriff to the spot where the strong box is located and the sheriff takes pity on him and turns over the reward to him. The moral of this is debatable, but its worst fault is lack of freshness. It is well-constructed but not new.

HIS MOTHER'S PORTRAIT (Kay Bee), July 2.—A two-reel story, featuring Margaret Gibson, Frank Borsage and others. The plot concerns a ballet girl lured into the country by a designing theatrical manager. She flees to the home of a young bachelor farmer; the manager pursues her and the girl is rescued by the young farmer. He kicks the manager out of the house and he and the girl remain there until the next day. This is unconventional, but well done. The storm scenes are nicely staged and there is an attractive freshness about the whole production which is very pleasing.

North American Film Corporation

SHADOWS AT SUNRISE (American), June 7.—Being Chapter 6 of "The Diamond from the Sky." Arthur finds refuge on a farm, but attends a tournament in mask, at which all the principals appear. The manner in which he wins the spirited horse race and subsequent exciting events are full of interest and novelty. The scenes on the Stanley estate are all picturesque and pleasing. The diamond has some startling adventures also, being dropped by the monkey into an owl's nest. A good number.

A MIND IN THE PAST (American), June 21.—Chapter 8 of "The Diamond from the Sky," in two acts. Interesting developments occur in this instalment. Hagar loses her reason after Blair's attack upon her, and Esther takes her back to the gypsies, hoping to restore it. An attorney arrives from England, announcing the earl's death and searching for the heir. Blair rejoins Vivian and they again gain possession of the diamond which has changed hands twice over since the previous number. Arthur is now living in a strange land under the name of John Powell. A good instalment.

THE ARAB (Lasky), June 14.—Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush on page 2109, issue of June 26.

Pathe Exchange. Inc.

BING, BANG, BIFF, Rel. Wk. June 21.—A fairly interesting farce comedy in which a couple of tramps make love to a girl in a rural community. The rivalry between them is at times amusing. The end of it all is that the girl elopes with a divinity student.

DANCES OF THE MALAISES, Wk. June 28.—An interesting exhibition of the belles of Malaysia tripping the "light fantastic." On the same reel with "When Knights Were Bold."

WHEN KNIGHTS WERE BOLD, Wk. June 28.—This is an interesting Bray cartoon. It is more than interesting, it is extremely funny. On the same reel with the above.

WHEN CHARLIE WAS A CHILD, Wk June 28. A comedy of the slapstick order. Charlie goes to sleep and dreams that he is a child again. The dream is carried out in Chaplin style, but the film cannot be very highly recommended.

Pathe Exchange, Inc. Specials.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE, NO. 25, "The Lost Torpedo," Rel. Wk. June 14.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 2109, issue of June 26.

WHO PAYS? (Balboa), Rel. Wk. June 14.—"The Pomp of Earth" is the title of No. 10 of "Who Pays?" series. There is perhaps less to commend in the matter of the story of this drama than in some of the others. The production has, however, the same finished style of direction as has characterized so many of the series, but the moral is not quite as deeply set as in some previous numbers.

THE TOMBOY (Balboa), Wk. June 28.—A two-part mining story of considerable interest. The story contains a plot to gain possession of the Tomboy mine. There is a love story mixed up in the case, plenty of action, and good photography. Generally considered it makes an acceptable offering for the average audience. Edward Standing, Henry King and Jackie Saunders play the principal roles.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

THE MECHANICAL MAN (Joker), June 28.—A comedy number, featuring Phroso, the well-known vaudeville actor, in his imitation of a toy man. Max Asher and company assist. The action is quite amusing throughout and the number should make a pleasing novelty, particularly for children.

WHEN HUBBY GREW JEALOUS (Nestor), June 29.—This Christie number features Billie Rhodes, Kinsley Benedict and Neal Burns. The young husband is unreasonably jealous of the doctor, who has him treated for jealitis. The knockabout scenes in the hospital furnish the chief humor; the plot itself is not very strong.

THE OLD GROUCH (Big U), July 1. A number featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as a selfish business man, written by H. G. Stafford. The business man has a dream in which he sees himself the victim of reverses. This leads to his change of heart. The plot is not new and has been done before in numerous ways, but it contains a good lesson.

CAMERON GIRLS (Powers), July 1.—A half reel featuring two European dancing girls in some graceful steps. Numerous movements are demonstrated. A fairly strong dancing feature.

MARVELS OF THE INSECT WORLD (Powers), July 1.—Another of those fascinating nature studies produced under direction of Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the New York Zoo. This shows the evolution of silk worms; it also gives close views of Hercules beetles, roaches, scorpions, etc. A good nature subject, on the same reel with above.

WHEN THE SPIRIT MOVED (Nestor), July 2.—An Al E. Christie number, with Eddie Leonard, Lee Moran and Victoria Forde in the leads. Victoria is the daughter of a spiritualist and when Eddie comes to call there is a lot of fun of a burlesque sort. Prof. Bunk causes so many spirits to walk abroad that Eddie beats it home. This is full of laughs.

FIFTY YEARS BEHIND (Powers), July 3.—This story, featuring Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn, Mildred Adams and others, is pleasing, though it does not realize all its possibilities. The costuming and setthings are unusually attractive and the story out of the ordinary; but the close came rather abruptly. At the same time it is better than the average.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE BROKEN COIN (Universal Special), Rel. Wk. June 21.—Episode No. 1 of the new serial written by Emerson Hough and featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. President Carl Laemmle, of the Universal Company, blossoms out as a full-fledged actor in the opening scenes. As publisher of a great newspaper, he sends Kitty Grey, his star reporter, to the Kingdom of Gretzhoffen in search of a big serial story. She has in her possession half of a broken coin which, united with the other half, will give the location of great treasure. The second half is in the hands of the pretender to the throne. The plot will undoubtedly center about this divided coin. It opens in a rather promising way.

CONSCIENCE (Imp), June 25.—Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy on page 1784, issue of June 12.

THE BROKEN COIN (Universal Special), June 28.—Instalment No. 2, bearing the special title "Satan of the Sands." Kitty and Roleaux escape temporarily from the clutches of Count Frederick, who wants the other half of the coin. The desert scenes are picturesque in the extreme and the action quite dramatic. Roleaux heroically saves Kitty from the advances of Sachio, a new character, portrayed by Ernie Shields. Later they fall into the hands of desert bandits and are ransomed by King Michael. This continues the interest very well.

THE CHEVAL MYSTERY (Victor), June 28.—Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy on page 2106, issue of June 26.

IN THE NAME OF THE KING (Gold Seal), June 29.—No. 5 of the "Under the Crescent" series. This pictures Olga and the other fugitives reaching the camp of the Bedouins. Zohra recognizes and recovers her baby, thus regaining her reason. The prince pursues the fugitives and kills Zohra's father. Olga and the American hero flee and have numerous interesting adventures. The American undertakes to deliver a dispatch and Olga is captured by the enemy. The reel closes with her stabbing an assailant in a harem. This has the desert atmosphere characteristic of this series and is in keeping with the general trend of former numbers.

THE GRAIL (Laemmle), June 30.—A two-reel production of an uplifting sort, written by L. V. Jefferson and produced by Wm. Worthington. The latter appears in the cast, also Anna Little and Herbert Robinson. The young bank clerk goes West to save the girl's father, who has misappropriated funds. The father refuses to tell the girl that her lover was innocent. Later, in the desert, after the hero has saved them, the father makes full confession of his crime to the girl. The theme of Sir Galahad searching for the Holy Grail is prettily worked into this production, which is much better than the average offering in its general tone.

THE SINNER MUST PAY (Rex), July 1.—A two-reel number by Ida May Park, featuring Edna Maison and Arthur Shirley. This is the story of the discontented wife of a young inventor, who leaves her husband because he cannot give her the luxuries she craves. Dillon, the man with whom she departs, abuses her and the child. Later, in the West, Dillon is killed while gambling by a bad man. The latter saves the despondent woman, who is about to kill herself. She is eventually restored to her husband and child, having suffered from her transgressions. The story deals with a sordid phase of life and is not particularly strong from the standpoint of entertainment; at the same time it is well-constructed and contains a good moral.

Mangan Made General Manager

Ambitious Theater Manager Receives Promotion for Indefatigable Work.

FRANCIS A. MANGAN, who has been connected with the Photoplay Theaters Company of 30 East 42nd street, New York City, not quite two years, has been elevated to the position of general manager of the company. He was the first man to manage the company's Cumberland theater in Brooklyn, which was opened in June, 1914, and which he conducted with considerable success until he was transferred to the Crescent in the Bronx to build up its waning patronage. He soon had this house running on a profitable basis, and the admission price for shows when he left were 10 cents for matinees and 15 cents for evening shows as compared with 5 cents the entire house before his advent. Mr. Mangan says that he has experienced no trouble at all in raising the price, and that the patrons were quite willing to pay the increase when they were assured that they would get a better bill.

Francis A. Mangan.

Mr. Mangan's duties are now many times multiplied, and he fully realizes the increased responsibility in his new position. He goes about the direction of the four theaters in his charge with the equanimity of a man who has had many more years' experience than he. They are the Crescent and the Dyckman, in New York, the Cumberland and Bushwick Gardens (at Hancock street and Bushwick avenue), in Brooklyn, the latter mentioned being an airdome with a seating capacity of 1,000. In the fall this property will be converted into a closed theater with a seating capacity equal to that of the airdome. Mr. Mangan is on the job fully sixteen hours each day of the week and can be found at some one of the theaters just mentioned at any evening show. It is a part of his duties to book the entertainment for each of these houses, and that he is capably performing this task is attested by the big business that each is doing.

Before leaving the Crescent he also increased the orchestra to ten pieces, and has completed negotiations for the installation of a big Moller organ in this theater and the Dyckman in the fall. A. P. Ireland is now in charge of the Crescent. For the first anniversary of the Cumberland, which takes place during the week of June 21, Mr. Mangan has planned to give the patrons a week of special pictures and features. In addition to the music furnished by the big Austin organ at this house, he has also made arrangements for the use of a six piece orchestra. On Saturday night of the anniversary week, Earle Williams and Anita Stewart, who are featured in a picture entitled, "The Island of Regeneration," which has been booked for Saturday and Sunday of that week, will appear on the stage and give short speeches. During the Cumberland celebration period the prices of admission will be 25 cents for the evening and 15 cents for matinees. Mr. Mangan has been in his present position since May 1.

GEORGE D. MACINTYRE JOINS WORLD FILM

George D. MacIntyre, who for eight years was secretary of the Actors' Society, and who played a small part in the World Film-William A. Brady feature, "The Face in the Moonlight," with Robert Warwick, will be in Mr. Capellani's new picture, "The Imposter."

V-L-S-E-'S Second Quarter

Splendid Program of Great Plays and Players Announced by "Big Four."

THE Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay in announcing their list of releases for the second quarter, beginning with August 2 and ending November 15, make public a list of features, that in variety, the subjects cover every phase of the dramatic art.

In the sixteen features on the "Big Four" program in the next three months, the principal characters will be portrayed by an aggregation of stars recruited from the foremost ranks of the stage, and the heights of motion picture popularity.

In the picture plays listed, honors are evenly divided between film adaptations of big famous stage successes, and especially written stories, and novels dramatized to meet screen play requirements.

Among the stars who will appear in this exceptionally strong program of picture plays, are Marie Dressler, Robert Edeson, Edith Storey, Joseph Kilgour, Virginia Pierson, Myrtle Gonzales, William Duncan, Dorothy Bernard, George Soule Spencer, Grace Darmond, Harry Mestayer, Antonio Moreno, June Keith, Johnny Slavin, Beatrice Morgan and Octavia Handworth, supplemented by a host of players popular alike to dramatic audiences and picture play patrons.

August 2, Lubin will release "The District Attorney," adopted from the successful play of the same name, written by Charles Kleine and Harrison Grey Fiske. It is a story of political life, in which the lights and shades of municipal government are cleverly blended. Dainty Dorothy Bernard and George Soule Spencer assume the leading roles, supported by a strong and evenly balanced cast of well-known Lubin players..

"The Chalice of Courage," produced by the Vitagraph Company, from Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel, was made by the western Vitagraph players, and is a play teeming with the most intense interest from its opening to closing reflection. Myrtle Gonzales and William Duncan portray the leading characters, and the support they receive from the rest of the cast is of superior dramatic excellence.

"A Bunch of Keys," Essanay contribution for August 16th, is the film version of Charles Hoyt's successful stage comedy. June Keith and Johnny Slavin will be seen in the leading parts.

"The House of a Thousand Candles," from Meredith Nicholson's novel, will be presented by the Selig Company on August 23rd with Grace Darmond and Harry Mestayer presenting the principal characters.

"Tillie's Tomato Surprise," in which the inimitable Marie Dressler is expected to repeat the success she made upon the occasion of her first film appearance, will be offered by the Lubin Company on August 30th.

In addition to these, five big productions will be released the first month of the second quarter of the V-L-S-E program. The Vitagraph will offer "Mortmain," with Robert Edeson on September 6th, "The Dust of Egypt," with Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno on October 4th, and "The Writing on the Wall," with Joseph Kilgour and Virginia Pierson, November 1st.

The Essanay Company will present "The Man Trail" September 13th, from the story by Henry Oyens, author of "The Misleading Lady," on October 11th "In the Palace of the King," and on November 8th, a screen version of the famous stage success "The Tin Soldier."

The Selig Company will offer "The Circular Staircase" on September 20th; "Whom the Gods Might Destroy" on October 18th, and 'The Ne'er-Do-Well" on November 15th.

The Lubin Company will contribute an adaptation of the remarkable dramatic success "The Great Ruby" on September 27th, and on October 25th, a film adaptation of the recent dramatic success, "The Great Divide."

CLEO MADISON AND RAY HANFORD STRICKEN WITH PNEUMONIA.

Universal City was startled this week when Cleo Madison and Ray Hanford, both members of the Gold Seal Company, were stricken with pneumonia. Charles Giblyn and the Gold Seal company were finishing a two-reel story of society life entitled, "The Flight of the Nightbird," by H. G. Stafford, when Miss Madison and Mr. Hanford, both of whom had been suffering from heavy colds, were suddenly taken ill. Miss Madison was taken home while Mr. Hanford was assisted to the hospital in Universal City. Mr. Giblyn immediately stopped work on the production.

In the absence of Miss Madison, Mr. Giblyn staged a two-reel military drama entitled "Jane's Declaration of Independence" with Agnes Vernon in the title role and Hobart Henley playing opposite her. Frank MacQuarrie, Jean Hathaway and Gordon Griffith comprise the remainder of the cast.

American Correspondent Film Co., Inc.

New Company to Make Specialty of Big State-Rights Topicals of Five Reels or Thereabouts—Has Many Special Men at Work.

A NEW and interesting advance is exemplified in the ideas of the just-formed "American Correspondent Film Company" with temporary offices at 30 East 42nd Street, New York City. Its object is to provide a continuous supply of multiple reel pictures illustrating things and movements of such undoubted general interest that a demand for them is assured. To this end it has engaged newspaper men of ability to go with camera men, whom they will direct in taking motion pictures telling things that everyone wants to know. For instance, if one takes up any first class Sunday newspaper, he will read an account of the last fall of Przemsyl by some American correspondent, an American because Americans have certain characteristics and only that kind of a correspondent knows what they particularly want to know. The new company will employ Americans to get its pictures for the same reason and these pictures will show the things that the other correspondents only write about.

War is not the only interest that Americans have just now; it is said that we are getting tired of war. Soon we will be interested in knowing how Serbia is recuperating from the horrors and destruction that has been hers and this company may have three or four reels showing that to us. Again, since the world will be interested in the daily life of the next president of China, some correspondent may get permission to take his goings out and comings in and that will be perhaps three reels. It may show the modern history of China. The value of it will come from the fact that the man will be big calibre and will realize that in telling about the new Chinese leader he will have to show conditions that confront him and so may carry his camera a thousand miles to show that man's new schemes for agriculture, his ideas for military defense, his schemes for education and the new engineering feats he is undertaking. It will certainly be instructive, whether it be about China or Brazil or Mexico.

M. B. Clausson, President of the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., said to a World man who interviewed him that he expected that one of his best patrons will be the great newspapers. They are dealing in news and understand its value and will be able to see at a glance the worth of any special offering of theirs as soon as it was projected for them. He expects to sell state rights throughout the country and make arrangements with the big papers in the cities to hire a hall and show the films just as the New York Sun showed the early war films. Afterwards the same pictures can be taken to the smaller towns where there is no great paper and shown at the regular picture houses.

An organization is being perfected that will be able to handle the work, which is expected to amount to several thousand reels every week. A factory has been established in Stamford Conn., to do the mechanical work and in this city commodious offices will soon be ready, with a projection room for exhibiting the films.

Mr. Clausson said, "I think we have made a fairly good start, in fact we have been able to manage to get our correspondents officially admitted to the German and Austro-Hungarian war fronts and the first genuine, we might say official, pictures are just in. One of our correspondents, A. K. Dawson, is now at the Italian frontier, another one of our correspondents, Fritz Arna Wagner, who is well known in this country through having made sensational pictures in Mexico for Pathe, is making pictures for us at the German fronts.

"Edward Lyell Fox, author of 'Behind the Scenes in Warring Germany,' who has brought over here for us the first official pictures, is going back to Germany for us within a very short time. We are about to make arrangements to have a correspondent for us going to England and France, another to Italy, arrangements which are just about to come to a satisfactory conclusion. Mr. d'Emery is now crossing South America on our account and we expect his first pictures within a very short time. Furthermore, we have appointed various resident correspondents in different countries all of whom will send us interesting pictures very soon."

STUMM LEASES BRADFORD THEATER.

Charles C. Stumm has leased the Bradford theater at Bradford, Pa., and will take possession on Aug. 1, opening on Friday the 13th of that month. Mr. Stumm will play road shows, repertoire companies, stock and pictures. The Bradford theater is a pretty structure, and Bradford has always been considered a good "show town."

W. Edgar Shallenberger

W. EDGAR SHALLENBERGER, vice president of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation and stockholder in the Thanhouser, American, Mutual and other motion picture organizations, was born in Lancaster, Ohio, about thirty-four years ago. After graduating from college in St. Louis, Mr. Shallenberger went to Chicago to engage in his profession. A few years later, Charles J. Hite, who likewise was born in Lancaster, arrived in Chicago to engage in the then new film industry.

In co-operation with Mr. Shallenberger, who had been a boyhood friend of Mr. Hite, the latter started the C. J. Hite Film Exchange, which later became the H. & H. Film Exchange (now one of the Mutual's two branches in Chicago). From that time on Edgar Shallenberger became a larger and larger investor in the various branches of the film industry. He soon owned several photoplay theaters in various sections of the central West. His stock holdings in film exchanges and film manufacturing plants increased fold upon fold.

W. E. Shallenberger.

When the project of forming the Mutual Film Corporation was broached to Mr. Shallenberger by Mr. Hite, he agreed to further the plan in every way in his power. With his brother he augmented the rapidly growing fortune of Mr. Hite toward the purchase of the Thanhouser plant in New Rochelle, planning its affiliation with the Mutual. But all this time the demands of his profession were so heavy on his time that Mr. Shallenberger determined to sit back for a while and rest content with investments, rather than engagement in the film industry.

The terribly tragic death of Mr. Hite at the very hour when doors long hammered at were opening to his demands, wrought a great change in Mr. Shallenberger's plans. Mr. Hite, shortly before his death, had completed arrangements for the manufacture of "Zudora," the serial which followed "The Million Dollar Mystery," also a Thanhouser product. A number of episodes of "Zudora" had been completed when the fatal accident to Mr. Hite occurred. As would be the case with any man so heavily and energetically engaged in an active industry, the sudden tragedy left a number of plans unmatured. Only a few intimates knew what Mr. Hite had proposed doing. And they sent a hurry call to Edgar Shallenberger as one of Mr. Hite's closest friends and advisers, to come East and assume, among other things, the distribution of the new picture.

The serial was changed abruptly, both in name and plot. The players who had been such favorites in "The Million Dollar Mystery" were restored to roles similar to their great successes, and the new serial was called "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery." A whirlwind campaign followed with the result that more than $750,000 worth of bookings were placed to the credit of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation. Now, more than nine months after the release of the first episode, the selling campaign undertaken by Edgar Shallenberger is bringing in those results for "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" that, backed by a good picture, mean large profits.

Mr. Shallenberger therefore, while new in person to many in the film industry, is old in experience in it. He has intimate connection with all three ends of the business, the manufacture, distribution and exhibition of photoplays. And he is distinctly a progressive. He is of the mind that the successful motion picture of the future will be written especially for the screen by trained action writers, played by folk trained in the motion picture art, and of a length warranted solely by the dramatic action, not based on mere desire to turn out a four or a five or a six-reel photoplay.

"We have on this side the Atlantic," Mr. Schellenberger said recently to a Moving Picture World representative, "the greatest writers of action—action as opposed to dialogue or atmosphere or just literary style. The American author is born amid such surroundings of activity, he is so much a part of them that when he does turn to literature as a pursuit he puts into his stories the snap and vim and virility of national daily existence.

"Too few of these men have been absorbed by the film industry. Too few well-trained newspapermen, familiar with the real tragedy and comedy of life, are in the business. We need them in the scenario end and even in the actual staging of photoplays.

"The film dramatization of popular books or plays never intended to be anything but books to be read or plays to be listened to, will not serve the film industry much longer. The moving picture public wants and deserves to have, I think, plays written especially for the screen. If afterward these plays are put into fiction form, well and good. That is merely a by-product. It seems to me that when a film manufacturer takes the average book or play and turns it into a photo-drama he is making the original by-product the chief factor, whereas I think he should concern himself with original material written solely with screen values and screen action in mind."

Harold H. Spector

OWING to innumerable excellent offers coming from various large film corporations, Harold H. Spector, assistant secretary of the World Film Corporation, has relinguished his office with that concern to accept the office of assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation. It is remarkable that he should have made such progress in the film industry, inasmuch as he has only been connected with it for a little over a year.

Mr. Spector is a member of the New York State Bar. He graduated from Rutgers College in 1904, going from there to Columbia University, where he studied law. In 1908 he graduated from Columbia, and accepted a secretaryship with Judge Adams of the United States Court. He held that position up to the time of Judge Adams' death. From there he became connected with the legal department of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company.

Harold H. Spector.

During the time that the Bronx was struggling to become an independent county, Mr. Spector was directly instrumental for many of the movements organized in its favor. He wrote a bill which was dispatched to Albany. This immediately brought forth many compliments from the Legislature, and Governor Dix wrote him a personal letter of congratulation.

A desire to become affiliated in the wonderful new industry of moving pictures led him to search for something there. About a year ago he joined the World Film forces, where at once, his natural ability and sound business sense brought him into prominence.

WEBER & FIELDS WITH KEYSTONE FILM CO.

On June 21st Weber & Fields affixed their signatures to a contract to appear exclusively with the Keystone Company for the next three years. The contract also calls for the rights to picture their numerous Broadway successes.

It is said this is the biggest contract ever entered into between a manufacturing company and players. Both these famous comedians leave for the Keystone Studios about the 1st of August.

Fog vs. Night Photography

Guests of the Metro Pictures Corporation Visit Canadian Village Built for Rolfe Production of "The Right of Way."

IT IS ONE thing to conquer darkness and take pictures at night and then again it is quite another to defeat darkness when allied with fog, as Director Jack Noble admitted on the evening of June 18, when everything save the atmosphere was favorable for the photographing of fire scenes for use in B. A. Rolfe's production of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way" in which William Faversham is being starred. The fog dropped a moist grey blanket over Director Noble's Canadian village situated in the center of Staten Island.

Harry Reichenbach, advertising manager for Metro, had gathered a numerous party for the Staten Island junket. His guests filled ten automobiles that left the Heidelberg Building early in the clear evening, and there was never a suspicion of the fog lying in wait over Director Noble's village, until the ferryboat neared the Staten Island shore. Leaving the automobiles in the roadway, the sightseers were led through the blackness, relieved by occasional torches, and at the entrance to the Canadian village, built for "The Right of Way," became a part of the throng of bearded trappers appearing in the big scenes of the picture.

The fronts of the cabins, half a dozen and more of them lining both sides of the improvised street, had all the appearance of bark-covered logs, and the shadowy figures, occasionally visible in the shifting zones of light supplied by the torches, looked precisely like genuine woodsmen. Fog or no fog, the director determined to try a couple of scenes—the alarm of fire and the villagers rushing from their homes—so whatever the result in the film, the spectators enjoyed a weirdly picturesque spectacle. The actual burning of a church was postponed to suit the convenience of the Staten Island climate.

Director Noble staged a little impromptu drama of his own when he climbed the scaffolding on the side of the ice-house adjoining the location and dislodged a crowd of obstreperous roughs. This bit of action, not noted in the scenario, added to the excitement of the evening. Among those in the Metro party were B. A. Rolfe, Richard A. Rowland, Carl Anderson, J. D. Rhodes, Frederick D. Stine, Mrs. Walter J. Kingsley and representatives from the trade and daily papers.

Eleanor Fairbanks

ONE of the latest additions to the Lubin players is Eleanor Fairbanks, who achieved such a success in "A Pair of Sixes" in New York. Miss Fairbanks is playing one of the important roles in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," the feature comedy written by Acton Davies, and in which Marie Dressler will be featured, supported by an unusually strong company headed by Tom McNaughton, the English eccentric comedian.

Eleanor Fairbanks.

As a screen player Miss Fairbanks will undoubtedly be a huge success. She is just five feet in height, has blue eyes and blonde hair, and her charming personality, coupled with her ability as an actress, makes her a valuable addition to the Lubin players.

Miss Fairbanks' first big hit was as little Miss Johnson in "Tillie's Nightmare," with Marie Dressler. She was with this production for two seasons. As "Mascha" in "The Chocolate Soldier," she became very popular, but her biggest success was in "A Pair of Sixes," in which she began by playing the role of the stenographer and ended by playing the leading part. During her career on the stage Miss Fairbanks has played in a variety of musical and dramatic productions.

Ralph Herz with Metro

THE activities of the Metro Pictures Corporation and its five producing allies are assuming wider proportions with each fleeting week. Within the past few days many new engagements have been obligated by the directors of the Metro Company and the heads of the five allied concerns. General Manager Rowland of the Metro Company announces the acquisition of numerous new plays, among which are "Pigs in Clover," "Richard Carvel," "Rosemary for Remembrance," "The Purple Lady," "Baccaret," and "The Silent Voice," all of which have been procured during the past week and allotted to stars on the Metro roster.

Five new players of stellar position have been procured and installed at the head of special casts for immediate work in Metro productions. Emmy Wehlan, the famous Viennese actress, last seen at the Casino Theater under the management of the Liebler Company, will make her appearance for B. A. Rolfe in the principal role in Charles Horan's romance, "When a Woman Loves." Miss Wehlan recently returned from a long tour of Continental Europe, where she is a prime favorite. A well-known male star will play opposite Miss Wehlan in "When a Woman Loves."

Ralph Herz.

Ralph Herz and Lois Meredith will appear also under the Rolfe banner in a screen production of Sid Rosenfeld's successful drama, "The Purple Lady." Emily Stevens, last seen in a Rolfe production, will make her second appearance on the Metro Program in Rolfe's production of "The Liars," in which she will be supported by Hamilton Ravelle. "The Liars" is an original manuscript possessing many valuable situations, admirably adapted to Miss Stevens' talents.

For the Popular Plays and Players, Gail Kane will make her appearance on the Metro Program in the production of Clyde Fitch's famous play, "Her Great Match." Miss Kane was last seen in George M. Cohan's picturesque play, "The Miracle Man," and before that starred for two years at the Astor Theater in Cohan's other success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Edmund Breese is working in the final scenes of his second screen effort for the Popular Plays and Players in Robert W. Service's famous poem classic, "The Spell of the Yukon," while Ann Murdock began work this week in the screen version of Charles Frohman's stage play, "A Royal Family." This will be Miss Murdock's first appearance on any screen. William Nigh, until a few weeks ago associated with the California Motion Picture Corporation, joins the B. A. Rolfe forces this week and will have charge of the production of "A Royal Family." Charles Horan will stage "When a Woman Loves." Herbert Blache will produce "Her Great Match" with Gail Kane, while Jack Noble will direct "The Purple Lady," in which Ralph Herz and Lois Meredith appears.

The above productions are now about to go into work at the various Metro studios at 35th street, 61st street, Fort Lee and Los Angeles.

CHARLES DAMERAL JOINS MINA.

Charles Dameral, brother of George Dameral, the popular light opera star, who is now playing over the Orpheum Circuit, has deserted the legitimate and joined the forces of Mina Films in Los Angeles. This will be Mr. Dameral's first experience before the camera. He will play important comedy parts in the one reel productions made by the company under the direction of Jack Byrne.

Other additions to the Mina personnel are Mrs. Harry Davenport, Henrietta Holle, Dorothy Black, Helen Ruppert, Pat Wheelan and Arthur Harrison. They will appear in the MinA animal productions in connection with the Bostock Animal Players.

Universal Beauties on S.S. Mandalay.

Moonlight Sail for Big U Beauties

The Mandalay Carries Nearly 2,800 People on Trip Up the Hudson—Prizes for Best Dancers.

FOR the benefit of the four hundred and more young women in the vicinity of New York who entered the Universal Beauty Contest, but were not chosen for the California trip, the company chartered the S.S. Mandalay for a moonlight sail up the Hudson on the evening of June 15th. The beauty contestants turned out in force, as did their friends and the friends of the Universal, until the total number on board the Mandalay was close to twenty-eight hundred.

During about two hours of the trip the dance floor was reserved for a competition which attracted many entrants, Universal employees alone being barred. Two silver loving cups were awarded, the first to Rose Cohen and George Wollner, the second to William J. Moore and Helen Conboy. Peter Milne, dancing with Lillian Bradley, worthily represented the newspaper fraternity in the contest by gaining a place among the dozen couples from whom the winners were selected. The judges were Julius Stern, Paul Gulick, John Clymer, M. H. Hoffman and E. H. Goldstein of Universal, Ethel Mockey of the Evening World, and Mrs. Myrtle Dunham, hostess of the Mandalay.

Among those present were Violet Merserau and her mother, Rosemary Theby, Harry Myers, Hy. Mayer, Bob Doman, Al Brandt, Lawrence D'Orsay, Joseph W. Gerard, Fred E. Sniffen, William Barry, Charles Simone, Bert Adler and representatives of the trade papers and most of the New York dailies. W. K. Whipple took motion pictures of the dancers and made stills of the winning couples.

OTIS HARLAN WITH SELIG.

Otis Harlan, the actor, arrived in Chicago, Ill., late last week and immediately stated that he was glad to enter motion picture work for the Selig Polyscope Company. "You can say what you please," asserted Mr. Harlan, "but the fact remains that all actors are anxious to appear in the pictures. This talk to the effect that 'artists of the legitimate stage are slowly being coaxed into the motion pictures' is funny."

Mr. Harlan will immediately work as the star in Hoyt's "A Black Sheep," which will be released through V-L-S-E, Inc., as a Selig Red Seal Play. An all-star cast has been engaged to support Harlan. It will be remembered that Mr. Harlan achieved some of his most popular work in the comedies of the late Charles Hoyt. He was also principal comedian in support of Elsie Janis in "The Vanderbilt Cup," and has also starred in many Broadway productions.

WORLD FILM GETS A PERPETUAL CONTRACT.

World Film Corporation, through its San Francisco branch, has secured a unique contract. Mr. Locher has signed up the Movie theater, Polk street, San Francisco, for four World Film features per week indefinitely. In other words, he is to run a straight World Film program as long as he can obtain it. To the money drawing powers of World Film features there could not be better testimony.

Clarence A. Frambers

THE well-known photoplaywright, Clarence A. Frambers, has affiliated himself with the Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago in the capacity of scenario editor. His connection with this company was the result of careful selection from a number of successful and well-known men who were thoroughly experienced and well versed in the art of writing scenarios. Mr. Frambers comes well fitted for the position, having over one hundred produced photoplays to his credit.

Clarence A. Frambers.

Through his work as organizer and president of the Photodrama Club of Chicago he is familiar with the efforts of striving photoplaywrights.

In a recent interview Mr. Frambers stated that a photoplay in order to be a success today must have a real plot with fresh ideas, and new situations. "And these fresh ideas," he continued, "in my judgment are not to be obtained from the staff writer or from the noted fiction author, but from the thousands of unknown, aspiring scenario writers."

Mr. Frambers was asked to what he attributed his own remarkable success (from beginner to editor in three years). "Studying the screen and persevering," was his reply. "And, moreover, I began from the bottom for I had absolutely no literary or journalistic experience, and therefore I had to dig everything out for myself."

Although Mr. Frambers is one of the youngest editors in the photoplay field, yet he instantly recognizes a good story when he sees it. This fact, together with his willingness to aid the "coming" photoplaywright, will no doubt stamp with success his efforts in the selection of photoplays.

NAT GOODWIN IN "BUSINESS IS BUSINESS."

Following the production of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "The Little Brother of the Rich," Director Otis Turner will commence the filming of "Business Is Business," in which Nat Goodwin is to be featured. Mr. Bosworth will take over his own company as soon as "The Little Brother of the Rich" is completed and will commence work on a film adaptation of Augustus Thomas' four-act drama, "Colorado," the scenario for which is being prepared by Harvey Gates. F. McGrew Willis is to prepare the script for the Nat Goodwin feature.

Laboratories at Their Best

The Evans Film Manufacturing Company Has Every Device for Turning Out Perfect Prints.

LOCATED at 416 West 216th street, one short block from a subway station, the laboratories of the Evans Film Manufacturing Company, Inc., are equipped with every modern appliance for the developing and printing of motion pictures. Since the buildings were erected, about five years ago, Tom Evans, the head of the concern, has made many improvements and has been careful to test each new device for the betterment of film, with a view of installing it in his plant.

In arranging the rooms on the 216th street site, Mr. Evans profited by the lessons of early film conflagrations and separated the buildings into units so that in the event of a fire the chances of its spreading would be small. The large fireproof vault, of concrete and brick, stands in an open court and has no connection with the other buildings in which the two developing rooms, the rooms for perforating, printing, assembling and drying and the two projection rooms are situated. At present Mr. Evans is experimenting with a new style of square drum of his own design for drying negatives and is finding the results to be highly satisfactory.

The rooms are large, well ventilated, and in passing through them one is impressed by their immaculate cleanliness, also by the smoothness of a system which permits a great amount of work without any apparent hurry or confusion. The management has always followed the theory that however perfect the machinery in a laboratory it is not possible to turn out the best film unless the employees are thoroughly versed in the needs of each department, and during the entire career of the company an effort has been made to train the men and girls into the highest efficiency and then keep them as a permanent asset of the organization. As an outcome of this policy, Mr. Evans has many experts in the laboratory who have been with him since the company was started. He likes to regard it as a family institution in which everybody works willingly for the common aim of producing results that will be a credit to the concern.

During the past week a rush of business has necessitated considerable night work; but, whatever the pressure, the rule of the company that every foot of film shall be projected twice and carefully examined before it leaves the laboratory is never violated. Mr. Evans is himself a technical expert of long experience and he takes pride in having a plant where slipshod workmanship in any department is carefully avoided.

Roberta Hickman

"NOT that gowns can make an actress, but it certainly gives a woman an assurance, and clever is the actress who understands gowning. Men appreciate it and women demand it. Half the world is much more interested in how the other half dresses than how it lives. Today as much care is given to gowning a role for the screen as behind the footlights."

So says Roberta Hickman, of the Bosworth-Morosco studios recognized as among the foremost of well gowned actresses of the screen. For years a musical comedy beauty being one of the most famous show girls on Broadway, Miss Hickman was known as a New York fashion artist.

Roberta Hickman.

In moving pictures she is wearing wonderful Poiret, Baskt and Lucile creations. With Elsie Janis and other stage celebrities who are appearing in current Bosworth-Morosco photoplays, this clever and versatile actress plays important roles and displays gowns that will make the "fan" sit bolt upright in his seat and take notice. Again in "Sunshine Molly," the great photo drama just released by Bosworth, Inc., one sees Miss Hickman emerge as it were, from the cocoon into the gorgeous butterfly. From the slovenly daughter of a poor oil prospector to a society fashion plate when oil is struck and millions are made. It is a great role and Miss Hickman is a clever astress.

CONGRATULATES SELZNICK ON WORLD FILM'S MARVELOUS GROWTH.

W. A. Northam, sales manager of the London Film Company, England, is on a brief visit to the United States. One of his first calls was to the offices of the World Film Corporation, where to the vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, Mr. Selznick, he expressed unbounded astonishment at the remarkable growth of the World Film Corporation.

Mr. Northam saw several World Film features and was enthusiastic over their quality. He congratulated Mr. Selznick on the progress of the company and saw a very prosperous future before it.

NEW PICTURE THEATER FOR ROSEVILLE, CAL.

A picture theater, with a seating capacity of 636 chairs, has recently been opened at Roseville, California, by H. Thiel, of Sacramento.

The new house, which is thoroughly up to date in furnishing and arrangement, has been named "The Optic" and is equipped with a motor generator set and two Powers A machines.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM CHANGED.

New Schedule of Releases Goes Into Effect Week of July 12—Standing Orders to Be Switched.

THE Universal Film Mfg. Company, beginning with the week of July 12, will make a number of changes in its weekly program of releases. The joker brand for Monday will be discontinued, and the Imp for the same day will be transferred to Tuesday, being replaced by a Nestor, which is now released on Tuesday. The Broadway Universal Features will be released on Monday in place of the Victor brand, which is to be transferred to Wednesday supplanting the Laemmle for that day. The Laemmle brand will be released on Thursday in place of the Rex which is to be transferred to Sunday. This will replace the Big U brand for that day which is to be discontinued after the July 11 release, although an occasional Big U multiple reel will be released on Thursdays.

The standing orders from the exchanges for the brands involved in the substitution will be automatically switched to the brands under the new schedule. For instance, if an exchange has a number of standing orders for the Monday Imp brand as it stands at the present time that exchange will be supplied with an equal number of Nestor releases under the new order, and so on with the rest of the brands involved.

The new arrangement will make the Universal program as follows: MONDAY—Broadway Universal Feature and Nestor; TUESDAY—Gold Seal, Rex and Imp; WEDNESDAY—Victor, L-KO and the Animated Weekly; THURSDAY—Laemmle, Big U and Powers; FRIDAY—Imp, Victor and Nestor; SATURDAY—Bison, Powers and Joker; SUNDAY—Rex, Laemmle and L-KO.

ASSOCIATED RELEASE DATE ANNOUNCED.

At the New York offices of the Associated Film Manufacturers, Inc., General Manager Bard announced that the first releases of the new concern, which is to launch a new program of twenty-one reels a week, would occur on or about August 16, 1915.

Several months have already been consumed in surveying the market, and in determining definitely the policy of the new concern. Then production at the plants of the seven contributing companies began, and tentative arrangements were made to begin releasing during July.

This intention was entertained up to a few days ago, when several of the exchange men, who are to handle the Associated service, voiced an opinion that the new service would meet with a better reception in August than it would in the middle of the summer season.

Mr. Bard in deference to their wishes agreed to postpone the initial release dates. "The extra month," said Mr. Bard, "will be used to advantage, bringing every department of our organization to a higher state of preparedness so that when we once begin releasing, work will go forward without delay or interruption."

GOOD ADVERTISTING PAYS.

Arthur K. Watson, advertising manager of the Princess Theater in Orange, Tex., is a believer in advertising, and in connection with the exhibition of "Graustark," the six-part Essanay V-L-S-E attraction, he got out a one-sheet poster advising that the admission price to the Princess Theater would be doubled during the engagement of this feature.

The one-sheet also stated in no uncertain language that any patrons dissatisfied with the exhibition would have their money refunded upon request at the box office.

The appearance of the one-sheets attracted wide attention, and a number of the business men in Orange were, at first, of the opinion that the statements it contained were too strong.

Mr. Watson's judgment was upheld, however, by the immense crowd that was attracted to the theater, and the fact that no requests were made for a refund.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" SOUVENIR.

At the Liberty theater, New York City, on June 10, beautiful souvenirs were distributed commemorating the two hundredth performance of the Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation." The souvenir was in the shape of a de luxe program bound in vellum, stamped with green and gold. The frontispiece is a good likeness of the producer, David Griffith, which, like the other illustrations in the program, has a tone like the old time wood cut. After an interesting introduction, the story of the film is told, with the Stars and Stripes in red, white and blue, forming a beautiful initial letter a half page deep. The workmanship is high class and was turned out by the Epoc Producing Corporation.

Church and School Film Bureau

Lewis J. Selznick Becomes Member of Advisory Board—World Film Endorses Great Educational Motion Picture Campaign.

SCHOOLS and churches, to the number of scores if not hundreds of thousands cover the United States, and motion picture manufacturers have for years tried to get their films shown in them.

The Church and School Social Service Bureau brings the film manufacturers and the church and school authorities of the country into contact. Dr. William Carter, the president of the bureau, has the endorsement and support of a Board of Directors in which there are prominent publicists like Dr. Parkhurst; Hamilton Holt, editor of the Independent; George T. Brokaw and others. There are also Biblical, missionary, education and sociological educational boards of clergymen and educationalists.

Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, has been invited to join the advisory board of the bureau, and in a letter of acceptance states:

"The educational and religious fields are the only two that have not been developed by the motion picture art and yet are almost sure to prove the most permanent and profitable. . . . I have absolute belief and confidence in your movement and in the men who are associated with you."

Mr. Selznick has placed the World Film Corporation's knowledge or experience in regard to technical and practical matters at the disposal of the bureau.

Tyrone Power in "Mizpah"

TYRONE POWER, the distinguished actor, may hereafter devote his entire artistic endeavor to motion picture work. "I am of the opinion," said Mr. Power, whom William Winter dubbed as "one of America's greatest actors," "that the animated screen presents as great if not greater possibilities for histrionic art than the legitimate stage. The more I see of motion picture work the more infatuated I become. Motion pictures are a power for uplift and the fact that Colonel William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, is known for his artistic ideals and for his policy of sparing no expense in the production of worthy pictures, makes my affiliation with the Selig Company all that can be desired."

Tyrone Power.

Mr. and Mrs. Tyrone Power and infant son are now living in Los Angeles, Cal., where Mr. Power is engaged in enacting an important role in the forthcoming Selig Red Seal spectacular production, "Mizpah," written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Miss Kathlyn Williams and an all-star cast will also be seen in this wonderful production.

As "Maverick Brander," in "A Texas Steer," to be released July 26 through V-L-S-E, Inc., as a Selig Red Seal play, Mr. Power presents some of the best character delineation in a long and distinguished career. As the kindly Cattle King, of Texas, who breaks into Washington society, Mr. Power provokes both tears and laughter. He has purchased an automobile and is greatly enjoying life in California.

BRADY MAKING "SINS OF SOCIETY."

The William A. Brady Picture Plays Corporation has begun work in its Fort Lee studio upon the production in moving picture form of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "The Sins of Society," and "Shall We Forgive Her," the most successful of the Frank Harvey plays. The camera productions are being made under arrangement with A. W. Dingwall and Joseph Brooks, owners of the American rights in the original plays.

Hodkinson is Dined

A Little Surprise Dinner Given in His Honor at the Hotel Claridge.

TO TAKE his first rest since the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, W. W. Hodkinson, its president, left for a six weeks' trip to California and other points west at 5 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, June 20. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hodkinson and his son. While the trip is primarily for pleasure, he has so many interests en route, that it will be almost impossible for him to entirely escape business matters, and he will undoubtedly have something to say about film conditions throughout the country on his return.

A few moments before his departure, he received a message from M. A. Cory, requesting him to speak at the business session of the National Motion Picture League Convention in San Francisco, at which, according to Mr. Cory's telegram, the largest and choicest floor space has been reserved for the Paramount Pictures Corporation. He replied that he would make every effort to do so.

On Friday evening, June 18, he was given a surprise dinner at the Hotel Claridge by his department heads. Owing to the phenomenal growth of Paramount, as he himself said, it was the first time he had ever seen them all gathered at one time and place. The spirit of the dinner was co-operation. In this connection, the editorial printed in the little booklet gotten out for the occasion, tells the story:

After years of thought and unremitting labor, W. W. Hodkinson, founder of the Paramount Corporation and originator of the Paramount Idea, is tonight with those he has taken into the Paramount fold.

If they have been of service to him in the past they are glad. They realize that his has been by far the greater burden.

Here tonight they gather to wish him bon voyage, to assure him that nothing is too much for him to ask of them that they may take their share of the load—it matters not how heavy it may be.

The men are together. They are strong for each other and for Paramount. They are willing to work any number of hours for any number of days to spread the gospel of Paramount throughout the length and breadth of the United States, from one side of the world to the other.

It is clear that the bearings of the great machine, which has for the past year been fast gathering speed, are perfectly oiled and that from now on a concerted attack will be made, the result of which will be an increase in the number of big theaters throughout the United States showing Paramount pictures.

Asking Mr. Hodkinson to keep the evening open, as there were many matters which he would like to go over with him, Raymond Pawley, treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, succeeded in bringing him to the Hotel Claridge without his suspecting what was in the wind, and in luring him into the elevator and up to the private room where the rest of the company was gathered and the table set.

On the four walls were the following legends:

(1) Bell was the father of the Telephone; Edison of the Phonograph; Hodkinson of the Quality Programme.
(2) He came 3,000 miles bringing an idea for every mile.
(3) W. W. H. in "His First Release."
(4) He believes in Organization Co-Operation; so do we.

Mr. Pawley acted as toastmaster and first, of course, called on Mr. Hodkinson. Though the latter had not yet recovered from the first surprise, in his quiet way he made an exceedingly graceful speech and was visibly pleased by the spirit of the dinner. Mr. Pawley then asked the various department heads to say a few words, and next presented Mr. Hodkinson with an umbrella and cane in token of the esteem in which he is held by his staff. In acknowledging them, he was too deeply moved to say more than "I thank you with all my heart."

"He's a Jolly Good Fellow" was next rendered by the chorus and principals and the party broke up. It was a purely informal family affair. Those present were: W. W. Hodkinson, William L. Sherry, James C. Meyers, W. E. Green, Raymond Pawley, Jane Standard Johnson, T. S. Barrett, J. H. MacPhee, Jack Eaton, J. H. MacFarland, Louis Loeb, George M. Welty, Tarleton Winchester, George R. Meeker, Frank D. Sniffen, Howard Spaulding, Vincent Trotta.

ADA GLEASON AND ELSIE JANE WILSON WITH UNIVERSAL.

Ada Gleason, former star of the spoken drama and a well-known stock player in Chicago and the East, has left the Selig company and hereafter will play in Murdock MacQuarrie's company at Universal City.

Elsie Jane Wilson, who played the lead with the "Everywoman" legitimate company and is well known on the Australian stage, has arrived in Universal City, where she will play leading roles in the place of Pauline Bush with Joseph De Grasse.

Dinner to W. W. Hodkinson.

Rosenbluh Has Feature Plan

Greater New York Film Exchange Manager Organizes the Variety Film Corporation.

"PAY for what you get—but get what you pay for!" That summarizes the plans of the Variety Film Corporation of 126 West 46th street, New York City. While this concern is a new name to filmdom, it is new in name only, for in its management and personnel it is a classic. That is vested in Louis Rosenbluh, widely known as one of the pioneer exchange men, who started as an exhibitor years ago with William Fox. Together they operated theaters, then opened the Greater New York Film Rental Co., of which Mr. Rosenbluh has been general manager. As Mr. Fox's activities widened, Mr. Rosenbluh remained the active head in the exchange end of the business and the Greater New York today has sixteen distributing branches scattered throughout the country. Under his guidance the concern has weathered terrific competition and his activities have built a strong bond between exhibitors and the Greater New York. As a result of his experience—his wide knowledge of the requirements of the exhibitor, he has been able to keep a second ahead of the day and in launching the newest class system of film supply he follows the conclusions of deep study.

Louis Rosenbluh.

"The basic commercial weakness of the film business is the impossibility of a uniform product," says Mr. Rosenbluh in explaining his new plan. "It is an uncertainty due to the fact that all feature producers are bound to fluctuate in the quality of their product. The best director in the world will occasionally turn out a weak number and what is the result? For years I have watched exhibitors paying for a brand and a date. One week they will be satisfied and the next they will be disappointed. The price they pay is regulated by the age of the picture and beyond that, both the exhibitor and the renter strike a stone wall. For while renter agrees in the principle that a weak picture is not worth the price paid for a good production, it must be borne in mind that he pays the same price for all of them.

"I have found a way out of it and Variety Class Films will be the practice of the preachment. I hold open to producers the gateway to the market. I offer to exhibitors pictures in single and multiple reels which they pay for only according to the class of the picture. Length does not make a film a feature, and only the quality of the offering will determine what class the picture shall belong in. I note that in the past and even today an attempt is being made to create class A and B in feature subjects, but from my experience I contend that such division falls short of requirements. Class as to quality alone allows of at least six divisions and length provides six more and the character of a subject should provide another half dozen. I believe that thorough classification is the final answer to the 'get what you pay for' rule that regulates other lines of business. You can manufacture hosiery, for instance, at a uniform cost. You know while making it what it will bring in the market; but never so with films, because a very fine effective picture might have cost less to make than a big pretentious subject which falls flat. Now, each of these has its market and fairness dictates that they bring revenue according to results, not according to expense sheets.

"I have spent many weeks examining subjects made by free lance makers who ask nothing more than modest profit as an incentive to continue in the field. I am bound to say there can be no shortage of excellent pictures. I was angered at the high quality and the unquestionable responsibility that I met. In fact, I have already secured a few subjects from these sources. Among them is a four-reel version of 'Enoch Arden,' which will take quarter from none I have ever seen; I might say that 'Harbor Lights' and 'In the Ranks' are the titles of two more which are fit to support any program in existence. I have also secured some films showing daring work with wild beasts that will give recommendation to any source of supply. I have decided to open the door wide on the basis that the exhibitor pays for no more than he receives and the maker gets what his efforts deserve. Date of release will be no element of consideration and just as there will be no limit on length, so will I accept all classes of subjects, from scenics to classics."

Mr. Rosenbluh says that film makers desiring releases are welcome to conult him personally, his projection rooms being ready at all hours for inspection of film.

Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Nielsen in New York

Successful Chicago Motion Picture Man and His Wife Seeing the Sights and Selling Film.

ONE of the visitors in film circles in this city for the past week has been the progressive Chicago exhibitor and film man, F. O. Nielsen. He has been combining a little pleasure with business and finding time to see some of the sights of the big city with Mrs. Nielsen. Arrangements in regard to his big patriotic feature, "Guarding Old Glory," brought him East, and he expects to dispose of both home and foreign rights before returning to Chicago. The national and even world-wide interest in the subject of our national defence makes this five reel production of the greatest possible interest right now.

F. O. Nielsen's biggest achievement perhaps has been the success he has enabled exhibitors to achieve with "The Spoilers," the rights for which he controls for Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois, except Cook County. An experienced exhibitor himself, his knowledge of high class picture theater management has enabled him to demonstrate to any number of timid and skeptical exhibitors the fact that their audiences are only too glad to pay bigger prices for film productions that are worth while. For this reason houses all over his territory who never before got over ten cents for admission have done capacity business with "The Spoilers" at a minimum price of twenty-five cents.

F. O. Nielsen.

A Remarkable Example.

One of the best examples of nerve in this connection is the case of a lady manager in Monmouth, Ill., a town of 9,000, with a seating capacity of only 247. She rented "The Spoilers" for three days at $100 per day, followed that with a return engagement for two days at a reduced rental, followed that again with another day at a still lower figure and dumfounded Mr. Nielsen's Chicago office by requesting a fourth engagement of one more day as she still felt she had not "got them all." During this final run she telegraphed, "Have them standing up and believe I have got them all at last." Compared with this in a small town, our runs in New York City of a few months at $2 per does not seem so very wonderful. Against this example, however, might be mentioned the case of a manager of a chain of good sized houses who booked the same film in a house of 1,000 seats and wanted to reduce the admission price at the last moment as he felt that the price of twenty-five cents would result in a total frost, and who was only convinced when his receipts ran over $600 the first day and went over $400 the third day.

"Get a production that you believe in, then stand back of it and give it sufficient publicity and you are bound to win," is Mr. Nielsen's formula for success, but we are inclined to point out that back of all this should be the boundless enthusiasm and unwavering belief in the merits of high class film programs that literally radiates from this worthy Chicago representative of the moving picture business.

Elmer Booth Killed

Prominent Comedian Is the Victim of a Fatal Los Angeles Auto Accident.

BROADWAY heard with regret last week the confirmation of the rumor that Elmer Booth, long prominent as a comedian, met death in an automobile accident in Los Angeles Wednesday, June 16. Tod Browning and George Seigmann, well known photoplay directors and actors, were injured at the same time. All three were employed by D. W. Griffith at the Mutual Film Corporation's Hollywood studios. Browning and Seigmann are both in the California Hospital, and it is hoped that their injuries will not prove serious. Booth leaves a mother and sister, who live in Los Angeles. The accident was due to a heavy fog. The car, driven by Browning, collided with a street work car loaded with iron rails. Browning did not see the rear lamp on the street car.

The Late Elmer Booth.

Elmer Booth was born in Los Angeles where he qualified, on his graduation from St. Vincent's College, as an authority on physical culture, oratory and elocution. These three subjects he taught for some time before Oliver Morosco persuaded him to go on the stage. Later he appeared under Charles Frohman's management with Arnold Daly in "The Boys of Company B." With Douglas Fairbanks in "The Cad" he made a pronounced hit, and in "The Gentleman of Leisure" he was declared by Alan Dale to be "The best stage burglar Broadway has seen to date—he lives his part instead of acting it." He created the name part in "Stop Thief" and became a popular favorite. During his summers he worked under D. W. Griffith in motion pictures, and appeared with Mary Pickford and May Irwin in film dramas. He also made a name for himself as a magazine writer.

Mary Pickford and Company Return

Will Produce Feature Subject En Route—Adolph Zukor Remains in Los Angeles.

MARY PICKFORD, the foremost exponent of the screen, accompanied by her mother, and her director, Allan Dwan, and a supporting company, has left the Los Angeles studios of the Famous Players and is on her way to the New York headquarters of the company. Miss Pickford has been in California since last November, during which time many of the recent screen triumphs in which she has been starred by the Famous Players, as well as a number of the subjects in which she will shortly be presented, were produced.

A novel incident connected with the trip is that Miss Pickford and her company will enact a feature film story en route from California to New York. A special story was devised for this purpose, so constructed that the plot begins in the west and terminates in New York, where the subsequent scenes will be produced. The subject will be produced under the direction of Allan Dwan, who has produced in California two of the most recent Pickford subjects, not yet scheduled for release.

Upon the arrival of Miss Pickford and Allan Dwan, preparations will be made for another unusual production starring Mary Pickford. This will be an elaborate photo-production entitled "Miss Jinny," a tenement story from the pen of Edith Barnard Delano, the author of another forthcoming Pickford production, "Rags," to be released August 2.

At the conclusion of this subject, Mr. Dwan will direct Miss Pickford in a series of important screen vehicles, notable among which will be "The Heart of Sally Temple," the famous novel and play by Rupert Sargent Holland, and "Audrey," adapted from the famous novel by Mary Johnson and the play by Harriet Ford.

Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players, who arrived in Los Angeles about two weeks ago, on his annual trip to the Coast studios, will remain in California with Mrs. Zukor and his son and daughter three or four weeks longer. His purpose for this long sojourn at the Coast is, as was announced upon his departure from New York City, to complete negotiations for the purchase of a large tract of ground in California, whereon the Famous Players intend to erect three separate studios, so equipped as to enable them to adequately produce the important series of subjects planned for creation at the Coast studios during the coming year.

Griffith's New Production

Master Producer's Next Subject Will Be "The Mother and the Law."

D. W. GRIFFITH, the master producer, has just decided upon his next multiple reel feature to follow "The Birth of a Nation." Its title is to be "The Mother and the Law." He is now at the Griffith headquarters, the Reliance-Majestic studios in Hollywood, Los Angeles, California. He is in the midst of preparations for the filming of "The Mother and the Law."

The plot and the theme other than as indicated in the title have not been announced, but will be made known at the proper time. Mr. Griffith has, however, selected his cast. Prominent among the Griffith players, who are to appear before the camera in "The Mother and the Law," are Mae Marsh, the Griffith actress, who will be remembered as Florence Cameron in "The Birth of a Nation"; Robert Harron, who has appeared in the Griffith features "The Battle of the Sexes," "Judith of Bethula," "The Escape," "The Avenged Conscience" and "Home, Sweet Home'; Miriam Cooper, who has a prominent role in "The Birth of a Nation"; Mary Alden, remembered for the performance of the mulatto in "The Birth of a Nation," and as the mother in "The Battle of the Sexes"; Ralph Lewis, prominent in "The Birth of a Nation," and Walter Long, the "Gus" in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Griffith is determined that "The Mother and the Law" shall maintain the same high standing of "The Birth of a Nation," which is playing to two dollar prices in some of the principal cities of the country.

Some of Mr. Griffith's experiences subsequent to the filming of "The Birth of a Nation" will be related by him at the National Exhibitors' Convention, which is to be in session in San Francisco from July 13 to July 16. Mr. Griffith is to speak of censorship "and the rise and fall of free speech and personal liberty in America." It is declared that it is his intention to cite his recent experiences in Chicago and New York with the Censorship Board when an effort was made to prevent the showing of "The Birth of a Nation." Despite the opposition it will be recalled that "The Birth of a Nation" is now showing at the Tremont theater in Boston, at the Liberty theater in New York and the Illinois theater in Chicago at two dollar prices.

Pictures at Grand Central Palace

Three Complete Programs Are Projected Simultaneously on Main Floor of Large Building.

LARGE audiences have been the rule since moving pictures were installed at Grand Central Palace, New York, on a novel basis, whereby three programs of seven reels each may be seen for one admission charge of ten cents. In addition to the screen entertainment, Manager Harry H. Lichtig has made another bid for popular favor by inaugurating departments for the revision and circulation of scenarios written by patrons, and for the assistance of those who wish to become actors, or to become connected with the picture industry in other capacities. Mr. Lichtig declares that the effort to make those departments useful is sincere.

As furnished at present there are seats for 1,600 people with plenty of space allowed for broad aisles so that there will be no confusion among the spectators in passing from one show to another. Brilliant lighting in the hall does not interfere with the sharpness of the pictures shown on the screens at the north side. Two are projected from the rear of the screens, the third from the mezzanine floor, Powers 6A machines being used in each instance. Music is supplied by a Wurlitzer organ and an effort is made to choose selections that will harmonize with all of the subjects. The programs are so arranged that the feature dramas are on the screens at the same time, likewise the comedies and news weeklies. The bills are changed every Sunday and Thursday. A number of World Film stars appeared in person on the opening night, June 17, among them Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick and Katherine Osterman.

Reviews of Current Productions

"The Flying Twins"

Four-Reel Mutual Masterpicture of Interesting Personality and Well-Chosen Scenic Effects.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is a sincerity in this visualization which is rarely seen in products of the kind, and which deserves high commendation because it indicates a progressive tendency. It is simply the story of two attractive young girls who run away from rural life and enter upon a series of adventures while following the fortunes of a traveling circus.

Scene from "The Flying Twins" (Mutual).

The girls are veritable twins, of personality most fascinating—their movements indicate that they have learned to think in unison, and their united individuality is of a sweet and wholesome kind. Around their adventures a story has been built, but it is plainly of the kind manufactured to suit the occasion. It will do for the occasion, but taste in treatment barely saves it from the great commonplace mass written by people of more ambition than ability.

A similar amount of genuine craftsmanship shown in handling a story of theme, of purpose, of sympathetic feeling, of soul, would result in a much higher quality of production. Such stories will continue to be scarce and grow more so under present conditions. Such capable treatment as that given "The Flying Twins"—there is both beauty and consistency of interpretation—is of high value, but it is only part of a whole, the major part of which is embraced in the subject matter to be visualized. There is a tremendous demand for this form of publication—the difficulty is to get hold of something worth publishing. That will come in time—it is bound to come—when professional authors, who nearly always have a superabundance of material far beyond their literary requirements learn to frame their conceptions so that they can be economically and effectively prepared for screen representation, and when authorship is acknowledged and respected in this new art as it is in the older ones.

Meanwhile, there is hope in the constant development of quality in studio craftsmanship, such as is plainly shown in "The Flying Twins."

"The Garden of Lies"

High-Pitched Romance in Five Reels Is Offering of Broadway-Universal Features.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

NUMEROUS circumstances conspire to give unusual interest to this romantic offering in five reels. It was adapted to the screen by Louis Reeves Harrison from one of the best novels written by the late Justus Miles Forman, who went down with the Lusitania. The leading lady is Jane Cowl, who starred in "Within the Law." It features also William Russell and Violet Horner, two capable film performers.

But of first importance is the fact that it is a good, lively story. It has, of course, as do most highly seasoned love narratives, a flavor of the impossible about it. It out-Zendas Zenda in its unusual premises. But once it gets into action, all that follows is made to seem plausible and it carries the interest along without halt or hesitation to the end.

The story begins by picturing Eleanor Mannering, an American girl, still suffering from the effects of an automobile accident. As a result of this accident she has completely lost all recollection of the appearance of her husband, Prince Carl of Novodna, to whom she had just been married. The prince has been called home, and as she continually asks for her husband in her delirium her friends induce a young American soldier of fortune, named Dennis Mallory, to pose as the prince.

The deception is entered into with reluctance on his part, but later, as he walks with Eleanor in the garden, he falls violently in love with her and she with him. She imagines him to be the prince, and at this juncture the real prince returns unexpectedly.

This brings on a train of spirited events. When confronted by the real prince, Eleanor does not remember him. The meeting is dramatically pictured. A duel follows between the real husband and the American. The latter disarms his opponent, but allows him to flee without injury.

A demand is made upon the prince by his friends that he either give up his wife or abdicate his throne. To this he makes absolute refusal, and during his mad rages Eleanor learns of the deception that has been practiced upon her. By a discriminating choice of subtitles the fine points of honor in this entanglement are kept plainly before the observer. Eleanor sends both the prince and the American away, unable to see her way out of the affair. Later she is abducted and carried to a deserted castle. The American follows and battles valiantly to save her. In this fight the prince is killed and the American dangerously wounded. He calls for Eleanor and she goes to his bedside, thus bringing the story to a happy close.

Other characters in the cast, which is not a large one, are played by Philip Hahn, Ethelbert Hale, David Wall, Claude Cooper and Adele Carson. The settings are not particularly sumptuous, but pleasing throughout.

"My Best Girl"

Five-Part Picture Produced by B. A. Rolfe with Max Figman and Lois Meredith in the Cast.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

MAX FIGMAN is the star in this B. A. Rolfe production, prepared for release on the Metro program. Lois Meredith is first in his support and included in the company are Lawrence Peyton, Dick Rosson, Jane Waller, Tom Delmar, Carl Stockdale, and William Ryno. "My Best Girl" starts off as a story of college life and in the course of its five-reel duration pretty well runs the gamut of photoplay entertainment; changing, when occasion requires, to melodrama, sentiment, comedy and every now and again, straight farce. These rapid shifts in tone and the somewhat too involved plot, are a bit bewildering and destructive to the unity of impression valuable in any work of art. None the less the picture is reasonably entertaining.

It is not inconceivable that a spectator may fail to grasp the ins and outs of the complex love affairs, yet failing in this, remain to enjoy the entirely obvious comedy in which Mr. Figman, as Richard Vanderfelt, takes a leading part. Expelled from college, Richard celebrates at a gay supper party terminating in a brawl. The following morning he awakes to find himself in bed with a chauffeur and to avoid arrest for assault, he suggests changing identities with his bedfellow, not realizing that he is choosing the greater of two evils, for the chauffeur, it seems, is a deserter from the army and Richard, impersonating him, is packed off to the guard house.

From here on, experiencing the trials of a soldier undergoing punishment, Mr. Figman has his best comedy opportunities. His dream of heroic acts when called to war, while having no real bearing on the story, is filled with ludicrous incidents to which any audience will respond. Probably the best laugh in the picture comes when the make-believe soldier, concealed behind the underbrush on a hillside, kills an entire company of the enemy by dropping a little bomb on the road in front of them. Incidents such as this—the comedy incidents—are more of an asset to the picture than the story of the professor of chemistry, who invents a powerful explosive and then dies of joy and heart failure when continued life would have been blessed by a fortune. This sort of thing has happened too often—in pictures.

"The Wild Olive"

A Five-Part Screen Version of Basil King's Sensational Novel, Released on the Paramount Program by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is almost an embarrassment of riches in the way of dramatic situations to confront the adapter of Basil King's novel, when turned into a photoplay. Elmer E. Harris has made his selections judiciously, however, and the result is a pleasantly entertaining story, in which several people figure who are well worth knowing. This is especially true of Miriam Strange, the girl from whose character the novel takes its name. The author has sketched her with a loving hand and she does credit to his fine conception of true womanhood. Myrtle Stedman, who plays the part on the screen, has caught the spirit of Mr. King's heroine perfectly, and embodies her with many touches of her own personality, that serve to add to Miriam's beauty and charm. There is an artistic restraint in her acting that is highly commendable.

Taken strictly as drama, "The Wild Olive" is not remarkable. It does not develop any unusual dramatic strength, and the complications follow a familiar trail through the lurking places of thrills, false accusation, and misplaced affection—a trail which leads triumphantly into the land of the lovers' desire. Starting near a lumber camp in the Alleghanies, the scenes have a picturesque variety, and include glimpses of Buenos Ayres and New York City social life. Oliver Morosco has intrusted the production of the picture to the thoroughly competent hands of the Bosworth Company, and each of the five reels is a photographic prize winner.

Forrest Stanley, who plays Norrie Ford, the young New Yorker, accused of killing his uncle, the bullying lumber camp boss, and is befriended by Miriam, who finally becomes his wife, realizes the physical demands of the character admirably and gives a good account of himself as an actor. Mary Ruby, as Evie Wayne, makes Norrie Ford's brief infatuation for her quite plausible. Charles Marriott, as Judge Wayne, and Edmund Lowe, as Charles Conquest, contribute meritorious performances.

"Hiding From the Law"

Two-Reel Kalem Picture in Florida Backgrounds With Alice Nilsson and Guy Coombs, Script by Mrs. Owen Bronson.

IN this picture, "Hiding From the Law," two lives go awry through unhappy marriages, but, by turn of fate, the right man and the right woman are brought together without guilt. The theme has not been relentlessly handled and is in no sense gripping; yet it is not without interest. The backgrounds are good, bits of Florida back-country for the most part and are more attractive than those of most pictures. The acting is also above the average; but the direction while keeping the general drift of the story clear and showing now and then bright moments of effective drama making, is not powerful. The offering gets the attention, but fails to touch the deeper sympathies.

Guy Coombs, who also directs the picture, has the leading man's role as a surgeon married to a flighty, selfish woman (Marjory Cohan). He falls sick and a friend advises him to take six months off in the woods. At home in the city, the wife nourishes an ambition for the stage and conspires with some not very reputable friends of hers to procure a divorce so that she can become an actress without let or hindrance.

Things in the mountain village have made this easy. There, a one-time school teacher (Alice Nilsson) has married herself to a woodsman (John E. Mackin), who drinks and disgusts her. The surgeon has taken an interest in her (this is the old story, but is used to bridge the more sensational things) and his giving her books has awakened the jealousy of her loving husband. We begin to see how much of a brute he is. The woman flees from his drunken, jealous rage, and in the moonlit woods falls and breaks her ankle. Next morning, the surgeon finds her and takes her to his cabin, where he binds her foot and makes her comfortable. The next night, the husband learns of it and comes to make trouble; is knocked on the head in a fight and left for dead by the surgeon, who should have known better. A few bold and unexpected situations lead to the happy ending. It seems a rather fortuitous coming together of incidents and, as we said, it fails to get deep into one's emotions, though it holds the attention, in this part especially, very well.

"The Spendthrift"

Porter Emerson Browne's Famous Drama Powerfully Visualized in Six Parts by George Kleine, with Irene Fenwick in the Titular Role.

HAVE you ever been so thoroughly entertained, in any manner, that when recalling your mental and emotional experiences you found it difficult just where and how to begin to describe those experiences in a worthy manner? That is just how I feel in beginning to write my review of "The Spendthrift." There is so little of praise to be withheld and so much of commendation to bestow, in the case of this fine production, that there is a tendency to become fulsome, and that one must never do, out of sheer respect for the subject and one's self.

The overpowering impression after viewing these films is one of complete satisfaction with the clear, continuous unfolding of the story and with the constantly increasing grip that it exerts. Not a dull moment did I experience throughout the many scenes. The unraveling of the plot exerts its deep spell and the strong heart interest plays on the emotions here and there with masterful touches. In the final scene the story makes its strongest appeal and the dramatic effort creates the finest emotional effect—which is saying a great deal for the construction of the scenario and its production in moving pictures.

Attention must be drawn to the nice care exercised, in the smallest details, in the production of "The Spendthrift." I will refer particularly to one instance that commands special attention, viz.: to the scene in which Suffern Thorne, the wealthy clubman, sends out his valet to his bank to get a check for $20,000 cashed, in order to meet the request of Frances Ward, who borrows that amount to save her husband from bankruptcy. It is the usual custom, in such a case, to have the servant go out and return, as a matter of course, with twenty $1,000 bills. Not so, however, under George Kleine's business eye. We see the valet go into the bank and present the check at the telling cashier's window. There we note that he is subjectd to quiet, but none the less keen scrutiny; and we make note also that the teller is a typical official of his kind. Then we see the teller consult with a higher official, with the result that a trusted bank messenger steps in front of the window, where the money is paid over to him, and he orders the valet to accompany him to the apartments of Mr. Thorne. Here we have accurate adherence to what would occur, under the circumstances, if an unknown man presented a check for so large an amount at any reputable bank, in the course of actual business.

The same nice attention to detail is observed in the settings of the scenes in this production, both exterior and interior. I will refer to the offices of Richard Ward, the broker, and to the various rooms in the Ward home. I would also invite particular attention to the interior showing the models wearing the latest and most fashionable styles in women's gowns, in that scene where Suffern Thorne is having a special exhibition for the benefit of one of his actress friends. I understand that this scene was taken in Lady Duff Gordon's famous establishment, on 57th street and Fifth avenue. It is a treat in feminine sartorial elegance.

In "The Spendthrift," Irene Fenwick has truly come into her own in moving pictures. I have seen her on the screen in "The Commuters," but there with no such display of grace, beauty and photodramatic powers of acting as are revealed in the subject under discussion. As Frances Ward, the married woman with the pure, girlish heart, who acts on impulse with never a thought of consequences, Miss Fenwick is a winsome and delightful, though sometimes a disturbing creature. One feels sorry for that much tried husband when he receives a message over the 'phone from her, asking for $3,000 over her allowance to pay bills for the pretty things that caught her fancy, when he and his friends are trying hard to extricate his affairs from inevitable bankruptcy.

In the midnight scene, in the Ward home, where her jealous husband has, through her, entrapped Suffern Thorne and threatens him with death at pistol point, Miss Fenwick thrills us by flights from a dazed mental condition to emotional despair. In the closing scene her absolute abhorrence of reconciliation with the husband who has outraged all the finer feelings of her pure woman's nature is brought out with strong emphasis.

The variety and beauty of the costumes worn by Miss Fenwick in this photodrama cannot fail to excite the admiration of the fair sex.

Cyril Keightley impersonates Richard Ward, the husband of Frances, with competent art, and John Nicholson is always pleasing in the part of Phil Cartwright, Richard's confidential lawyer and friend.

Two of the best drawn characters in the production are Suffern Thorne and Aunt Gretchen, by Roy Pilcher and Matty Ferguson. I cannot recall an impersonation that has more impressed me by its uniform art than Mr. Pilcher's Suffern Thorne. He positively lives the part of the polished and wealthy bachelor club member, who never quite loses his poise and who never loses that air of distinction that marks him the gentleman born.

Miss Ferguson's creation will be hugely enjoyed by all who see these films. In places the character is a little overdrawn, but those who can laugh at these spots will never know the difference. Miss Viola Savoy looks sweet in the girlish part of Clarice, and Malcolm Duncan carries the role of young Monty Ward with fine manly bearing.

"Under Two Flags"

Ouida's Novel Is the Basis for Finely Produced Three-Part Biograph Drama.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AMONG the most ambitious of recent Biograph productions is this three-part version of Ouida's novel, "Under Two Flags," a highly colored romance, which, in turn, becomes a colorful picture, remarkable for the beauty of its settings, for the wealth of atmosphere attained and for artistic detail. The story, as constructed for portrayal in three thousand feet of film, presents some difficulties, owing to the number of characters and their rapidly shifting fortunes, necessitating much explanatory action preparatory to the exciting incidents which are numerous enough when the plot is fairly launched. Finely presented at all times, the dramatic value of the picture increases during the second and third reels, laid in a country designated as Algiers.

It is here that we meet Cigarette, the pet of the army, and follow the fortunes of Bertie Cecil, who has long since left his native England because of the scandal caused by his brother's gambling. As a French soldier he incurs the wrath of Black Hawk, and sentenced to death for striking a superior officer, Cigarette undertakes to save him. Her ride across the desert with the pardon that will prevent Cecil's execution, brings some of the most remarkable scenes in the production. Caught in a sandstorm—vividly depicted—her horse blinded by the sand and fagged to exhaustion, she is aided by Arabs. On a fresh mount, she continues her journey and reaches the soldiers' quarters just in time to throw herself in front of the condemned man and fall under the shots intended for him.

Scene from "Under Two Flags" (Biograph).

The interest attaching to these scenes, not especially novel in plot substance, is due in no small degree to the carefully calculated effects—scenic and dramatic—achieved by the producer and to the force of the acting. Louise Vale is capital as Cigarette; Franklin Ritchie as Bertie and Herbert Barrington as Black Hawk, figure to good purpose in the action, and other essential characters are correctly presented by Jack Drumier, Helen Bray and Charles H. Mailes. There is more real photoplay material in this picture than one generally finds in a five-reel offering. The sandstorm in the desert is in itself enough to distinguish the production as something out of the ordinary.

"Little Teacher"

Two-Reel Keystone of Drift Toward a Higher Form of Comedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ALTHOUGH farce-comedies are supposedly written on the director's cuff, such is far from being the actual case in recent Keystone development, and "Little Teacher" is one of many which reveal a tendency from ridicule of the inferior, in which primary instincts are held up to ridicule, toward a finer form of humor, such as that which made Dickens so popular. Although we laugh at Pickwick, we have a sneaking regard for him in spite of our sense of superiority, just as we feel the common humanity so wondrously portrayed in "Huckleberry Finn." Mack Sennat must be under a constant strain to keep his audiences laughing at farcial situations, even with the aid of Mabel Normand and Roscoe Arbuckle in fine working order.

Mabel is a treasure in her way, an acrobat who photographs well in any guise and a natural born actress as well as a constant delight to the eye, and Arbuckle is a glutton for hard work, a tireless enthusiast in love with his profession from a point of view in front. These two are quite capable of responding when the time comes to the requirements of high comedy, such as Owen Moore probably recalls when he was playing with Florence Lawrence, Mary Pickford and other veritable artists of the screen in the Biograph Company under Griffith. "The Little Teacher" inclines to picturing the humorous side of human character, and it affords an opportunity, now all too rare, for the audience to see Mabel in what appears to be her native element. Sennet will gain ground, rather than lose it, by this gradual change, as the day of farce comedy is getting rather dim.

"The Heart of Lady Alaine"

Betty Nansen Appears in Elaborate Great Northern Drama of the French Revolution Period.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"THE HEART OF LADY ALAINE," or "A Revolutionary Wedding" is no doubt one of the most satisfactory of photoplay treatments of a story laid in the days of the French Revolution. It is an adaptation of "A Son of the People," a drama by Sophies Michaelis, introduced in this country at the New Theater. As presented by the Great Northern Company in four reels, with Betty Nansen playing Lady Alaine, the picture deserves every success, because of the combination of artistic virtues—a lavish production replete with beautiful scenes, a story somewhat out of the ordinary and acting in every respect meritorious. Miss Nansen has appeared in roles of greater emotional possibilities; none the less, opportunities for telling bits of character portrayal are not lacking in the part of Lady Alaine and she realizes them to the full.

A summary of the good points of this production, however, —considering them in the order of their importance—might give first place to the high accomplishment of the director in finding just the right settings and furnishings for the period; in seeing to it that all of the costumes were in keeping and in getting convincing results from a large company of players. The resources of a well equipped studio were utilized with discrimination in the making of this elaborate picture.

An odd feature of the story, especially when one considers that it fills four reels, is the brief time in which the action is encompassed. Less than twenty-four hours elapse between the first scenes, showing the marriage of Lady Alaine to a young Bourbon Marquis and the last, in which Marc Arron, a republican officer, sacrifices himself for love of the fair Alaine. This economy of time suggests a fairly close adherence to the structure of the original play. But it must not be supposed that there is a dearth of incidents with which to occupy the eventful night of the wedding and the morning following. The revolutionists interrupt the party, the Marquis is sentenced to death and his wife determines to save him; but in so doing she discovers that he is something of a coward and that her love naturally goes out to Marc Arron, who responds heroically to her appeal for assistance. All of which makes for good photoplay drama.

"The Prize Story"

Harry C. Myers Produces Attractive Three-Reeler for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

THERE is nothing new nor especially startling about this three-reeler. In fact it is surprising that an artist of the pen and screen, such as Harry C. Myers, should not have looked farther and fared better by way of a theme for a production in which there is every evidence of careful and artistic direction. Most of the originality that the picture contains apparently has its origin in the mind of the director.

Many, many times we have been treated to the story of the young lovers whose only hope of marital union lay in the possibility of the man in the question being able to pull together dollars to the tune of a thousand or so, to meet the demands of an unwilling papa. The theme has been treated in various ways, and is often made interesting, as in the present case. This time we are given a slight diversion by being allowed to view the visualization of a scenario which has been written by the young lover in a moment of desperation, and which has had the good fortune to win the $1000 prize at the Laemmle studios.

Harry C. Myers himself plays the male lead, and Rosemary Theby, opposite him, is exceptionally attractive as she appears in the story within a story. Some startling effects have been obtained by the use of a black and white set, which is made still more noticeable by the leading woman's appearance on the scene attired in a black and white striped costume to match the background.

One of the most effective points of the production, and one of the most commendable, helping to carry out the dramatic intention of the story with a suggestion of a deeper moral significance, is the burning of the home of the villain subsequent to a battle fought between him and the woman who refuses further to submit to the unhappy fate into which she has been tricked. There is received from these scenes an impression of justification even in the death of the man through the violence of the outraged woman. The demolishment of the house of sin with its master and all its petty elegance, leaving the woman undoubtedly on the threshold of a new and better life, is not easily forgotten.

In spite of the criticism given above, the production on account of its many fine points by way of direction, and some by way of authorship, will be a welcome offering to the general audience.

A Correction.

In the review of two All Celtic pictures in the Moving Picture World under date of June 19, a typographical error caused the name Charles O'Hara to appear as the actor in the role of Rafferty. Joe Sullivan is playing the lead in this series for which Mr. O'Hara is writing the scenarios.

curse of greed—the greed of a man, who, returning East with $20,000, broods over the advantages of having just twice that amount, until he robs his partner and leaves him to die of thirst. Either that, or he may use the one bullet left in his revolver.

Considerable care was taken to trace the growth of covetous longings in the mind of Spencer—how each night of the homeward journey, as the two men lie side by side on the desert, visions of bags of gold become more and more of an obsession, how he struggles to resist the temptation, but finally steals away in the darkness leaving nothing behind, save his partner's gun, one shell and a note advising him to use it. The carefully calculated cruelty, the naturalness with which everything is done, give a gripping force to these scenes, and when it comes to depicting the agonies of a man dying of thirst there is no dodging the horror of the situation for the sake of avoiding brutality.

Warrington is confronted with the alternative of shooting a rabbit and drinking its blood, or ending his own life with the lone bullet. He decides in favor of killing the rabbit and it happens that the echo of the shot calls to his assistance a wandering prospector. This really ends the tragedy of the desert. The remainder of the story, presenting both of the former partners as wealthy men, deals with Warrington's deep laid plan for the ruination of the man who wronged him, and his change of heart when success is in sight, because of his love for Spencer's daughter. William Duncan, George Holt and Myrtle Gonzalez are the conspicuous figures in a well directed company.

"The Face in the Moonlight"

Albert Capellani, With Robert Warwick as the Star, Makes Impressive Picture for World Film.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ALBERT CAPELLANI was an ideal choice for director of this five-part World Film drama presenting Robert Warwick in a dual role. It is a French story of the Napoleonic days and from first to last the picture reveals the guidance of a man thoroughly versed in the subject and a master of photoplay production. The settings and furnishings of the rooms were selected with a keen eye for artistic results, frequently scenes were photographed from an unexpected angle, gaining effects at once pleasing and novel, and several double exposures in the concluding reels were cleverly handled. Mr. Capellani's technical resourcefulness is, of course, no surprise, for he has illustrated it before in "Les Miserables" and other famous pictures. Nor is it surprising that he has imparted the spirit of a French romance with a completeness seldom to be expected of an American company working in an American studio.

The story of Victor, aristocrat and officer in the King's army, and that of his half brother Rabat, is made entirely clear and quite engrossing, if one enjoys a romantic tale laid in a most dramatic period of history. The relationship of Rabat and Victor is explained in a prologue, after which there is a lapse of some twenty years and the sons of the French nobleman are introduced as mature men, one the product of a childhood spent among thieves in a hovel, the other a stalwart soldier in love with Lucile, the niece of a leader in the conspiracy to replace Napoleon on the throne. In playing the two men, Mr. Warwick varies his manner and appearance so effectively that at times one might readily believe the characters were being presented by different actors.

The name of the picture is derived from an important incident in the story, showing how Lucile becomes the witness of a murder committed by Rabat. Seeing his face illumined by pale moonlight, she mistakes him for Victor. Subsequent events serve to clear her lover of suspicion and at the last minute he is saved from execution. The screen darkens with Rabat on the guillotine. H. Cooper Cliffe gives a performance of particular merit as Munier, Stella Archer makes a sweet Lucile, Montague Love is impressive as Ambrose, and in the prologue, Dorothy Fairchild arouses sympathy by her playing of the unfortunate Jeanne.

"Little Sunset"

A Baseball Film Featuring Bosworth and a Very Clever Youngster Named Gordon.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS picture consisting of four reels and made by the Bosworth-Morosco Company tells a clever, entertaining and often exciting baseball story. The materials for the story have been taken from the well-known narrative of Charles Van Loan. Mr. Bosworth plays the part of Bergstrom, The Terrible Swede, whose fabulous batting average has excited the boyish admiration of Little Sunset, a most amusing youngster whose little heart is given over entirely to the national game. Master Gordon plays the part of Little Sunset, so called not by any stretch of romantic license, but merely because of his possessing a considerable "mop" of red hair.

While the picture does of course make a special appeal to "fans," especially to the "fans" of the younger generation, there is plenty of human heart interest in the story, plenty of pathos and plenty of humor.

This feature proves that the screen can handle a subject which the speaking stage could not touch. Van Loan's story is not sufficiently dramatic to be adapted for the speaking stage, but it is a good theme for picturization. A narrative on the stage is obviously impossible, a narrative on the screen properly handled as this one is on the whole has a distinct charm of its own. The photography is generally good, the support of Bosworth and Gordon is fair. There is no love story in the film, but it is a good guess that the women will like the brave little mascot and the burly giant and their comical friendship almost as much as the boys will. For the boys this film is better than a circus.

Clark. The fact had no relation to history of the times, but it became the theme of a poem by Hood, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," and it was idealized in a novel by Bulwar Lytton, probably in illustration of the futility of circumstantial evidence.

Admirably handled by Ridgely, the director's good taste being in evidence from start to finish, the visualized story is very matter-of-fact in its structure, reflective purely of the action in Bulwar Lytton's novel, so that there is a lack of after impression. If there is a message, such as I have intimated, it is not shown in the screen story. Its chief merit seems to lie in the accuracy with which it is endowed in costume and staging—it is a picture of life in England about the middle of the 18th century as seen through a temperament. Ridgely has the artistic temperament, but he is strongest in his treatment of a subject. It is in the nature of things for the man of glowing imagination and keen sensibilities to seek expression in several arts, but his best is usually limited to one. There is a lack of soul in his stories, yet he treats those having soul with the true spirit of poesy. It is, however, quite to be expected that directors should have to turn to literary works of the past for their subject matter, a condition which may continue until born story tellers learn to successfully formulate their matter for the screen.

"The Dictator."

In Famous Players Production John Barrymore Again Shows Himself to Be a Most Engaging Comedian.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

JOHN BARRYMORE has established himself as a photoplay comedian of assured popularity. His method is refined, individual and possesses just the qualities appreciated by an audience in search of comedy of an intelligent character. Those who recall the success he scored in "Are You a Mason?" will find a worthy successor to that highly amusing picture in the Famous Players' production of Richard Harding Davis', "The Dictator," a stage comedy of the first calibre in which the situations lend themselves admirably to the needs of the screen. "The Dictator," as a play, was filled with bright lines; but so adroitly has the picture been presented by Director Oscar Eagle, and so expressive is the performance of Mr. Barrymore, that the absence of dialogue does not appreciably diminish the meaning and humor of the action. The picture takes a place among the best of the Famous Players' many successful comedies.

Interest in the adventures of Brooke Travers is caught in the early scenes when we meet him in the maelstrom of stock exchange speculation, learn of the proposed cruise in his private yacht and witness the violent encounter with the taxi driver that lands both of them in the river. There is no semblance of faking in the cold plunge and Travers's struggle to keep himself afloat until rescued by his valet. Believing the chauffeur to be drowned, the valet carries his unconscious master aboard a steamer bound for Porto Banos.

Naturally, there is a pretty girl among the passengers, Lucy Sheridan by name, destined to become the bride of a missionary. But the audience learns very soon that Travers is likely to interfere. When the ship reaches the disorganized little state, the rumpus over the choice of a dictator commences. There are no more laughable moments in the picture than those showing Mr. Barrymore's aversion to being stood up against a wall and shot. By hiding behind his fellow prisoner and otherwise delaying the discharge of the volley of bullets, he postpones the execution until United States marines have time to effect a rescue. Of the engaging qualities of Mr. Barrymore and "The Dictator" there can be no question. Among those who give the featured player able support are Charlotte Ives, Ruby Hoffman, Ivan Simpson, Robert Broderick and Harry West.

"The Running Fight."

A Six-Reel Feature Fathered by the Paramount Pictures Corporation and Setting Forth a Strange and Complicated Tale.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

ASIDE from the superfine quality of the photoplay and the splendid settings no honest word of commendation can be found for this feature. The men and women who compose the cast are to say the least endowed with average ability, but they had impossible characters to portray and impossible things to do and are therefore subjects for sympathy rather than targets for criticism.

A hypercritical person may find flaws in every film and it is no credit to a reviewer and certainly no service to an exhibitor to go searching for imperfections. The average audience is not hypercritical though it is by no means willing to overlook glaring faults. A few faults must be condoned, but when they crowd upon each other making confusion worse confounded, when the picture degenerates into a phantasmagoria of nonsense and the best of us are unable to distinguish the head from the tail, the feature becomes impossible as an entertainment except perhaps for the flashes of involuntary comedy, of which there were not a few in the last three thousand feet of this production.

I always knew that autos were liable to "skid," but this is the first feature I have seen "skid." There is a plot in this story; we are assured of this by the synopsis, but the trouble is to find it. It's like a string of eels, you can't get a good hold of it at any point. The space of this paper is too valuable to point out the irreconcilable improbabilities of the story, to enumerate all the instances of a lack of coherence and a lack of dramatic purpose. At some points the film is overcharged with action and at other times there is no action whatever. The most dramatic thing in the last two reels was the fugitive criminal going to a barbershop and getting shaved. It would serve no purpose to trace all the inconsistencies of the play, one might as well try to take a census of mosquitoes on a moist evening along the shores of the Hackensack. They obtrude themselves upon even the most unsophisticated of patrons. The feature is padded and badly assembled, but these are curable faults and might easily be removed. The defects in this picture I regret to say lie much deeper.

Fate in its irony ordains that every really bad dramatic picture must tempt the spectator to laugh, when he should weep the most. The final scenes of this feature were suggestive of some of the best Keystones I ever saw. Even the hardened set of reviewers gazing upon this film had to laugh. The lightning changes and disguises, the fooling of the police and the sudden surrender of the "gobs" of stolen money had pronounced comedy flavor.

"THE FRUIT OF FOLLY."

The Last But One of the "Who Pays?" Dramas, One of the Most Impressive of the Series.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NEARING the close of what is in one respect the most remarkable of the serials which have become so largely the fashion, and certainly the most elevating, we have also to admit that of the dramas of which it consists, each has placed its moral intelligibly, and with a degree of originality.

Scene from "The Fruit of Folly" (Pathe).

In "The Fruit of Folly" there will be found a strange admixture of circumstances arising from the various follies to which each character is addicted. Strangely enough these characters according to the construction of the story have connecting links belonging to the past or present, the thread of each separate drama weaving itself into the constitution of the main theme in the most natural manner. At the end all heads bow to the inevitable question, "Who Pays?" while the screen darkens on a problem which we are left to solve, each for himself, or herself, as conscience suggests.

The idea has been picturized with remarkable realism, and the clever manner in which the shadow of ruin has been cast over the theater of events is an eye opener. The production is in a way a silent accuser; or so it will be found by many who view it. The story has not been given over to sentimentalism; on the contrary it deals with the happenings of everyday life. The follies enumerated in the action of the play are, first the folly of wine, second the folly of gambling, third the folly of women, and fourth the folly of misplaced trust.

As in previous chapters Ruth Roland and Henry King have acquitted themselves admirably. The same may be said of their support, notable among whom are Daniel Gilfether, Edward Brady, and Mollie McConnell.

CROOKY SCRUGGS.

Frank Daniels Gives Humorous Performance in Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Comedy Features.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FRANK DANIELS may act in pictures for a long while without finding a character more to his liking than Crooky, convict No. 9999. He may star in many comedies before he finds another so skillfully devised to keep his humorous personality in the foreground and present to picture patrons a Frank Daniels no less individual in his method, no less laugh-provoking in his antics than the renowned comedian of a long list of comic operas. Paul West wrote the scenario for this excellent V-L-S-E offering and C. Jay Williams made it into a five-reel production. In addition to Mr. Daniels he had a first rate company of players to direct, starting with Charles Eldridge as Colonel Bob Roberts, a wealthy rancher who comes East to invest his money, and continuing through a cast numbering Harry T. Morey, Edwina Robbins, Anna Laughlin and Evart Overton. A representative aggregation of Vitagraph actors appears in this Blue Ribbon feature and results are of the best.

But for all the entertainment value of a nicely evolved story there is never a question about the playing of Mr. Daniels being responsible for most of the laughs. His facial expressions are irresistible and one never wearies of the odd little mannerisms with which he portrays the happy-go-lucky character of Crooky. First we find him lock-stepping in the line at Sing Sing, and making disrespectful grimaces at the warden the while; then planning his escape, which, when effected, leads to his becoming the boon companion of Colonel Roberts, and finally the escaped convict, impersonating the wealthy westerner, spends money like a prince without changing the manners of a vulgarian.

Each time Crooky unconsciously drops back into the familiar lock-step the incident is good for a laugh, and any audience will appreciate his nonchalant way of testing the silverware, then sliding it into his pocket along with whatever other valuables may come to hand. Having a fat roll of bills and a check book at his command means nothing to Convict 9999 when an opportunity for loot presents itself. The story was cleverly constructed to give a logical excuse for the humor of Mr. Daniels and even the settings—a room decorated in black and white stripes, for example—contribute to the comedy idea. Mr. Eldridge makes just the right sort of a partner in adversity for Crooky and Miss Robbins does very well as the spinster figuring in a burlesque love affair.

"THE BELOVED VAGABOND" TO BE COLORED.

The Pathe officials had their first look last week at their new six-part picture, "The Beloved Vagabond," adapted from Wm. J. Locke's novel of the same name, and it was pronounced by all who saw it to be one of the best pictures they had ever seen. Edward Jose, who produced it, has shown a rare artistic talent in his selection of backgrounds, and in every detail of his direction.

Edwin Arden, as "Paragot," has interpreted that wilful, big hearted, irresponsible character in a way that leaves nothing to be desired. He easily dominates every scene he is in by the force of his personality, and the subtle niceties of his conception of Paragot will long remain in the minds of those who see the picture as an example of the very best in photoplay acting. He is very ably supported by Bliss Milford and Katherine Brown-Decker.

Pathe will send "The Beloved Vagabond" to France to be colored, and it probably will not be released before August.

"THE IMPOSTER" (World Film).

The next picture to be produced at the World Film studios is the William A. Brady photoplay, "The Imposter." Mr. Capellani has just completed "The Face in the Moonlight," in which Robert Warwick plays the dual stellar role. "The Imposter" is taken from the play of the same name by Douglas Murray, which was successfully performed on the speaking stage. Miss Jose Collins, the famous singer and actress will be starred and she is to enact the part of the gipsy, "The Tearer." This is Miss Collins' first appearance before the camera and experts say her tests show her to be as charming on the screen as on the stage.

Mr. Alec B. Francis will play the dual part of Sir Anthony Gregeon, the crusty old English nobleman and his wayward twin brother, known as "Blink." Miss Dorothy Fairchild will be remembered for her appealing work as the wife of Porkey McCoy in "The Boss" in which Holbrook Blinn and Alice Brady are starred, portrays the ingenue role of Mary.

"A TIGRESS OF THE CITY JUNGLE" (Vitagraph).

The complexity of a woman's nature was the theme selected by William Addison Lathrop for a screen story, entitled, "A Tigress of the City Jungle," on which the Vitagraph Company has started production under the direction of Lorimer Johnston. "The Tigress of the City Jungle" tells a daring story of a woman, who, by day was an exemplary mother to an adopted child, originally stolen for blackmail, and at night the leader of a band of criminals. The atmosphere of the story wreaks with mystery and all the adjuncts that add thrills to an up-to-date detective story are visualized in vivid realism. Julia Swayne Gordon will be seen in the leading character, Olga Petrova, a woman of many moods, and will have in her support such well-known Vitagraph Players as Leo Delaney, Zena Keefe, Charles Wellesly, George Stevens and Garry McGarry. "A Tigress of the City Jungle," will, when completed, be in three parts and released as a Broadway Star Feature.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"A BAD MAN AND OTHERS" (Reliance).

Among the most promising Western dramas recently announced is "A Bad Man and Others," a two-reel Reliance release of June 26th in the Mutual program. A competent cast is headed by William E. Lowery in the role of Mesquite Mike, the bad man. He is supported by Elmo Lincoln, as the Sheriff, and Daisy Robinson, a newcomer in Mutual plays, as Lucy Hewitt. Others who appear are Violet Wilkey, George Walsh, and Matt Deverish. The scenes shown are all along the New Mexican border of the Rio Grande.

The story works up to a splendid climax, but begins when Mesquite Mike crosses the Rio trail and terrorizes a small border town. Among others he shoots and wounds is George Hewitt, who has ridden in to get a doctor for his wife, Lucy. This same Lucy was once loved by Mesquite Mike. Although she rejected him the old feeling persisted. Pursued by the sheriff and a posse, the outlaw rides to the Hewitt ranch where he meets Dorothy, the daughter of George and Lucy, who implores him to aid her bed-stricken mother. The bandits with Mike decide that the woman has Mexican fever and flee in terror. Mike, however, knows of a monastery where this dread disease can be cured, and, taking a desperate chance, determines to take Lucy there. Fastening an Indian drag to his horse, he starts across the desert with Lucy and Dorothy. The water gives out, the horse dies. The little party suffers untold hardships, but Mike, who has taken the horse's place in the harness, finally gets the sick woman to the monks. They discover she has not Mexican fever and will recover. Meanwhile, the sheriff and his posse arrive and only Lucy's intervention saves the outlaw's life.

"SPORTING DUCHESS" MAKING GOOD.

The V-L-S-E announce that following the success that has attended the showing for a full week of a V-L-S-E feature, the Harry Davis interests of Pittsburgh, Pa., are considering the exhibition of a number of "Big Four" features, each for a full week's engagement.

They have booked the "Sporting Duchess" for a week at the big Strand theatre, which has a seating capacity of 2,000. This theatre is rated as a "Big Time" vaudeville house, but with the completion of the new Davis theatre in Pittsburgh, it is expected that the new house will hereafter have vaudeville attractions, while the Strand will be continued as a big picture play theatre.

Until this summer, features were never shown in Pittsburgh in a theatre with a larger seating capacity than 800, and as a consequence have not had a fair opportunity to demonstrate the full strength of their drawing power.

"The Sporting Duchess" started a solid week's engagement at the Cleveland, Ohio, Hippodrome, on Monday, June 14th. This is the first of a series of V-L-S-E features that will appear at this playhouse, each for a solid week's stand.

In announcing "The Sporting Duchess" A. W. Goff induced the Hippodrome management to use half page ads in the Cleveland newspapers and 1500 sheets of paper, in addition to perambulators and novelties, with the result that in this, the fourth week of their picture play season, the house is drawing the best business since its opening this season.

PAUL BOURGEOIS JOINS UNIVERSAL.

PAUL BOURGEOIS has joined the Universal's forces at Universal City, Cal., where he will produce wild animal pictures under Henry McRae's direction. Mr. Bourgeois has worked with his lions, tigers and other wild animals for Pathe Freres in Paris and New Jersey, and also with the Gaumont, Solax, Blache, Eclair and Vitagraph companies. It is his ambition and intention to produce pictures, while with the 101-Bison Company, in which, instead of demonstrating merely the fearlessness of the trainer, the animals themselves will be induced to perform daring feats.

Mr. Bourgeois was born in Brussels in 1887. At eighteen he came to Paris, where he fell in with an old friend who trained animals, with whom he went into partnership and, a couple of years later joined Hagenbeck's circus in Hamburg.

After traveling with the circus for some months he came to America, bringing his animals with him. For a time he was cameraman and stage manager for Pathe Freres, but constantly spent his time with his animals, gradually acquiring a splendid menagerie, and opened branch zoos at Detroit, Newark, Ingleside and Fort Lee, N. J., in addition to his Fourteenth street menagerie.

About this time Mr. Bourgeois became manager of the Holland Film Co., and later president of Paul Bourgeois Wild Animal Features, Inc., with headquarters in Asheville, N. C., and also opened an amusement park at St. Augustine, Fla.

"JANE OF THE SOIL" (Essanay).

This is a stirring drama of a girl who fights a bitter battle with conscience because she believes she has killed a man. Jane is a mountaineer girl, wild and rough. She is sent by her parents to school and returns home the same simple character, though the rough edges have been polished off. She is attacked by a scapegrace from a wealthy family and shoots him with his own revolver in self defense. Terrified, she goes to the man she has fallen in love with while at school and tells him she cannot marry him as she has killed a man. Then she returns home, and unable to still her conscience, haunts the spot where the man she shot was hidden. He proved to have been only wounded, but mad with fever and thirst he roams the woods and comes face to face with the girl.

Thinking she has seen a vision she races madly through the mountains and hides in a shack. Her sweetheart has received word that his brother, the scapegrace, is missing. He goes in search of him and finally wanders into the cabin where Jane is hidden. The madman follows her there and attacks his own brother. There is a struggle and he is overpowered. The struggle has cleared the mind of the scapegrace and he returns to consciousness, sane again. The sweetheart finds the madman is his brother and the man whom Jane supposed she has killed. The three are reunited in the cabin.

Exceptional acting has been portrayed by Edmund F. Cobb in simulating a madman. Lillian Drew as Jane carries out her part with great skill, as does Richard C. Travers as her sweetheart. The rugged life of the mountaineers is portrayed with exceptional realism. This 2-act drama is released July 17.

"THE HEADLINER" (Reliance).

"The Headliner," a two-reel Reliance feature, produced by F. A. Kelsey, takes the photoplay audience behind the scenes in a Coney Island theater of no very high class. It shows the players living an intense drama of feeling which has nothing at all to do with the audiences before whom they appear.

"The Headliner" is Gabriel (George Walsh), who finds himself suddenly in the same company with Beatrice, his former sweetheart, who finds that Beatrice (Irene Hunt) is singing her songs to the accompaniment of Michael Busoni. Gabriel recognizes in Michael the son of a man who had killed Gabriel's own father in a vendetta. Michael throws himself upon Gabriel when there is mutual recognition, but the two men are separated.

Michael, however, plans to continue the vendetta by killing Gabriel. Through Michael's careless act the theater is set afire. Gabriel braves smoke and flame to rescue Beatrice and her father. Michael dies in the fire, to no one's regret.

The principals in addition to Mr. Walsh and Miss Hunt are William Lowery as Michael, Tote Du Crow and Philip Gastrok.

"A HARMLESS FLIRTATION." (MinA).

Director Milton H. Fahrney has succeeded in getting an unusual amount of action in all of his productions, but none of them have so bubbled over with such snappy and surprising situations, coming one on top of another, and with such effervescent humor, as in "A Harmless Flirtation," a one-reel MinA release for Thursday, July 1, on the program of the General Film Company.

"Action in every foot" is a much abused term, but in this instance it is literally applicable. There is action from the first exposure to the last. And, what is more, every bit of it is good, clean comedy that will create nothing less than a succession of laughs.

The story centers around Jerry, who flirts with a pretty girl named Nellie, but who wreaks vengeance upon others who follow his example. So many things happen to Jerry and his opponents that when all misunderstandings are peaceably settled the characters have gone through nothing less than a cyclone of events.

George Ovey does some very excellent comedy work in which Goldie Colwell ably assists. Louis Fitzroy, Janet Sully, Albert McQuarrie and others are also in the cast.

"CHILDREN OF THE SEA" (Majestic).

Francelia Billington, in the two-reel Majestic feature, "Children of the Sea," plays a dual role, that of Claudia, an actress, and Letty, her daughter. In ordinary photoplay productions such likenesses are made as complete as possible, but George Siegmann, who directed "Children of the Sea," saw to it that there was a substantial difference between Miss Billington as Claudia, the mother, and Miss Billington as Letty, the daughter. He wished to preserve a family resemblance and not make the two roles manifestly the same woman.

Scene from "Children of the Sea" (Majestic).

This skillful handling of the dual role subject is not the only effective quality about "Children of the Sea." There is fundamental drama in the desire of Letty, the daughter, to follow exactly the road her mother took, and the efforts of the simple fisherfolk with whom she lives to prevent her. Highly dramatic, too, is the situation in which Rand, the famous painter, figures. Claudia made her way from her island home into the world through him. Letty, too, endeavors to use him as a bridge between the island and the main land of the outer world. Rand, however, in the end acts from the highest motive and through his efforts Letty is saved for a simpler life.

Miss Billington is supported by Wilbur Higby, H. Moody, Joseph Hennaberry and other prominent Reliance-Majestic players.

"EBB TIDE" (Selig).

"Ebb Tide," released Thursday, July 8, is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels and was produced by Colin Campbell from the story written by Lanier Bartlett, and shows what the flood tide brings the ebb tide takes away.

Business calls Allen Forbes to the city. There he meets Estelle Velaine, who is engaged to Jerome Esmond. Allen Forbes and his wife are temperamentally unfitted one for the other. Helena Forbes, reading of Estelle's engagement, invites her to her home. Allen Forbes and Estelle again meet. Jerome Esmond is also invited to the Forbes home and falls in love with Helena, Allen's wife. It seems that the four people are drawn together by some unknown and powerful influence. Estelle tries to fight down her love for Allen. Jerome and Helena also realize the danger of their drifting together. The story ends with the ebb tide taking out illicit love and guilty knowledge and leaving the four principals bound together in the shackles of conventionality.

Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and others assume the principal roles in this psychological drama of unusual appeal.

MARY PICKFORD IN "LITTLE PAL."

Following her overwhelming triumph in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," Mary Pickford, the unsurpassable star of the Famous Players Film Co., will next be seen as "Little Pal" in a feature of that name to be released on the Paramount program July 1—one of the most unique roles in which she has ever been presented. The photoplay was woven about the star, and presents a strong tale of primitive emotions and primal passions, evidencing a hitherto unsuspected aspect of Miss Pickford's astounding versatility. This is probably the first time in Mary Pickford's phenomenal screen career that she has ever impersonated an Indian girl, and as "Little Pal" Miss Pickford furnishes ample proof that to her boundless art nothing is impossible. Throughout the entire production, she literally lives the life, and apparently without an effort suggests all the mannerisms and emotions of the little Indian girl, and in her wondrous characterization one forgets even the brilliant ability of the star and sees only the creature which she simulates.

In order to acquire the habits and mannerisms of the Indian girl so effectively portrayed in "Little Pal" Miss Pickford a few months ago engaged the daughter of a full-blooded Indian in Colorado as a companion. For weeks Miss Pickford watched, studied and analyzed the movements of the Indian maid, imitating and perfecting them in private life until she was confident that she could portray the role of the Indian girl with absolute fidelity and naturalness. Her marvelous mimic powers are evident in the screen presentation of this unusual character.

The atmosphere of this subject is entirely distinctive. The greater part of the story is laid in Kilisnoo, Alaska, at the time of the rush to the gold fields, and amid the environment of gambling houses and saloons "Little Pal" grows to womanhood, with the evil influences that surround her unable to crush the courage, heroism and morality innate within her.

"Little Pal" will be recorded as another triumph for Mary Pickford's versatility and another evidence of the Famous Players Film Company's constant efforts to produce a feature program of wide variety.

WALTER EDWARDS GIVES SPLENDID PERFORMANCE.

With each successive appearance on the screen, Walter Edwards' splendid delineation of a crook seems to become more forceful. The noted character actor, who is now appearing in the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino productions under the management of Thomas H. Ince ever is gaining new admirers among the photoplay fans of the country. His next appearance will be in the role of Blackwell, a despicable type of under-world habitue in "The Shadowgraph Message," in which he will be co-starred with Howard Hickman. The story is one of many thrills and has a climax that is startling. It is to be released as a Broncho, June 23.

Upon the completion of "The Service of the Sword," an adaptation of the short story of the same name by George Bronson Howard, Jacques Jaccard and the Kerrigan-Victor company will leave the Universal City studios for a stay of three weeks in the mountains near Hume, California, where they are to stage the exteriors for two two-reel stories of the lumber camps. Following this they will go to the beach resort of La Jolla where they are to make a stay of the same length of time.

Lillian Gish has an interesting role in the forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, "Souls Triumphant," which is from the pen of Mary H. O'Connor of the Hollywood scenario bureau. The production is being made under the direction of John B. O'Brien, already responsible for "Captain Macklin" and "The Outcast." The cast includes Wilfred Lucas, Spottiswoode Aitken, and Louise Hamilton.

ANOTHER MINA COMEDY COMPANY.

A second comedy company to produce MinA Films has been organized and began work at MinA's new studios in Los Angeles, June 12, under the direction of Jack Byrne.

The organization of this company was prompted by the success of the first MinA company, directed by Milton Fahrney, who produced all of the releases of the new MinA series to date, beginning with "Life's Mysteries," released June 3, on the program of the General Film Company.

The new company, like the first organization, will make only one reel subjects. The productions made by the two forces will be released alternately.

The vogue which the new MinA films have attained in the short space of time since the first release is remarkable. Critics, exchange men and exhibitors have pronounced them a most refreshing departure from the cut and dried one reel comedies. Further proof of this popularity is brought out by the great increase in the number of prints sold of each succeeding picture. The high standard set by previous MinA releases will be maintained. Jules Mendel is playing leads with the new company.

WORLD FEATURES IN WESTERN CANADA.

The World Film Corporation, following its great success in the United States, has extended service to both Eastern and Western Canada. While the Eastern Canadian office has been operating for some two months, arrangements have only been lately concluded by which the World Features, Ltd., with head office at Calgary, Alberta, branch offices in Winnipeg and Vancouver, take over the representation for the Western half. Calgary was selected for the head office of the new organization as it is in the exact geographical center of the territory mentioned.

In addition to representing the World Film Corporation, the World Features, Ltd., is building up a large supply business and has exclusive western Canadian representation for the American "Fotoplayer," the Minusa screen, the J. C. Deagan musical instruments, etc.

LASKY JULY RELEASES.

Two or three minor changes in the Paramount releases agreed upon for the four Jesse L. Lasky productions to be released during July make it advisable to announce the Lasky portion of the program for that month, once again.

Blanche Sweet in "The Clue" will be released on July 8; Charlotte Walker in a picturization of "Kindling" by arrangement with E. J. Bowes will be the attraction for July 13; Laura Hope Crews in the Lasky-Belasco photoplay version of "Fighting Hope" will be the attraction for July 19, and Ina Claire and Carlyle Blackwell in a photodramatization of "The Puppet Crown" by Harold McGrath will be released on July 29.

"THE MAN WHO DID NOT DIE" (Lubin).

In "The Man Who Did Not Die," the thirteenth installment of the "Road O' Strife" serial, in which the Lubin Company is featuring Crane Wilbur and Mary Charleson, many surprising and unexpected developments take place and one is left somewhat bewildered by the suddenness of it all.

Gershom, who has been in a comatose state in a hospital, regains consciousness, and not only discovers but gets possession of the famous silver cup. He reaches the jail just as Alene is freed. Gershom takes her to a distinguished lawyer and there announces that the fortune supposed to be Caleb Jerome's was really held in secret trust for Alene. From the double bottom of the cup he takes documents and a wonderful jewel, and turning to the weary and indifferent girl announces: "This is Her Royal Highness the Princess Alene, rightful heiress to her father's crown and the throne of Urania."

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE CLUE" (Lasky).

"The Clue" is the fourth in the series of Lasky Feature Play Co. productions in which the beautiful and talented Blanche Sweet appears as the star. Moreover, it is a photodrama of a type not heretofore produced by the Lasky Company and therefore particularly interesting for those who have followed the growth and development of this unparalleled producing organization. The release date of July 8.

"The Clue" might be described as a political-detective drama, in which spies of hostile governments and police investigators cross swords and wits. It is said to be one of those fascinating stories which literally hold the suspense fast up to the last moment and the denouement of which arrives as a genuine surprise instead of merely fulfilling expectations.

The stellar character, interpreted by Miss Sweet, is Christine Lesley. In addition to Miss Sweet the cast of "The Clue" includes Gertrude Keller, Edward Mackay, Sessue Hayakawa, Page Peters, Ernest Joy and Billy Elmer.

"THE ULSTER LASS (Universal).

The Irish dramas in which Gene Gauntier and Jack Clark are specializing at Universal City have attracted much favorable comment both in the East and abroad. Miss Gauntier's latest production, "The Ulster Lass," a two-reel Bison drama which is to be released on July 10, far excels in pictorial beauty anything Miss Gauntier has produced recently.

An entire village of thatched cottages was constructed, Irish jaunting carts were specially built and domestic animals galore figure in the ensemble scenes. Old So-Boss, Cleo Madison's milch cow, takes a prominent part while even the little white ass which was recently born in zoo town gambols friskily about and chases the ewe lambs over the countryside. Irish colleens and husky lads of Ould Erin jig away the dull moments while the town fiddler discourses lively music.

"The Ulster Lass" tells an exciting story of a gang of "White Boys" who are being hunted by the British resident soldiery. A pretty love story also figures in the drama. The whole is as faithful a picture of native Irish life as has ever been reproduced for moving pictures in America.

PATHE TO FILM ROWLAND'S "THE CLOSING NET."

Picture rights to Henry C. Rowland's book "The Closing Net," have been acquired by Pathe, and work on the feature based upon the story will be commenced shortly. It is a remarkably gripping novel which first appeared in the Saturday Evening Post as a serial, and later became a best seller of the highest order.

It is full of thrills, adventures and delightfully romantic situations. The scene of the story is laid in and around Paris. The hero is an American, Frank Clement, who through the misfortune of being an illegitimate child is raised as a thief, but who climbs out of the slime of the underworld. Crooks of high and low caste, blue bloods, distinguished people, fascinating women,—all sorts in other words, appear in the story. It should make a remarkable picture for Pathe.

GREAT CAST IN VITAGRAPH COMEDY.

One of the greatest arrays of comedy stars that have ever appeared in moving pictures have been assembled to appear in the Vitagraph production of "A Night Out," on which work has already started. Miss May Robson heads the cast, which includes Flora Finch, Kate Price, John T. Kelly, Hughie Mack and Bill Shea.

The story deals with the adventures of Miss Robson as Granmum, who falls into a great deal of trouble with the other members of the cast.

Another member of the cast will be Paul Decker, who has been appearing in Miss Robson's companies on the stage for the past eight years. Mr. Decker has been especially engaged to support Miss Robson because of the knowledge he has of the star's methods in securing comedy points. The production will be made under the capable direction of George D. Baker.

"THE PATH TO THE RAINBOW" (Lubin).

"The Path to the Rainbow," a three-reel Lubin play, written by Shannon Fife, is an unusually well written, well acted and interesting story of a young, but old-fashioned, banker, who plans to marry his ward, and finally achieves happiness by unselfishly giving her to the man she wants to marry. The banker, in his old-fashioned way, secretly plans a home on Rainbow Hill, and then when everything is completed he proposes to his ward, only to discover that she is in love with another man and that the man is sorely in need of a large loan from the banker. How he handles the situation is a lesson in itself on unselfishness.

In the cast are Ormi Hawley, Arthur Matthews, Earl Metcalfe, Herbert Fortier, William H. Turner, Peter Lang, George Bliss.

"A GOOD BUSINESS DEAL" (American).

A wide range of amusing incidents is incorporated in "A Good Business Deal," a one-part American release of June 30th in the Mutual program. Vivian Rich and Joe Galbraith are featured in a cast which includes Harry Von Meter as well. Mr. Galbraith as Bobby Sherman, the broker who always finds himself broke, is all together too jolly a fellow and too much in love to tend to his business. Susan Warwick, his sweetheart, the part played by Vivian Rich, is far from wealthy, and Bobby's unfortunate financial condition prevents their early marriage.

To save him from bankruptcy, Bobby's friends incorporate him, pay his debts and procede to direct him and his affairs to a finish. Though Susan is one of the directors of Bobby, Incorporated, her objections are overruled and it is decided to marry Bobby to a wealthy heiress. If she is to save her threatened happiness. Susan feels that it is about time for her to get busy, so she induces a wealthy friend to buy her a controlling interest in Bobby, Incorporated. With the proxies in her hand, she elects herself president and passes a resolution ordering the corporation to marry its president.

MARY FULLER IN "UNDER SOUTHERN SKIES."

To "The Paris of America" (Savannah, Ga.) did Mary Fuller and her company of fifty sail last Monday to film one of the most successful plays ever toured, Lottie Blair Parker's "Under Southern Skies." In this play Miss Fuller is going to have one of the most charming parts she has ever enacted and it is safe to say that with Mary Fuller in the title role, in adition to the big and excellent cast, there will be produced a feature that will live in the pages of history of the picture world.

Director Lucius Henderson has a thorough knowledge of Universal Company en Route for Savannah.

Savannah and claims that it will be just exactly a glorious and most natural place to film the story in all historical correctness. A clever young actor, Milton Sills, will have the leading role. Mary Moore, the dainty, charming little Irish girlie, will have a good part and will add much to the play. Paul Panzer of "Perils of Pauline" fame has been given a most important role. In fact, the Universal has spared no pains or expense on this big Broadway Feature to make it one that will be the envy of all feature films.

The costuming will show all the old style of dress used in the old South at the time of the period of the play.

It will be recalled that "Under Southern Skies" was the play in which Grace George starred, and it is a safe bet to say that the charming Mary Fuller will gather in many new laurels. "Under Southern Skies" will be released as a Broadway Universal Feature.

THE MAKING OF "UNDER TWO FLAGS."

The accompanying photograph, taken during the production of "Under Two Flags," Biograph's first three reel release in the regular service, gives some idea of the difficulties met and overcome in filming Ouida's great story. The many scenes depicting the heroine's adventures among the Arabs were made in the great Mojave Desert. For the director's purposes a trip by burro was made across the desert from Palm Springs, Cal., to the railroad. The desert at this point is about eleven miles wide. Included in the party were Franklin Ritchie, Louise Vale, Charles Hill Mailes and other principals, five camera squads, and a large number of supernumeraries.

At Chatsworth, Cal., thirty-five miles from Los Angeles, were made the numerous battle scenes. A battery of five cameras was trained on these scenes, also.

Unusual interest attaches to the filming of these scenes, not only because of their scope and the problems of directing which had to be worked out, but also because Director Travers Vale is thoroughly at home in work of this character, having gained a large experience in photographing real battle scenes during the Boer war, through which campaign he went as the official photographer of the British Government.

FROM PRUNES TO PROJECTION.

The Story of How the Round Peg Got Out of a Square Hole and Improved Moving Picture Projection.

EIGHT years ago there was a young fellow named Anderson, selling groceries in San Francisco, who knew so little about the business that he never sanded the sugar, and was not worried when the scale inspector dropped around. He used to tell folks when the butter got low in the tub, and he would dump a whole box of wormy raisins out in the alley, just like that!

E. R. Anderson.

This chap did fairly well in the grocery business, but he never set the woods on fire. He was a round peg in a square hole and he knew it. But as the grocery business was the best bet, he stayed on at the prune emporium, and hoped.

This was in the days of the bed-sheet moving picture screen, or curtain, as they called them then. The fact that pictures would move was considered so much of a miracle that making them move better never seemed to occur to the average exhibitor.

But here and there was a man who was not so dumbfounded but he could see room for improvement in the pictures, and particularly in the screen used to throw them on. One of these fellows had a little show around the corner from the grocery store. One day the showman dropped into the store, bought a pound of Ohio cheese, a bottle of pickled olives, and talked to the groceryman about moving picture screens. Not that he thought the purveyor of canned goods could alleviate his worries, he just wanted to tell his troubles to someone.

After the showman was gone, Anderson ate a dill pickle and did some tall thinking. The next day he was still thinking. The corner grocer was an inventor, but didn't know it. But, like all inventors, he began to neglect his own affairs in order to help the other fellow.

The next week or so folks that came into the grocery saw a strange sight. The erstwhile polite little cuss with a cheese knife in his hand and a pencil behind his ear, that used to smile at them while he took their orders, was transformed into an imitation of an earnest professor seated on a vinegar barrel and gazing through a pair of horn spectacles into a book as big as a cracker box.

Anderson pored over every book he could find on the subject of lens, light, refraction of light, reflecting surfaces and kindred subjects. The books on reflection all spoke of a mirror as a perfect reflector. Anderson naturally considered a mirror; obviously that would not do. He turned the mirror over and looked at the back of it, and right then and there the idea of a slightly roughened metallic surface for a projection screen was born.

The first screen that Anderson made was a crude makeshift. He used sail cloth as a body and smeared the dope on it with an ordinary paint brush, but the principle was correct, and, crude as it was, that first screen was as far ahead of the wrinkled bed sheet as the oil lamp was ahead of the tallow dip.

The next screen was a little better. Anderson sold his screens faster than he could make them. Then the building he used as a workshop was sold, and about to be demolished, and he went to Portland, Seattle, Salt Lake City, Denver, making and selling screens and putting what money he made right back into the invention, trying new schemes, hunting new processes.

Anderson went to St. Louis in 1911, where he took in two partners and opened a factory and laboratory. This gave the inventor the time and means he needed to experiment, and led to the final discovery that has revolutionized the science of moving picture projection.

The three partners founded the American Theater Curtain and Supply Company in St. Louis, which, after a short connection with Atsco, Inc., of New York, was taken over by the Alco Film Corp., which latter company went into bankruptcy shortly thereafter. Mr. Anderson then returned to St. Louis and organized the present corporation, the Minusa Cine Products Company.

It is a far cry from the little back room in the burnt-out, earthquake district in San Francisco, to the present organization of the Minusa Cine Products Co., with its big offices and branches in every city of the Union, and a factory headed by expert chemists, and fitted with specialized machinery for the manufacture of projection screens.

Anderson is not a rich man; all the money he has ever made has been spent in searching for ways that might improve his screen, and even now the directors of the Minusa Cine Products Company will tell you that Anderson wants to stick every cent that comes in into the research fund that is maintained for further improvements of their products.

"A TIMELY INTERCEPTION" (Biograph).

Aside from its dramatic qualities, "A timely Interception," the fifth Biograph Re-issue of subjects directed by D. W. Griffith, offers the many followers of W. Chrystie Miller an opportunity to see "the grand old man," as he is called, in one of the deepest bits of acting he has ever done before the camera.

The story tells of an old man who has seved enough money to justify the marriage of his daughter and adopted son, when word comes from the old man's brother that he has lost his job, his little girl is very ill and there is no money in the house. The sacrifice is a big one, but it has to be made. This postpones the wedding and eventually leads to the home being placed on sale. Later, the adopted son and the old man's brother are digging post-holes on the farm when they discover oil, and in their haste to tell the old man of the lucky strike, fall into an old abandoned well. In the meantime, a prospector for an oil syndicate was busy with the old man in an effort to force him to sell the farm, and had fairly well succeeded when the boy rushes into the house and stops the transaction. A short while after the great event takes place with far more pomp than it would have otherwise.

The situations of the story are well constructed, there is plenty of action, and the acting of W. Chrystie Miller, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Lionel Barrymore, Jos. McDermott and Wm. J. Butler is up to the usual high standard to be expected of these players.

"HEIGHTS OF HAZARD" (Vitagraph).

Capt. Harry Lambert, directing the production of a picturization of Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's "Heights of Hazard," for the Vitagraph Company, put in one day recently that would try the patience of Job. The scene on which he was at work was made to represent a jungle inhabited by a lion and several monkeys. The King of Beasts was used in a lion hunt, and, directed by his keeper, enacted his part like a veteran. It was not until they were getting ready to move him to his quarters that the lion proved unruly. Capt. Lambert, his camera man and Eugene Mullin, who picturized Mr. Brady's story, were standing near the camera discussing the next scene, when, with a roar the lion made one mighty dash at the side of his temporary cage. This gave way, and bounding past the three scared men he made straight for the camera, which he completely demolished with one swift stroke of his paw. He then calmly walked back to his cage, where he was taken in hand by his keeper. The only casualties were three scared men, the loss of a perfectly good camera, and two hundred feet of negative, but the three men shudder to think what might have happened, had they, in any manner provoked the displeasure of His Majesty, King Lion.

One of the finest bits of old men characters ever shown on the screen is impersonated by George Wright in the Edison feature, "The Tragedies of the Crystal Globe" in which Mabel Trunnelle and Bigelow Cooper are featured. Mr. Wright, is youthful despite his appearance in that film.

Notes of the Trade.

ON June 8th, another member of the firm of Gunby Bros. arrived at the home of Mr. Charles A. Gunby. His name is James William Gunby.

Horace Davey has just finished for the Nestor company a one reel comedy by Homer Croy, "The Tale of His Pants" is the title of the story. Lee Moran, Harry Rattenbury, Neal Burns and Billie Rhodes appear in the leading roles.

Charles West, as an ignorant Italian who is jealous of his sweetheart, is the featured player in "Little Marie," a two reel Reliance-Mutual drama. A bomb explosion figures in the plot. Signe Auen and Tom Wilson also appear. Ted Browning directed.

Jacques Jaccard has completed his second Universal release since his return to the company, "A Weird Nemesis." The story deals with the use of hypnotic power for the avenging of a wrong. There is nothing morbid or vulgar in its appeal. Hazel Buckham, Alan Forest, Helen Leslie and Fred Wilson play the leads.

"A Ten Cent Adventure," another charming comedy of childhood acted by children, is now engaging the attention of the Brothers Franklin and their small aides at the Reliance-Majestic studios. "A Ten Cent Adventure" has to do with a ten cent loan made by the hero (George Stone) at a country bank. George, who is a poor boy, is invited by the banker's daughter, played by Carmen De Rue, to her child's party. George has no money with which to buy a present, but being a boy of financial acumen he goes to the banker's office and secures ten cents. The banker issues the loan with all formality. Georgie is late in paying it and finds the bank closed. This is of advantage, however, because he is able to prevent the robbery of the bank by two burglars. He is wounded, but turns out a hero.

The New Victor Studio was formally opened at 645 West 43rd street, New York City, by the Palace Play Film Corporation, on June 19th.

Charles Giblyn is staging the concluding scenes in his "Flight of the Nightbird," a two reel story of society life, for the Universal company. Unfortunately, they had to stop in the middle of the production, because of the illness of Cleo Madison,—leading woman with the company. During Miss Madison's absence from the studio, the company with Agnes Vernon playing lead opposite Hobart Henley, made a flying trip to San Francisco where, in the Presidio and around the other government institutions, they staged "Jane's Declaration of Independence." It will be released as a Bison on July 3.

Edison is releasing July 2 a feature film presenting the theory of reincarnation or that we return to earth after death to live one or more several lifetimes, usually to expiate the wrongs one has done in life. The film in no way preaches or even suggests an intrusion into the spectator's religious belief, in fact, the way Mrs. Wilson Woodrow has written it and Director Richard Ridgley produced the play, it is wonderfully dramatic. It is tensely dramatic as Mabel Trunnelle and Bigelow Cooper, who are featured as the fated lovers, end each of their three lifetimes in a tragedy. The settings are richly oriental and well represent Director Ridgley's idea of each picture being like a painting. Herbert Prior plays a devilish sheik most effectively.

"The Kid Magicians" is the title of the latest one reel juvenile production to be released in the Mutual program. Violet Radcliff, as Tiny Rags, a poor caddy very much admired by the little rich girl, impersonated by Carmen de Rue, makes George Stone, as the rich boy, jealous. George's birthday party is taken to see a magician, and on their return home, the children try to imitate him. Among others in the cast are Jennie Lee, as the colored cook, Vera Lewis, Jack Hull, Betty Marsh and Edna May Wilson. S. A. and C. M. Franklin directed.

William Worthington and his company (formerly the Turner Special Feature Company) is staging a two reel story entitled "The Gopher," written by Harvey Gates of the western scenario staff. Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little and Mr. Worthington play the leading roles.

"At the Postern Gate," a Reliance production now nearing completion at the Reliance-Majestic studios, features Teddy Sampson. It is a costume play with a French setting and concerns the loves of Jacques and Louise in one generation, and the loves of Antoinette and Argle, their children, in another. The meetings of both parents and children took place at the postern gate. There is a duel between Louise, played by Mabel Wiles and Argle, played by Maxfield Stanley, in which the man recognizing the mother of his sweetheart only defends himself.

Sunday Shows Go Well

In Chattanooga, Sabbath Shows for Three Weeks, to Help Recreation Park of Fire and Police Departments, Make Good Record—City Is More Orderly on First Sunday Than Usual—W. C. T. U. Protest.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

In Chattanooga, Tenn., a written protest from the W. C. T. U. was recently filed with Mayor Littleton in an attempt to stop Sunday moving pictures, which have been shown at several of the theaters for the benefit of the fire and police departments. Mr. Littleton held a conference with Commissioner Betterton and other city officials, after which he announced that the matter of operating Sunday motion picture shows was being left entirely in the hands of the police and fire commissioner.

The money brought in by means of Sunday shows to extend over a period of three weeks will be applied to the Pan Gap Club, an organization of policemen and firemen. It is estimated that about 18,500 people attended the shows on the first Sunday, and even larger attendances are expected. Admissions to twelve out of the thirteen theaters totaled 17,515, while it was estimated that 1,000 negroes patronized the Leader theater on East Ninth street, the latter failing to make a definite report. Reports from the theaters show that the policemen and firemen sold 30,868 tickets in advance of the first show, these tickets being good on any one of the three Sundays. The revenue resulting from the ticket sales will amount to about $1,540 from which the theaters will deduct operating expenses.

For the first Sunday on record the show houses were open until 10 o'clock in the evening, and evening attendances were about as good as during the afternoon.

On Market street solid lines of automobiles were parked in the evening, which goes to prove that the better classes of residents are in favor of Sunday shows. Order was reported as perfect in all of the theaters in spite of some congestion at certain hours.

The entire city was well behaved during the day and only five arrests were made, which is a better record than generally established when the shows are closed. Religious and educational pictures were shown at most of the theaters, while others showed regular week-day feature films of light and serious drama. The management of one of the syndicates of theaters had enough Sunday films for the second show, but will probably use regular feature material at the third show. The leaders of the campaign for the Pan Gap Club are very much pleased with results so far.

GOLLAHON GETS WARNER PARK.

J. B. Gollahon, of Memphis, Tenn., was recently awarded the moving picture show privileges at Warner Park. The first show was held on Sunday, June 6. The shows will be held afternoon and night with a daily change of program. The Mutual program will be largely used by the theater and numerous Keystone comedies will also be shown on the screen.

FREE SUMMER SHOWS IN NASHVILLE.

What is likely to prove a popular innovation at the city parks of Nashville, Tenn., is the arrangement recently made by the Board of Park Commissioners to give at stated periods free moving picture shows at these popular resorts during the summer and early fall months. Already picture shows have been installed at Centennial, Watkins, Shelby, Reservoir, Richland, Cherokee, Meridian, Fatherland, Montgomery, Bell, Tenth Street, Morgan, Hadley and Fillmore parks.

The Nashville Railway & Light Company is also presenting free pictures at Glendale Park. This form of free entertainment at the parks is meeting with great success, the shows being well attended. Many requests have been received asking that the program be announced in advance, so that those in the sections of the city near the different parks will know what pictures will be shown on a given date.

NASHVILLE NOTES.

The Rex of Nashville recently exhibited a two-reel picture of the activities of the Y. M. C. A. of Michigan at the State Encampment. The pictures were shown as a benefit for the Nashville Y. M. C. A.

Announcement has been made by the Business Men's Club of Memphis, Tenn., that the Memphis picture, "Cotton Bolls and Wedding Bells," had been playing to tank towns and barnstormings for several weeks and would shortly wind up the time limit exercised over it by the club. It will then be turned over to the Paragon Film Company, the producers, who have stated that arrangements have been made to show the picture in 200 theaters in towns in Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee.

Work has already started on remodeling the old Saratoga billiard hall at 419 Church street, and it is the claim of those interested in the project that the location will be good and the quarters, when completed, will be among the most comfortable in the city.

The Alamo will be the latest addition to the many moving picture theaters which have sprung up in Nashville during the past few months. The theater will be erected by the recently incorporated Peerless Company. This concern has a capital stock of $5,000 and was incorporated by J. F. Beatty, Harry H. Tabler, J. P. Walman, Avery Handly and Dr. J. N. Bushanan.

The R. M. Shaw Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., has filed articles of incorporation in which its capital stock is listed at $1,000. The new concern proposes to handle moving picture supplies and will give its attention in a large part to local business at the start. The incorporators are: J. K. Smooth, S. R. Woods, G. R. Reynolds, N. B. Spahe and A. Y. Burrows. R. M. Shaw, who is not named as one of the incorporators, has stated that he will be actively connected with the firm.

The Auditorium Company, of Knoxville, Tenn., is spending $3,000 in remodeling and improving the Bijou theater. Most of the expenditure will be for fresh painting, decorating, etc.

The Grand of Knoxville, Tenn., now devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures, was formally reopened on Monday, June 7. Comfortably filled houses were present for both the afternoon and evening shows. Pictures are changed daily, while the vaudeville is changed on Mondays and Thursdays.

The management of the Crystal Hall theater, of Bardstown, Ky., in an effort to interest the recluses in motion pictures, has advertised that the shows at the theater will be free of charge to all persons over 65 years of age. This offer expires July 1, but in the meantime it is hoped that numerous old fogies will become interested.

At Dayton, Ky., the Gem Bathhouse and Amusement Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2.000. The incorporators are Perry Tucker, Bessie Gesser and Tony Gesser.

ARE CHILDREN'S SHOWS ALWAYS RUN AT A LOSS?

Houston, Texas, Not Enthusiastic About Special Children's Shows.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest Press Service.

SPECIAL shows for children are always run at a loss, and the children care more for knockabout comedies than selected films, was the consensus of opinion of Houston, Tex., managers. The photoplay men gave the benefit of their experience to twenty-five club women who suggested a conference. A chapter of the Children's Motion Picture League probably will be organized. Full co-operation was promised by the managers. In the meantime the Houston Post has coaxed the Queen theater to experiment with Saturday morning shows. Some of the expressions of the managers were:

John E. Davis, Zoe and Pearce theaters—Only one out of every twelve persons visiting a picture house is a child. Suggested that the ladies rent any films that they desired and either go into the business for themselves or let the theaters run them as extra reels on regular programs. Agreed with Mrs. W. G. Love that parents needed education as to proper pictures, as children's films were invariably shown at a loss, as neither the children were sent nor would the grown-ups attend if a child program was advertised.

H. C. Norfleet, Key theater, said: "The Lady of the Lake," a child's film, got $6.50 for sales of tickets to children. If you want a film that will attract children put on Charlie Chaplin, Hank and Ham or Ford Sterling. This morning when we opened with a Charlie Chaplin film 20 children rushed in in just two minutes."

This elicited from Mrs. Gentry Waldo: "That's just what we object to. Charlie Chaplin's vulgar, plain vulgar. We want a better class of pictures for our children."

Manager Xydias of Rex and Star said, referring to a list of good pictures read to the managers that practically every one had been shown in Houston, and he had exhibited a majority of them. Some of them were old and had been "junked," he said.

SOUTHWESTERN HAPPENINGS.

The Queen, at Fort Worth, Tex., was publicly commended by the W. C. T. W. for booking "Evangeline."

BOOSTER FILM FOR PITTSBURGH

The last chapter of the Be-Brite booster film, which is to advertise Pittsburgh in four reels in every city in the world as a progressive community worthy of the attention of investors of capital, was taken at the Brunots Island race track recently, when the picture man appeared on the job to demonstrate that Pittsburgh has an ideal location for auto meets and aeroplane flights.

An effort will be made through the film to reach the promoters of all big racing and athletic meets in an attempt to put "Pittsburgh on the map" as a real sport center.

METRO EXCHANGE GROWS.

The rapidly growing business of the Metro Pictures Service, 212 Fourth avenue, has necessitated the acquistion of more floor space, and in accordance three rooms in the rear of the present offices, which have been sub-letted, will be added.

General Manager Skirboll states that a department for preparing and handling all advertising and a projection room will be added also.

The regular weekly release will be projected at a stated time in the room which will be fitted up in a very neat manner.

As all the publicity matter for the Kansas City and Chicago offices is prepared and mailed from the Pittsburgh office, the advertising department will be one of the important parts of the Metro business.

PITTSBURGH ITEMS.

The Keith's vaudeville theater, known as the Colonial, Erie, Pa., which has been closed for the summer months for repairs, will be opened in the Fall under a new policy. Instead of letting the house remain dark on Sundays, feature pictures will be run on that day.

So far this summer two airdomes have been opened in the Pittsburgh district. One is that of James Smith, of Smith's theater, in 4900 Second avenue, who opened an airdome one square below his theater with a seating capacity of 500. The other is that of P. P. Shevlin in Brookline, who has opened the second year in his airdome. Both gentlemen report very good business.

Mutual Buys Exchange

Pittsburgh Photoplay Company Now Owned by Mutual Film Corporation—Gains Entire Control of Its Output in United States—Exchange Had Been Buying Its Films Outright—Personal Notes.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

AN event regarded with more than usual interest in the Pittsburgh film circles is the taking over of the Pittsburgh Photoplay Company by the Mutual Film Corporation.

By this transaction the Mutual Film Corporation gained the entire control of their output in the United States. Heretofore the Pittsburgh Photoplay Company purchased outright the productions of the Mutual Film Corporation released in this district. From now on, the Steel City district will be served by an integral part of the Mutual Film Corporation, whose head offices are in New York City.

Continental Feature Film Company's offices were installed in this city at 420 Penn avenue and put under the management of Sydney E. Abel, who is now in charge of the features released in this district by the Continental Feature Film Corporation, Syndicate Film Corporation, Thanhouser Corporation, North America Film Corporation, Serial Publication Corporation and the Mutual Masterpieces. Before buying the Pittsburgh Photoplay Company the employees of the Continental numbered about eight, while at present they number forty-five people.

W. T. Kinson, formerly with the General Film Company's branch in the lower part of Fourth avenue, is now managing the regular service office of the Mutual Film Corporation under the same roof with the Continental Company. He has had eight years' experience in the film business, being first connected with the Pittsburgh Caloium Light & Film Company in 1907. He has made a large number of friends among the exhibitors in the Pittsburgh district during that period, and the Mutual is to be congratulated upon the acquisition of this newest addition to their managerial force.

Not the least important of the many changes is that which effected H. E. Nichols, one of the best known film men in and about the Steel City district. Mr. Nichols has also been identified with the General Film Company since its inception and during the past three years he has been their acting manager at the Columbia Branch in upper Fourth avenue. He, like Mr. Kinson, has also been secured by the Mutual Film Company and will be glad to meet the exhibitors and

LIBERTY THEATER, A BEAUTIFUL PICTURE HOUSE.

One of the most noteworthy achievements of the Pittsburgh motion picture business is the erecting of the Liberty theater in Penn avenue, near Frankstown avenue, Pittsburgh. It is expected when finished to be one of the talked-of theaters in this city, as it will be large and beautiful. It will cost, $225,000. The main facade, facing on Penn avenue, is a modern design in polychrone terra cotta with Italian Renaissance detail. In the center of this facade is a huge panel surrounded by electric lights, it being the intention to use this space for special feature notices by placing therein large letters lighted at night by electricity. The marquise, over the entrance, extending to the curb, is unique in that the ceiling is constructed of ornamental iron ribs and diffusing glass panels, the intention being to place powerful electric lights above, so that the ultimate effect will be a beautifully illuminated ceiling. the lobby is semi-circular in plan and being open to the air, is designed in terra cotta to harmonize with the exterior.

From the lobby extends a spacious and beautiful foyer, oval in plan, with a ceiling 40 feet in height, treated in French Caen stone. From the foyer access will be had to both balcony and auditorium floors. A spacious retiring room for women and a smoking room for men will be located on the mezzanine floor. The interior of the theater proper is designed in Italian Renaissance with a beamed ceiling richly ornamented with carving and decorated in rich tones of color and gold over a background of dark walnut. The end wall, on which the picture is projected, is a beautifully carved screen forming a cover for the working parts of the organ and a frame for the picture, while directly above this frame is a colonnade containing the organ pipe. This is decorated in a similar manner to the ceiling, therefore creating a harmonizing and beautiful effect. The side walls will be treated in tapestry over a gold background.

L. J. Abrams has purchased the Star theater in Roscoe, Pa. Mr. Abrams states that business has been very good with him.

Censors Are Partial

Duluth City Council Has Measure Amending Theater Code—Provides for Pre-Censorship of Films, but After-Production Censorship of Plays—Bill Backed by Women's Council—Local Managers Oppose Plan.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

AN amendment to the theater code in Duluth providing for censorship of pictures, has been presented to the city council. It was drafted by Rev. Herbert Ford, pastor of the West Duluth Baptist church, and appointed by the Woman's Council. It provides:

"For the purpose of enforcing this ordinance and preventing the exhibitions or performances of an obscene, indecent or immoral nature, an advisory committee is hereby authorized whose duty it shall be to inspect all moving pictures being displayed or exhibited for exhibition prior to their being displayed, and all plays, performances, shows and exhibitions being given or performed.

"It shall be the duty of said advisory committee to prosecute or cause to be prosecuted proper legal proceedings, all persons, firms, associations or corporations who violate any of the provisions of this ordinance.

"Said advisory committee and the members thereof shall have the right to freely enter any place or building wherein moving pictures are diplayed or entertainments given, at any or all times, for the purpose of inspecting any picture that may be exhibited, or in the performance of any duty required to be performed by this ordinance. Said advisory committee shall be appointed respectively by the Commissioner of Public Safety, School Board, Woman's Council and Juvenile Court."

"The purpose of a municipal board of censorship would not be only to condemn, to weed out indecent or undesirable films or shows," said Mrs. A. A. Kerr, member of the amusement committee of the Woman's Council, "it would also strive to cultivate in the public an improved taste in matters theatrical. The plan is a broad, reasonable one."

All the local managers oppose the plan. W. M. Abrahamson, of the Savoy and Zelda, points out that the National Board of Censorship sees most of the films, and that the association from its headquarters in Minneapolis warns of wildcat films that need watching.

The lectures will be given in manuscript and illustrated with high grade moving picture films. Wisconsin and a few other older states have offered these courses to the people of the towns, but Oklahoma will be the first state in the union to extend the benefits of the course to the rural classes. NOTHING given away but good pictures" advertises the A-Muse-U, at Muscatine. The Fox, at Washington, is now using licensed program. "The Typhoon" was a repeater at the Isis, in Cedar Rapids. Interest in local films at the Idle Hour, in Leon, was heightened because a home-grown daredevil climbed to the top of the water tower and perched perilously on a globe surmounting it. Patrons of the Royal, at Clinton, saw films of Battery A, the local division of the Iowa National Guard. "John Barleycorn" was put on at the Majestic, in Atlantic, as a benefit for the local W. C. T. U.

Wonder as to where Albert Peterson got the name "Har-Cen-Art" for his new summer theater at Davenport is met by the statement it is coined from the names of his three sons, Harry, Ceno and Arthur. It also fixes the street on which the theater is located and its aim—"Harrison-Art."

The Majestic Theater Company, of Centerville, has been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000. Theodore H. Ollesheimer is president, William R. Krapbel, vice-president, and Leo Moore, secretary.

The Northwest Weekly and the American Lifeograph had about the only cameras in the field this year, it being remembered that last year Pathe, Mutual and other weeklies were represented. The Northwest people will furnish Pathe with films of this year's festival and the event will receive the usual publicity.

WHITE PLAGUE PICTURE SHOW.

The "White Terror," produced by Universal, a picture endorsed by the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, was privately exhibited recently to the physicians of Portland, the representative women's clubs of the city, the city officials and the members of the city health department. Censors Make Report

Portland, Oregon, Municipal Body Completes First Month Under New Ordinance—Shake-Up Among the Larger Photoplay Theaters—Sol. Baum Resigns as Head of People's Amusement Company.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

THE Municipal Board of Motion Picture Censors, appointed by Mayor Albee, and holding office by virture of the censorship ordinance recently passed by the City Commissioners, has made public its first report since the new ordinance went into effect. The report covers the month of May, although the ordinance went into effect some time before May 1st.

During the month reported, 822 reels, embracing 432 subjects, were subjected to the board's critical inspection. Of the subjects viewed, four were entirely condemned and 28 eliminations of scenes were ordered from the balance of the reels to properly fit them for the gaze of the Portland public.

The majority of the present incumbents were on the board under the old censorship ordinance and their work as censors is not new nor is it meeting with unusual protest on the part of exhibitors and exchange men. It is against the new ordinance itself that the Portland picture men are aiming their censure and directing their litigation.

The board delegates its power to thirty women, called viewers, who serve without pay and who are really the only officials to see films unless in their estimation a particular film should be barred. If a film meets with a viewer's disapproval, the full board is finally called to pass upon it and from its decision there is no appeal. During the month of May, the report shows, there were eight viewings had by the full board at the request of the preliminary viewers and of the eight pictures viewed, four were rejected as unfit to be shown to the Portland public. Of the four rejections during the month of May, one led to litigation.

SHAKE-UP IN PROGRAMS.

True to the predictions made some time ago, Portland is experiencing an earthquake-like shake-up in the programs and policies of its larger moving picture theaters and the fan is having a hard time getting adjusted to the new system of things.

For many months and, in some instances, years, each of the houses involved has been running the same programs and maintaining the same policies. Theaters that have built up the local reputations of several well known brands of films have during the past week or two let those hard-won reputations go for naught in the wild grab for the other fellow's program or something different and the photoplay patron is aimlessly wandering from one theater to the other seeking his favorite player or company. Whether the cause of the shake-up is aggressive competition or merely a desire on the part of the exhibitor for something new, the effect is one mad bewilderment to the fan.

The Majestic, a theater with which the Portland photoplay patron has always connected the name of William Fox, has discontinued that brand and has booked General Film attractions, temporarily only, it is rumored. The Star, once playing a part Paramount and part Universal, has for the past few weeks been sharing Mutual Masterpictures with the Orpheum, these pictures being formerly shown at the Columbia and Sunset theaters. However, commencing Sunday, June 20th, the William Fox productions will hold the boards at the Star for a week at a time. The Columbia is featuring World Film Corporation productions, the National has changed to Pathe and Metro, the Globe to a part United Service and the Orpheum will feature the productions of the Big Four and will also take over the weekly Mutual Masterpicture. The Peoples theater, showing the Paramount program, is about the only house of any size in Portland not effected by the general shake-up.

EXCHANGE MEN'S BOARD OF TRADE PROPOSED.

Plans are in the making for an organization among the Portland exchange men to be styled as an exchange men's board of trade. The purpose of the organization will be the mutual protection of exchange men and it is proposed to conduct it on lines similar to those followed by the other mercantile unions in the city. Portland has never had such an organization among the exchange men and with the number of unreliable, fly-by-night exhibitors steadily increasing throughout the country, a union of some kind has become necessary as a protection, not only to the exchange men, but to the established exhibitor, who pays his bills promptly. W. A. Stone, of the Service Film Company, the prime mover of the enterprise, has proposed a luncheon to be given shortly when the matter will be brought to a head.

CLUB PICNICS.

The Photoplayers Club, a new organization among the picture players in Portland, held its first outing at Oswego Lake, a short distance by interurban electric from the city, Sunday, June 6. Sixty members of the club, led by John Chick, took part in the festivities and motion pictures of the various stunts were taken. It is planned to have these outings each week.

SOL. BAUM RESIGNS.

After seven years of continuous service with the People's Amusement Company, Sol Baum, who has been at the head of the company since J. F. Cordray's resignation some time ago, has severed his connection with that concern.

During Mr. Baum's activity with the Peoples' Amusement Company it has conducted twenty-two theaters in Portland and in Oregon and Washington. Recently the company has confined its work to Portland and the Peoples' theater is one of its principal holdings. Mr. Baum is a member of the Portland Municipal Censor Board and vice-president of the Exhibitors' League of Oregon.

While he is not divulging his future plans at the time of this writing, it is understood that Mr. Baum has several attractive propositions under consideration and his many friends hope to see him back in the picture game soon.

PORTLAND GETS APEX.

F. M. Simonton, local representative of Apex and Sawyer, closed a contract with the home office a short time ago whereby the Portland office will become the Northwest headquarters for Apex. The territory handled from Portland will include Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. The arrangement goes into effect immediately. Joe Bloom will handle the Seattle office as a branch under the general direction of Mr. Simonton.

UNIVERSAL MAN VISITS.

Edward Armstrong, traveling representative of the Universal, was in Portland recently in the interest of the Williamson Submarine pictures.

Editors and Censors

Illinois Newspapers Say What They Think About State Censorship Measure and Censorship Within Censorship—Butting into the Picture Field for a Job—Screen and the Press.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LEADING papers of Illinois do not want a state board of censorship. The Jacksonville Journal says:

"There are to be three members, each to have a salary of $2,500. Of course clerks and offices and all other expensive frills will be added.

"Chicago is permitted to have a board of movie censors of its own. A film may be passed by the state board of censors and later be rejected by Chicago's home-made board.

"And even this isn't the end of the story. There is a national board of censors that, according to report, has been doing very good work. This body has a membership that is more competent than we can hope to get on any politically appointed board.

"And if there is anybody who hasn't a job in the movies he would better speak up now, while the picking is good. Get in the fashion and 'butt in.'"

The Evanston Press inquires:

"Who shall censor the newspaper for the editor? Who shall censor pictures for the manager? The public in both cases and not an individual or set of individuals. As a general rule (and there are always the exceptions) the management of the press and the management of picture exhibitions desire that their efforts shall be moral and educational as well as pleasing to the public. The question of censorship is one that must be handled with care. Just now it seems to be another case of 'Fools rush in, etc.'"

NO STRIKE PROBABLE IN ELGIN.

Published reports of a strike of operators in Elgin unless a wage increase is granted, are considered lightly by both managers and employees, according to later advices from that city.

SINGLES BY LIVE SHOWMEN IN ILLINOIS.

The Alhambra, at Freeport, got sixty mothers interested in a baby show contest. "The Great Silence," in which Francis X. Bushman starred, was produced at Starved Rock, near Ottawa. Consequently it went big at the Crescent at Ottawa. Manager West, of the Willard, at Kewanee, had special "city beautiful" films and admitted free all youngsters who wore the buttons of the Junior Civic League, an organization which is improving Kewanee. The Playhouse, at Oak Park, played a return date of "Tillie's Punctured Romance." This house has added Friday to its feature nights.

"A Whim of Fortune" has been selected as the scenario for a local picture to be produced by the Star and Princess theater and the Daily Chronicle at De Kalb. The Oliver Players, a stock company playing the larger Illinois cities, are using Chaplin pictures, changed daily. Sheet music of Charley Chaplin songs are given to the patrons of the Bijou at Monmouth. Manager Burford turned the Aurora, at Aurora, over to the Oak Street Parent-Teachers' Club for a benefit. The Majestic, at Kewanee, features the fact that it allows its pictures to run fifteen minutes to the reel. Burr Swan, of the K. of P. opera house, at Pittsfield, happily informs his patrons that his Paramount program is to be supplemented by the cream of the World Film Corporation subjects. "Old Dutch" was good for a return date at the "K" in Clinton. Manager Stewart of the Lyric, at Robinson, has added a five-piece orchestra. The Apollo and the Daily Star, at Peoria, combined in an essay contest on "Uncle Sam at Work," interesting grade, high, parochial and technical school pupils. The Fox, at Aurora, ran pictures of James Cruze and gave prizes to those who guessed his identity and the theater at which he was to appear.

The Fox theater and the Daily Beacon-News, at Aurora, will produce "Jane's New Job," with local talent.

THE SWITOW DREAM THEATER SOLD TO RAMBUSCH.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Switow Amusement Company, of Louisville, has disposed of its theater at Martinsville, Ind., known as Switow's Dream theater, to J. F. Rambusch, of Shelbyville, Ind. The company has also opened a new airdome at Corydon, Ind., which has a seating capacity of 500. M. Switok, president of the company, is still president of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, which operates the Alamo theater, but he is not taking any active part in the management of the theater, which is operated by Fred Dolle, who is also connected with the Broadway Amusement Company.

STOCKTON BUYS THE NOVELTY.

The Kentucky Amusement Company, incorporated a few months ago to operate the Novelty theater, has sold out its business to George Stockton, lately of Cleveland, O. Mr. Stockton has taken entire charge of the theater, which will continue as a ten-cent house. M. Switow originally built the house and later sold it to D. Levenson. Mr. Levenson operated the theater for nearly two years and then sold it back to M. Switow, who incorporated the Kentucky Amusement Company to operate it. The theater is one of the leading Fourth street amusement houses, and did a nice business until the Alamo and Mary Anderson theaters came into existence. Mr. Stockton has several chances in prospect, and expects to place the theater in a paying position shortly.

CLEAR FORMER LOUISVILLE MAN.

Moving Picture men of Louisville were glad to hear that A. T. Smith, of Tucson, Ariz., a former Louisville man, was not implicated in the embezzlement of Government funds from the post office at Tucson. Mr. Smith some time ago left Louisville and became connected with Roy Gill, proprietor of the Gill theater of Tucson, Ariz. A portion of his time was taken up as a clerk in the post office at Tucson. A. T. Fox, another employe of the post office, was arrested for embezzlement of funds and Gill and Smith were suspected by the officials, but acquitted at the trial when Fox pleaded guilty to the charge. When the arrests were made it was charged that the two former Louisville men were putting embezzled funds into Gill's moving picture show.

FEAR RUINS OF OLD THEATER.

Asserting that the ruins of the old Hopkins theater, on Market street, between First and Second, are a menace to pedestrians, the Market Street Improvement Association of Louisville, at a recent dinner held at Goby's restaurant, appointed a committee to take the matter up with the Board of Public Safety. Hopkins theater was one of the largest and earliest of the local motion picture theaters and was a big paying investment until a fire destroyed the building last fall. It was stated at that time that the theater would be rebuilt as the front and most of the walls were intact. However, the plans miscarried and the property has been idle since that time. It is probable that the ruins will be ordered razed by the local board.

WORK ON THEATER TIED UP.

Bankruptcy proceedings instituted against the Whiton-Wheeler Construction Company, of Louisville, tied up building operations on the new Phoenix theater of Lexington, Ky., which is being erected by the Phoenix Amusement Company of Lexington, of which M. Switow, of Louisville, is the head. The new theater, with a 1,200 capacity, is to be completed during the latter part of August at a cost of about $50,000 and is to have entrances facing on two streets. The trouble in the construction company appears to be a scrap between heads of the company, the voluntary petition having been filed by one members of the firm while the other was in the West Indies. The company will probably be reorganized and the work continued.

SETTLE THE BEN ALI STRIKE.

An amicable settlement of a small strike was reached at Lexington, Ky., between the management of the Ben Ali and members of the International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employes. O. Sheck, vice-president of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, arrived in Lexington from Cleveland, O., and after a short conference it was decided that the operators would go back to work at increased wages, with the provision that they look after the stage and that no additional electricians be employed. The trouble arose over the operators having to look after the switchboard on the stage and the asbestos curtain. The Ben Ali, of which C. H. Berryman is manager, joined the ranks of the moving picture theaters a short time ago after being operated as a legitimate house for some years. The company has been doing very nicely as a motion picture theater.

IN KENTUCKY MOUNTAIN TOWNS.

The Indian Bottom Amusement Company, of Whitesburg, Ky., is a new corporation being promoted in Letcher County. The concern will give motion picture shows two nights out of each week at Blackey, Neon and Whitesburg. These towns are all in the Eastern section of the state, in a rapidly developing mineral and timber district. Whitesburg is an especially active new town. Harvey Yeaman, of Blackey, who is city attorney at that point, is perfecting the organization which may branch out and take in a number of other Kentucky mountain towns. Several prominent citizens of Whitesburg are interested in the venture. Good mining and timber towns have proven exceptionally good locations for motion picture houses and, in fact, better than the average agricultural town. The miners and lumbermen generally live in camps or towns and do not have to depend on crops or weather conditions to either come to town or have money to devote on amusement.

KENTUCKY GLEANINGS.

At Stanford, Ky., C. Hays Foster, manager of the Stanford Opera House, has just purchased a new Powers 6A motor-driven machine.

Marvin Gay and Lewis Judy, of Mt. Sterling, Ky., who are building a new theater, made a trip to Cincinnati recently to make arrangements for the necessary equipment for the new theater.

The Farmers' & Traders' Bank of Maysville, Ky., recently attached a piano and other equipment of the Pastime theater to satisfy a note which was not met when due. The theater has experienced a temporary lull in business, due somewhat to bad weather, and has therefore been unable to meet its obligations. It is thought that a temporary arrangement will be made to tide the concern over.

Manager Stockley, of the Rex, Hopkinsville, Ky., recently announced that he had made arrangements to put on licensed films at the theater, but that he would finish the serials, the "Black Box," "Exploits of Elaine" and "Who Pays?" With these exceptions the service is now made up at both the Princess and Rex theaters of the Lubin, Vitagraph, Selig, Kalem, Essanay and Edison productions.

A. N. Smith & Company, of Greensburg, Ky., are promoters of a new motion picture show which is being given in Amusement Hall. The new proprietors have assured the public that they will give nothing but clean and moral performances.

Sherman Arn & Brother, of Maysville, Ky., opened their motion picture theater at Ewing, Ky., in the Hysong building, on June 12. High grade motion pictures and music constitutes the program. Ewing has been badly in need of such a show house for some time and is expected to support the new theater nicely.

The Georgetown Opera House, of Georgetown, Ky., has been consolidated with the Alamo, of the same city, with the result that hereafter matinees will be given at the Alamo, while the night shows will be held in the Opera House. Shows will be given at both houses on Saturday. The two theaters will be under the management of A. B. Barkley, Jr.

The Hazard Motion Picture Company, recently incorporated at Hazard, Ky., to manufacture commercial films, has named the following officers: H. E. Bullock, president; R. O. Davis, vice-president; W. G. Holt, treasurer; Tonie Zoellers, secretary and general manager, and W. B. Osize, photographer.

"Graustark," "The Goddess," "Fine Feathers" and "Island of Regeneration" were the films shown at the Mary Anderson theater of Louisville during the week starting June 13.

In No-Censor State

In Missouri, State with No Censorship Law, Report to Federation of Women's Clubs Shows Wholesome Theaters and High-Grade Films—Yet State Censorship Is Advocated by These Clubs.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

A REPORT was read by Miss Pearl Mitchell, chairman of the Federation of Women's Club's, which recently met at St. Joseph, Mo., on the motion picture theatres in Missouri. From nearly every section of the state, it was reported that the theaters were all well ventilated and that all pictures exhibited were high-class, moral pictures.

Even though the report was so good and Missouri is without a censor board, the women's clubs are advocating just such a proposition, that could soon be turned into an evil machine against moving pictures. Only a few of the women really admit that the moving picture companies know their business and can send in the right kind of pictures, although they do admit that this is just what they have been doing.

MERELY WANTED TO ENACT.

The Common Council at Kansas City has placed its ban on all fight pictures, especially the Willard-Johnson fight. They even went further and placed their official condemnation on all pictures that might create racial prejudice.

According to the moving picture men in Kansas City the action is not the result of study by the Kansas City police law makers, but was instigated by hearsay from other states and cities. The Common Council never saw the Willard-Johnson fight pictures nor any of the others for the purpose of censoring, but they added the following to the ordinance which prohibits the exhibition of any obscene or immoral picture: "Or any picture tending to cause strife or disturbance of the peace between persons of the different races, colors, nationalities or sections."

The amendment further provides that no such film shall be rented, sold or given away to any person, firm or corporation for the purpose of exhibition.

THE NEXT BEST THEATERS IN KANSAS CITY.

Quite a number of arguments have arisen between moving picture exchange men as to which is the best theatre in Kansas City, excepting the Willis Wood. Each film exchange man upholds some particular high class theater that uses his service. After a number of such arguments it has generally been conceded that the Gladstone theater and the Warwick are tied for the honors. The theaters are both sort of free lances and book where they please.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY REILLY STILL RUNS THE ROYAL.

Barney Reilly, formerly of Yale, and a big league player of note, who has managed a group of theaters in the West, is now giving much of his time to his new duties as first assistant district attorney in Buchanan County, Mo., of which county St. Joseph is the county seat. Mr. Reilly's managerial activities covered the Royal at Sioux City; the Orpheum at Atchison, and the Orpheum, Royal and Lyric at St. Joseph. He sold his stock in all the theaters but the Royal, when he entered vigorously into the duties of the district attorney's office. He owns and manages the Royal, however, which is a busy theater, on the five-cent basis. The Lyric has closed.

ORPHEUM'S BIG ORCHESTRA.

Herman Reinke, manager of the Orpheum moving picture playhouse at St. Joseph, Mo., believes in giving the most elaborate musical programs, and his patrons have come to expect a great deal. Often as many as twenty-six pieces are in the orchestra on special occasions. The Orpheum now has the Frederick Rowley Orpheum Orchestra.

The Orpheum, though particularly well situated for natural cooling, regulates the temperature in the summer by means of air drawn over ice by motor fans, and circulated through ventilators in the floor. The storage capacity of the ice tanks is 900 pounds. The air, besides being circulated into the house, is also further distributed by means of many fans in all parts. The building is open on four sides; it is on a corner, and the balcony windows open above the roofs of the adjacent low structures.

HEARD IN KANSAS CITY.

E. R. Pearson, manager of the V-L-S-E at Kansas City, recently returned from a trip to Denver, Colorado Springs, Omaha and Lincoln. Mr. Pearson went to Denver to open an office there for his company.

He says that a nice suite of rooms has been had at 1031 Seventeenth street. Frank Harris, formerly manager of the Empress theater at Omaha, is in charge.

Wallace Norton, formerly in charge of the poster department of the Pathe Exchange here, is now in charge of the poster department for the Kleine Film Company.

KANSAS STATE NOTES.

A new policy in showing motion pictures in Garfield Park, Topeka, Kan., was recently adopted. It has been the custom for the last two summers to give two reels of pictures each night free of charge. Under the new plan the show will be given in the casino of the park. The admission will be five cents. A feature film will be run each evening according to the management.

A report current in Wichita conveyed the idea that Low Nathansen had given a syndicate the option on the Cosy and the Best theatres. According to Mr. Nathansen the newspaper account was in error and he has not contemplated letting either theater go.

The people of Topeka, Kan., are glad to hear that Marc Robbins of that city is starring with the Universal Film Company. Marc Robbins played in amateur theatricals and later in stock in Topeka. Manager Crawford, of the Crawford theater, says that he is an old friend as he and Marc played in a production of home talent at the Crawford theater of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." They were then very young men. Marc was Uncle Tom, Mr. Crawford says.

The business men of Kackley, Kan., are giving free moving picture matinees every Saturday afternoon for the benefit of their business.

IN ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Manager Riegelman at St. Joseph has gone one better on his string orchestra, in his effort to improve his music. He thinks he has made a discovery, and established an innovation for moving picture houses. He has installed a Victrola. The orchestra plays the music to the vocal renditions of the Victrola artists.

Dr. W. W. Wertenberger, an eye, ear, nose and throat specialist of St. Joseph, Mo., and a highly respected citizen, owns the Empress theater in St. Joseph; and he is very successful as a manager. St. Joseph is a brilliantly lighted city, and Dr. Wertenberger has over the entrance one of the most elaborate electric signs.

No Youthful Operators

Michigan Fire Marshal Winship Will Prosecute Managers Who Allow Boys Under 18 in Their Operating Rooms—In Case of Accident They Are Liable for Damages and May Lose Licenses.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

ARRESTS of Michigan managers who allow boys in their operating rooms will be ordered, according to State Fire Marshal Winship. Not only will managers face damage suits and prosecution if an accident occurs while shows are operated in violation of laws, but licenses will be revoked.

"The terrible death of Assistant Operator Bernard Ohman in a Michigan theater should serve as a warning to exhibitors," said Winship. "It should also show them the necessity of complying with all of the provisions of the theater law, especially that section which prohibits the employment of operators under 18 years of age. Statements differ as to how the film caught fire, but an investigation by this department shows that the boy had charge of the booth but a few moments before the fire."

WHOOPING COUGH SPECTATORS.

Health Officer Keho, at Bay City, said his attention had been called to the fact that motion picture theater proprietors were taking no precaution to prevent children with whooping cough from attending their shows. He said he believed photoplay men who knowingly permitted afflicted ones to attend were criminally liable with the parents. Publication of such conditions is bound to keep business from all theaters.

MANAGER IN TROUBLE WITH UNION OPERATORS.

Special to Moving Picture World, by Indiana Trade News Service.

THE fight being waged by Manager Swain of the Annex, Indianapolis, and the Operators' Union reached police court when Arthur Lyday and Arthur McCloskey were arrested charged with obstructing the sidewalk. The two Arthurs have been walking up and down in front of the house with signs in hand reading, "there is a good show across the street" and "this house refuses to employ union operators." The sign bearers were charged with "shoving" the signs in front of peoples' faces and obstructing traffic. Lyday and McClosky declared in court that the sidewalk obstruction came from the fact that people stopped to read the theater sign which warned people not to pay any attention to "the tramps and bums who are parading in front of the theater."

Small House Fire Alarms

Peter Jeup Wins Fight to Save Needless Expense for Alarm Boxes in Minor Theaters—Cost $25 to $50 a Year—Demanded by Fire Marshal—Judge Rules Otherwise—Prepare a New Law.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

OWING to the fight waged by Peter J. Jeup, of the Luna theater, against the installation of fire alarm boxes in minor theaters, owners and managers of houses seating 400 or less and coming under the "minor" class will not have to install these boxes, which have been costing the exhibitors from $25 to $50 a year.

Some time ago the fire marshall notified Mr. Jeup that fire alarm boxes must be installed in the Luna theater. Mr. Jeup refused to comply with the request and the matter was taken to the Recorder's Court for test purposes. After hearing both sides Judge William F. Connolly ruled that Mr. Jeup was in the right and the fire marshall has not the right to compel any owner of a minor theater to make the installation mentioned.

This victory means a saving to dozens of Detroit exhibitors of many hundreds of dollars annually. In this connection it might be said that while the exhibitors have things in their favor under the new ruling, the fire marshal is behind a new resolution which will shortly be introduced into the city council that will require "fire alarm boxes to be installed in all regular and minor theaters." If this is passed then the exhibitors will be right back where they were before. It would seem that this is an excellent opportunity for the minor exhibitors to get together and fight this proposed ordinance.

"PROHIBITION" AT LYCEUM.

The "Prohibition" film being handled in Michigan by Arthur Maitland was advertised to be shown originally at the Arcadia dancing academy. The liquor interests, however, got after the building department on the grounds that the Arcadia was not constructed in accordance with the city ordinance governing places where film can be exhibited. Mr. Maitland wasn't worried in the least by the action of the liquor interests and the building department, and he immediately arranged to have the pictures shown at the Lyceum theater, where they played to excellent business.

CROWDING AISLES IN MICHIGAN.

In the monthly bulletin issued by the State Fire Marshal's Office attention is called in the latest issue to the fact that numerous complaints have been received at the office in Lansing, Mich., to the fact that certain owners of moving picture theatres were violating the State law by allowing patrons to stand in aisles and passageways during performances. In a number of cases arrests have followed. Further attention is called to the fire marshal law which prohibits crowded aisles and passageways, and adds that to permit such a condition is not only a violation of the law, but is very dangerous. "Of course, we realize that when a big attraction is on the theatres want to get all the money they can and they don't like to turn away people; nevertheless, it is against the law to put them in the aisles. The law is there and should be obeyed." Thus spoke one of the deputies of the fire marshal's office.

The bulletin also says: "The Michigan Legislature of 1915 passed bills which will greatly strengthen both the State Fire Marshal Law and the act pertaining to the regulation of moving picture theatres."

FRESH ITEMS FROM HAWAII.

Special to Moving Picture World from Hawaii News Service.

SHOWMAN W. A. Fernandez has been playing George Klein's "Quo Vadis" over his island circuit of theaters. This film was passed at Honolulu for a Sunday night show at the Bijou.

P. S. Crawley, general representative of the Buffalo Bill Historical Picture Company, brought a set of his pictures to Honolulu. Chief Hailstorm, who advertises the pictures by appearing in Indian costume, talked to the boys of the city at the Y. M. C. A. The pictures were shown at the Popular.

"What is the difference between a ball game and a decent moving picture show?" asks the Hilo Herald. Some people would be better employed at a picture show than attending a crap-shooting matinee.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance," the biggest comedy feast ever given in the islands ran for a week at the Bijou.

Montreal Charity Tax

New Measure Imposing Tax on Amusement Tickets Ready to Be Presented to City Council—Will Raise Half a Million for Charities—Owners Must Account to City—Fines and Penalties.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE long-expected by-law, by which the city of Montreal expects to raise $500,000 yearly by levying a tax of one cent on all amusement tickets, has been completed by the City Attorney and will be presented without delay to the City Council for ratification.

The new measure is founded on the permission given the city at the last session of the Legislature. The proceeds are to be given to hospitals and other charities. For years complaint has been made that the city was backward in giving to charities, and the reply has been always that the annual income was so small that it was impossible to increase the grants. As a result Alderman L. A. Lapointe several months ago began working on several schemes and finally selected the plan now to be tried out. The proposal resulted in considerable discussion at Quebec, but authorization was finally given.

Among other things it is laid down in the by-law that the one-cent tax shall embrace every conceivable form of amusement, viz., theaters, circuses, moving picture houses, shows of all kinds, sports, etc. The tickets will be printed by the city, and amusement places will simply be expected to look after the collection. We quote the most important articles:

"Sec. 3.—A tax of one cent is imposed on each person admitted into any place of amusement, even if such person is admitted with a complimentary card or ticket. (This is hard luck for the friends of censors and other "officials."—G. G.). The said tax shall be due and payable by such person each time said person is admitted into a place of amusement.

"Sec. 4.—The tax shall be payable in cash or by means of a ticket issued by the city.

"Sec. 6.—In order to facilitate the payment of such tax, the city shall have tickets printed, and shall sell the same in such manner as it may deem fit, at the price of one cent per ticket.

"Sec. 7.—Every owner of a place of amusement shall under the penalties hereinafter provided, collect the said tax and render an account thereof to the city on the day following the date on which he shall have collected the same.

"Sec. 10.—It is forbidden to enter as a spectator any place of amusement without having previously paid the said tax.

"Sec. 11.—Every owner of a place of amusement, as well as his employees or representatives are forbidden to admit into a place of amusement any person liable to the payment of said tax, unless such tax be previously paid by said person.

"Sec. 13.—Every person offending against any of the provisions of this by-law or refusing or failing to fulfill any of the obligations imposed on him by this by-law, shall, upon conviction of such offence before the Recorder's Court of Montreal, be liable to a fine with or without costs, and, in default of immediate payment of said fine, with or without costs, as the case may be, to an imprisonment to be fixed by the said Recorder's Court, at its discertion, but such fine shall not exceed forty dollars, and the imprisonment shall not be for a longer period than two calendar months; the said imprisonment, however, to cease at any time before the expiration of the term fixed by said Recorder's Court upon payment of the fine, or fine and costs, as the case may be; and, if the infringement continues, the offender shall be liable to the fine and penalty above mentioned for each day during which the infringement is continued.

"Sec. 14.—The revocation of the license granted by the city to an owner of a place of amusement is imposed, as an additional penalty, on such owner, who shall have been found guilty for the third time, by the Recorder's Court, of infringing any of the provisions of this by-law."

SUMMER BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The business outlook for the summer show business in Montreal is gloomy. In the "legitimate" houses business is rank—only one house has remained open. It is thought that His Majesty's and the Princess, the two largest legitimate houses, will go over to pictures. Their policies will most probably be big features, such as "The Birth of a Nation" and "With the Allied Troops in Europe." The former picture should go strong, as local fans have been well informed as to its merits. This will, to a certain extent, affect the West End picture houses. Still, there will be a good many people forced by circumstances to forego a holiday out of town this summer, and this should be a little consoling.

MONTREAL BRIEFS.

Harry W. McCollum succeeds Mr. Harwell as local Universal exchange manager. Mr. McCollum has been with the Universal ever since it was organized. He was until recently connected with the Chicago office. He has the good wishes of all.

William Allen, who was with the Imperial theater, and then with the General Film Co., has been appointed Winnipeg manager for Pathe. William is probably the youngest manager in Canada, and it's a safe bet that he will make things hum in his new sphere of operations.

The Globe theater is now under the management of Mr. I. Sourkes. Mr. Sourkes was formerly connected with the Noted Players Feature Film Co. Business has been good since Mr. Sourkes assumed management of the Globe. World Film features are shown at this house. "The Quest," Mutual, was a recent feature.

Patrons' demands were so insistent that the management of the Tivoli had to reengage "The Cup of Life," an Ince masterpicture.

Lachine, Que., is to have a $25,000 picture house. A permit to build a moving picture theater at the corner of Ninth avenue and Notre Dame street has been issued to Messrs. Le Plant and Boulanger.

An amusement park has been opened at Longuenil, Que. It has a vaudeville and photoplay house. Longuenil is across the river from Montreal and can be reached by ferry and street car.

Mr. Herring, president of the Exhibitors' Association and manager of the Mount Royal, managed to take a much-needed rest, aided and abetted by his trusty Studebaker. During his absence affairs were managed at the Mount Royal by his assistant, Mr. Lanthier. Incidentially, Mr. Lanthier is the proud recipient of congratulations. Mother and baby are doing well. G. EIGHT HOUR LAW FOR WOMEN.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington, D. C. Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

The city officials are keeping an eagle eye on all mercantile establishments, theaters and other places of business employing female labor to see that the eight hour law for female employees is not violated. Several cases have been taken into the courts, although thus far no violations have been reported against the theaters. The legality of the provision has already been upheld and the advertising obtained from convictions in the courts is not of a type to be courted by exhibitors. The agents of the government mean business and a number of complaints are to be reported.

MISUSED POSTERS.

The continued misuse of posters was called to the attention of the World correspondent last week when a shipment was received from an out of town theater. The reel container had been wrapped up in a number of posters and the package had evidently received pretty rough treatment on its way to this city. It had the appearance of having been dropped in a mud puddle somewhere and in several places the paper had been torn clear through to the film case. It clearly showed poor judgment. The exchangeman stated that it was his opinion that the job of getting the films and paper ready to be returned had been delegated to some employee of the theater shipping it, in all probability to some inexperienced boy, for no exhibitor would so abuse the property, and he asked that the matter be brought to the attention of the exhibitors through the Washington column of the World.

LITTLE CARE FOR FILMS.

Evidently last week was a hard one with the exchanges, or perhaps it was that the intense heat made the managers a little more peevish than usual, for upon visiting another of the offices, the World correspondent's advice was asked as to what should be done with an exhibitor who would allow such careless use of a film as to allow a part of it to drop into a water bucket or on a wet floor which caused a large part of the title to be washed away, while other parts of the reel were splashed to such an extent that huge pieces had to be cut out.

The exhibitor in this instance did not even have the good grace to send in a letter of apology for the accident and injury to the reel. This is an evidence of a lack of proper co-operation between the members of the two branches of the business. The careless handling of both reels and paper is not overestimated and the result will be that all of the exchanges will make a charge for the latter. The greatest amount of trouble seems to be with the out of town exhibitor who possibly thinks it does not matter a whole lot when he is distantly located from Washington . However, the exhibitor who spoiled the title has been sent a bill and it is believed that when a few more of them are subjected to a charge they will come to the conclusion that the rental of a film does not include the privilege of spoiling it so that others cannot follow with it.

J. LEO YATES TO MANAGE WASHINGTON FILM.

J. Leo Yates, who for some time has been managing the Baltimore branch of the local office of the United Film Service, has succeeded S. J. Mayer as manager of the Washington Film Exchange, distributor of the Universal service. Mr. Yates is well known locally for he started in with the General Film Company about six years ago as a bookkeeper. After a few months of desk work he was made a traveling representative and later appointed as assistant branch manager. After serving in the latter capacity for some time he was sent to Baltimore to take charge of the branch there. After leaving the General Film Company he joined forces with the United, remaining with that organization until assuming his present position. Mr. Yates expects to build up the service here for he can now offer a three reel daily lock service, including Sunday shows. It was only recently that this was made possible and the

TOLD IN THE CAPITOL.

The Niagara theater, on Seventh street, Northwest, will hereafter be devoted entirely to a colored patronage. It is the only house in the downtown section open to the colored population. J. F. Hymans, who now operates the theater, will use Universal and Pathe service.

F. M. Crocker, of Norfolk, Va., who was a visitor here last week, announced that the new Ghent theater in that city will be opened to the public on July 1. with Metro, Famous Players and other high grade photoplay productions.

Sidney B. Lust created quite a little excitement last week when he escorted "Heinie" and "Louie," the comedians featured in the productions released through the United Film Service, around the city in a high-powered, seven passenger Mitchell automobile. Crowds of youngsters followed the machine and when it stopped in front of a number of theaters, the streets became almost impassable, and even grown-ups stopped in their travels to gaze upon the costumed photoplayers. It made no difference to them that neither Heinie nor Louie were present in the flesh and were merely represented by giant cut-outs securely strapped on the running board on either side of the automobile, or that the smile of the actors was one that would not fade and was only of pasteboard and paint it was something of a novelty, this sort of advertising, and so much attention did it create that Mr. Lust is going to introduce both Heinie and Louie to the fans of other sections of the city, and in Baltimore and other nearby towns as well. The cut-outs are outlined with small electric lights while the eyes and the nose of each are also illuminated.

Exchange managers and other large users of the telephone were considerably disappointed last week when in an opinion handed down by Justice Walter McCoy in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia it was held that under the act of Congress, the local telephone company had the right to establish measured service stations in business places and to refuse to enter into any contracts under which unlimited service is to be rendered. Suit had been brought to restrain the cancellation of the latter. The telephone is a matter of great expense to the exchangemen and other business people and it was hoped that the court would find in their favor.

Congratulations are being heaped upon Gerald Hobart Payne, who assists George Mann in conducting the affairs of the Paramount Pictures exchange in this city, and Miss Ethel May Hogue, cashier at the Alhambra theater, who quietly slipped away one evening last week to Rockville, Md., the Gretna Green of Washington, to have a certain knot tied whereupon blushing Miss Hogue became blushing Mrs. Payne and from all accounts blushing is not unbecoming to her. The best wishes of all are with them in the hope that their life together will be one of great joy.

A. P. Lombard, who has been in Washington for some few weeks, gave a demonstration of the latest model of the Simplex motion picture machine before the members of the local operators' union. This is the first trip of Mr. Lombard into this territory for the Precision Machine Company.

Carl Jones, formerly representing the Metropolitan Features Company and at one time an exhibitor of Baltimore, Md., has assumed charge in that city of the branch of the Washington office of the United Film Service. The branch has been moved from 28 West Lexington street to 419 East Baltimore street where it is more easily accessible to the exhibitors of Baltimore.

Latonia Derby Filmed

Cameras Get "Good Story" of the Great Horse Race Event Near Cincinnati—Clarence Runey as the Representative of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co. on Hand—Films on Screen Next Morning Made Hit.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHILE the old-fashioned newspaper photographer has not become exactly a back number, it is safe to say that he is in danger of complete eclipse by the moving picture men at all events of any real evidence and this was never more clearly shown than at the running of the historic Latonia Derby last Saturday, attended by the largest crowd in its history, and under weather and other conditions which could not have been improved upon. Clarence Runey, Cincinnati's premier camera-man, was there as the representative of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co. and of the Pathe Weekly, and photographed the great race at several stages, getting the thrilling finish, the winner, Royal II, an imported English colt, after the race, with his millionaire owner, Jefferson Livingston.

He handled the event single-handed, and not only got first-class results, but broke all sorts of records in getting the stuff out, as shown by the fact that the film, cut down to 250 feet to give only the cream of it, was shown at the Alhambra the following morning. It has made a decided hit around town, and will be shown in virtually all of the local houses. Moreover, the Derby fitted in nicely with the plans of the Highland Film Corporation, which had three men on hand to take pictures of all phases of the day. They got several races besides the Derby, various views of the enormous crowd, the stables, and so forth, comprising about 1,000 feet in all; and this will be used by the company, according to President Ford, in its first big feature, "Kentucky," a six-reel production which is now in course of preparation. There may have been other moving-picture camera-men around as well, but those named were on the job and got results. The public is no longer satisfied with a single inanimate photograph; it wants to see the event actually reproduced, and the moving-picture does it.

"NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER" HAS GOOD WEEK AT GRAND.

BARS FILMS ON "WET" AND "DRY."

Cincinnati managers are up in arms at the indications recently noted to the effect that propagandists for various semi-political movements are making rather clever efforts to use moving-pictures for the furtherance of their ends, disguising them so as to conceal their real object. This undoubtedly efficient method of "boosting" various movements was severely discouraged recently when the local management of B. F. Keith's theater, which runs several reels regularly in connection with its summer vaudeville program, was notified by the general management of the company to use no films touching upon either side of the "wet" and "dry" question, which is a burning issue locally, as elsewhere. The reason for this ruling is plain enough, lying in the fact that people who go to theaters to be amused or instructed resent having political issues thrust upon them, especially if they happen, as they frequently do, to have pronounced views on the opposite side of the matter. It is believed that the local League, which is now approaching greater strength than ever before, with its reorganization, will take some action on this general subject before long, ruling out partisan films as a whole.

LIPSON'S STRIKING SIGNS.

The new electric signs recently completed and installed by the Strand and the Family theaters, both of which are under the management of I. Lipson, on opposite sides of the same block, are beyond question the most striking in use at any house in the city. The Strand had a large and handsome sign bearing the name of the house in red letters against a green background high up on the front of the building and conspicuous for blocks. Later, the regular type of theater sign, with movable block letters to feature the name of the star and the play, became desirable, in connection with the exclusive Paramount attractions, and when these signs were put in, one at each end of the sidewalk canopy, a pair of immense arrows, outlined in lights, was also installed, linking the name sign with the new signs giving the name of the attraction.

At the same time the old signs at the Family, over on Vine street, were removed and replaced with a pair of much larger and handsomer ones, placed together at an angle making them visible from both directions on Cincinnati's busiest thoroughfare. Manager Lipson is very proud of the electrical effects now seen at his two houses, as he may well be.

MONTESSORI SYSTEM FILMS.

Pictures to educate the educators, which is a step a little in advance of the ordinary sort, were shown to members of the Hamilton County Teachers' Association at the Lyric last week. They were taken in New York, showing the workings of the famous Montessori system of education with small children, at the school founded there for that purpose, and the known efficiency of the system made the exhibition extremely interesting to the teachers. The pictures were explained by a teacher who had studied the system in Italy and New York. They were shown in the morning, and many besides the teachers attended.

CINCINNATI GLEANINGS.

J. E. Camplin of Springfield, O., has become manager of the Colonial theater, the handsome house owned by the Public Amusement Co. He has been for some time connected with the Gus Sun Amusement Co., which owns the Alhambra and New Sun theater in Springfield, having charge of both houses, and made many friends among the public.

The Lyric theater, of Piqua, O., has been disposed of by its owner, B. F. Sarver, to C. E. Miller, and will hereafter be under the management of George Ziegenfelder. One of the first changes made by the new owner was to give the house its old name, the Bijou, which it bore until it was purchased a year ago by Mr. Sarver. Manager Ziegenfelder announces that the house will show pictures exclusively during the entire summer, probably returning to vaudeville and moving pictures combined in the fall.

With Eliminated Scenes

Spokane Local Censors Find Films with Scenes Deleted by National Board of Censorship—Board Sends Detailed Reports to Local Police, but Lacks Power to Enforce Its Judgments.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH., June 17.—Some interest has been manifested among moving picture men and the local censors recently over developments that all pictures bearing the official stamp of the National Board of Censorship have the stamp with the instructions from that body to eliminate certain scenes or portions and it has developed that some of these creep back in or are not cut after the pictures get away from the eyes of the censors according to reports here. The scenes ordered eliminated are tabulated in the weekly bulletin of the board and forwarded to every chief of police, censor and manufacturer in the United States, but not to the individual moving picture managers.

It is the claim that certain of these productions have been shown here which did not have the eliminations made and that as there is no law by which the National Board of Censors can force the producers to make the cuts the scenes can easily be shown after getting away from the censors, as the producers enjoy the confidence of the censors. The matter was taken up with the national board by the local censors and it developed that scenes were in the films that would never have been passed by the National Board of Censors. The local managers are not blamed, as they do not have copies of the board's reports and these managers have been ready to make any such cuts suggested.

Wilbur W. Hindley, dramatic critic of the Spokesman-Review in an article during the present week goes into detail on this matter which has been arousing investigation since Orrin G. Cocks was here and in his statement said:

"As an illustration of the way in which the rulings of the national board are sometimes disregarded, the recent showing in the city of Olga Petrova in 'The Heart of a Painted Woman' is a case in point. The picture was approved, subject to the following four eliminations: Reel 2—Reduce the scene where Martha drinks from the slipper, making it a flash so as to show her drinking only once from the slipper. Eliminate the entire incident of the drunken man trying to climb the stairs to Martha and falling down.

"Reel 3—Eliminate the subtitle, 'Barrett on a Wager Uses Falmouth's Hypodermic Needle.'

"Eliminate the scene which follows, showing Barrett using the needle. This entire incident is to be removed from the picture. In the version of the picture, shown locally, not one of these suggestions had been complied with, although the production bore the official stamp. That is but one of several similar instances of which the local censor has a record. In other pictures it was suspected that certain scenes had never been submitted to the national board, as the standards of that body are fairly well known to municipal censors and it is not difficult to detect violations. The bits of business were noted and reported to the national board's advisory secretary, Orrin G. Cocks, a recent Spokane visitor, and the information came from him that such scenes were not in the negative sent him to New York for review by the censoring committees of the board. It is a matter of sincere regret, but it is nevertheless true that some manufacturers are deliberately going the limit of decency and good taste in their productions, in street parlance, 'seeing how far they can go and get away with it.' They are the worst enemies of their own industry."

The absolute impossibility of getting away with illegitimate practices in our business ought to soak in soon.

GATHERED IN SPOKANE.

"The Valley of the Missing," the William Fox production from the novel by Grace Miller White, opened a four days' engagement in the Casino and played to capacity audiences the opening evening.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer announces that he will run "The Birth of A Nation" in the new Clemmer theater early in August and that it will also be run in the Seattle house in which he is interested. The prices will probably range from 75 cents to $1 here.

Henry Woodruff and Gladys Brockwell appeared at the Lyric theater for two days in the Mutual masterpicture, " A Man And His Mate." Large audiences witnessed the presentation.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer's Redheaded Club of boys are winning new laurels this week, as this is flower week of the Spokane Ad Club and the boys are aiding in distributing flowers to downtown apartment and lodging houses and to hospitals. They also assist in gathering the flowers and delivering them to stations to be put on trains and distributed to passengers

EXPRESS AND PARCELS POST IN MEXICO.

By Harry B. Ott, Chihuahua Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE new rates as announced by the Constitutionalist Express, which controls the greater part of the territory formerly held by the Wells Fargo Express Co., work a great hardship on exhibitors. For the new rates the old silver rates are taken as a basis, divided by two, to secure the equivalent in U. S. currency, and multiplied by the present rate of exchange, about thirty to one. However, in this country there is no law prohibiting the shipment of films by mail, and parcels post has proved to be the way out of the difficulty. Packed in 5 kilo (11 pounds) packages, films may be shipped by mail as safely as by express, and at a much more moderate rate.

CONDITIONS IMPROVE.

At the least prospect of peace in this country, conditions appear better immediately. Since President Wilson's note was delivered to the Mexican chiefs, and it was apparent that some effort was to be made on the part of the Mexican nation itself, to put its house in order, conditions have visibly improved. Exhibitors all report good houses, and in many instances the S. R. O. sign has been out. But, above all, the exchange rate, which is always a good index of conditions, has gone down. The resumption of the payment by smelters, mining companies, etc., of salaries in silver, it is expected, will improve conditions, as will also the recently decreed free and unlimited coinage of silver.

MEXICAN SHORT ITEMS.

The Sanabia motion picture tent has opened up in Durango, Durango, and reports good business.

Francisco Beas' combined picture and vaudeville show played recently in Chihuahua to capacity houses.

The Alcazar of this city, is advertising for next week "Constantine," an Italian eight reel subject. One peso admission will be charged.

The electric light company of this city has announced a raise of 300 per cent. on its electric current rate. This will naturally seriously effect the exhibitors.

The Teatro de los Heroes has closed for the summer. Its picture and vaudeville policy was not a success, due to the fact that the house is adapted only to large legitimate productions, and its running expenses are very heavy.

From all reports the theaters at Monterey, Nuevo Leon, have recently been doing very badly. The city has suffered heavily from the continued evacuation of contending armies, and consequent lack of communication with the outside world. The Salon Rojo is Monterey's principal moving picture house.

Francisco Sanabia, one of Mexico's pioneer picture men, and owner of a large number of picture tent-shows, was in this city recently. Mr. Sanabia owns the Mexican rights to a large number of European feature films.

The "Carpa Modelo" has just inaugurated a season of pictures and vaudeville in Gomez Palacio, Durango.

TO GET FILMS OF BIRD LIFE.

Special to Moving Picture World from Trades Press Services.

THE National Association of Audubon Societies has sent an expedition into the islands of the coast of Louisiana there to obtain moving pictures of Louisiana bird life, some of the greatest bird reservations of the world being located in that territory under protection of the Louisiana Conservation Commission. The pictures will be released through Thanhouser throughout the United States and elsewhere, both as educationals and by way of advertising the wonderful work being done in bird protection by the state.

The party, which for purposes of picture making, is in charge of H. K. Job, widely known for his wild life photography. He is acting now in his capacity as head of the department of applied ornithology of the National Association of Audubon Societies.

BUGBEE HEAD METRO OFFICE.

Karl Bugbee, until recently New Orleans manager for the World Film Corporation, has been named New Orleans manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, according to recent announcement made in the Southern City. The announcement followed a visit to New Orleans of W. B. Atkinson, special representative of Metro, but is understood to have been arranged for some time, the appointment having been rumored for several weeks, but Karl was sawing wood and saying nothing but keeping it all under his hat even from his closest friends, waiting the completion of final arrangements. Mr. Bugbee is a Minnesotian born but has made his home in the Crescent City for thirteen years.

Metro will open offices with Mr. Bugbee in charge in the Nola Building, 407 Carondelet street, July 1. The first booking under the Metro mark for New Orleans will be "Heart of a Painted Woman," featuring Olga Petrova, at Pearce's Trianon, Sunday, June 21, excepting "The Heart of Maryland," which ran a week at the Athenaeum before it was authoritatively announced that Metro would maintain an office in New Orleans.

GULF STATE BREEZES.

Pearce's Trianon showed "The Dawn of a To-morrow" last week at twenty cents to big crowds, the attendance holding up throughout a five-day run. This initiates a policy of occasional twenty-cent pictures at the Trianon. Pearce's Tudor theater is a twenty-cent house, occasionally ten, and the Trianon, as Mr. Pearce puts it is a ten cent house, occasionally twenty, it all depending upon his judgment of the quality of the picture.

The Trianon's organ is being installed and will be first heard about July 1. The event will be advertised extensively, a concert being promised for the first day. The name of the organist has not yet been announced, but it is understood that a man of considerable local and Southern note has been chosen. The organ itself is the latest thing of its kind and size and is expected to excite comment.

1465 Broadway New York

The Athenaeum, big auditorium, property of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, recently noted as having been opened as a feature picture house by William Wiesfeld of New York, has discontinued. No statement has been issued, but it is understood that the difficulties of getting the crowd to come so far from Canal street was too difficult. "The Heart of Maryland" and "Salambo" were the two pictures shown, each running one week. It is generally regretted in New Orleans that the house did not continue operation, as to those who attended it proved quite a pleasure, both from the airiness of the house and the quality of the music and the pictures.

S. T. Stephens, New Orleans manager for the William Fox Film Corporation, leaves June 29 for the five day meeting of Fox managers in Chicago.

Meyer Simmonds, New Orleans manager for the Apex, has gone to New York during the suspension of business during which the company is being reorganized.

S. B. Samson, formerly Chicago manager for the Pathe Exchange Incorporated at Chicago, has succeeded B. S. Bryan as manager at New Orleans. Mr. Bryan has left for Jacksonville but as yet has not issued any statement for publication regarding his new connection.

The General Film Company at New Orleans has arranged to move its offices to the three story building at 343 Baronne street July 1, taking the whole building. The place is now being remodelled and when completed and occupied will be one of the finest in the South.

J. E. Pearce, Southern manager of the Pearce interests, has left for a tour of the company's interests through the North. He will go to New York and remain there for several days.

E. Auger, newly appointed Southern manager for the World Film Corporation, headquarters at New Orleans, recently returned from a tour to the East on which he visited the branches under his control as far away as Washington. He is now off on a tour to the West on which he will stop in Dallas and run into Oklahoma where his company contemplates opening a branch. Mr. Augur was good enough to say that the trade papers had done a good deal during the last few months towards emphasizing the fact that New Orleans is on the movie map. The World Film Corporation formerly maintained its Southern headquarters at Atlanta, moving to New Orleans only recently, and, at present, being the only big exchange with headquarters in the Crescent City.

Governor Hall Thursday morning, June 10, at Baton Rouge, in the presence of a number of members of the general assembly and some of the leading sugar planters, signed the Fontenot anti-trust bills. A picture and motion picture of the scene was taken by the Ewing Motion Picture Co., a local company.

IN CALIFORNIA.

The new Hippodrome theater, formerly Ye Liberty, has been opened with vaudeville and feature pictures at Oakland, Cal.

P. M. Hunt and G. A. Devenpeck have opened a new moving picture house at Lodi, Cal., and are using a Powers 6A.

The Central theater has been opened at Forty-first and Telegraph avenue, Oakland, Cal. This is a new house.

The new Watsonville house of Turner & Dahnken will open on June 30th, with Billie Burke. After the opening it will be conducted as a moving picture house.

A theater building to cost about $35,000 will be erected at once at Vallejo, Cal., by Albert Bernheim.

H. E. Cornell, formerly traveling representative of the Pantages Circuit, has been appointed manager of the Pantages theater at Oakland, Cal.

The moving picture theater of Jesperson & Dippo, 2721 San Pablo avenue, Oakland, Cal., is to be remodeled and enlarged at a cost of approximately $5,000.

Win License Reduction

In Oakland, California, Exhibitors Secure Reduction in License Fees—Individuals Had Vainly Protested—Local No. 2 of State League Took Up Fight—Saves $5,000 a Year to Picture Men.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ONE of the most striking illustrations of the benefits that can be secured through organized effort is shown by the success that has been attained by the exhibitors of Alameda County through Alameda County Local No. 2 of the California State League in securing a reduction in the license fees charged moving picture houses. Individual exhibitors had protested many times to county officials in regard to the license, but these protests had been in vain, although it was shown that the fees were much higher than those prevailing in other sections of the country.

The local league then took hold of the proposition, secured the services of an attorney to draw up a new ordinance along their ideas of fairness, and attended meetings of the Oakland City Council in a body. They were given a hearing and secured every reduction asked for. Where formerly the license fees have amounted to $8,000 per annum in Alameda County, exhibitors will now have to pay but $3,000, a saving of $5,000 a year. The work that has been accomplished by this local stands out more preeminently in team work by exhibitors than almost any other local in the entire country, all of which goes to show what advantageous results can be accomplished through organization.

LIBRARIANS SEE PICTURES.

During the recent convention of the American Library Association at San Francisco, six hundred members of this organization were entertained one day at Simplex Theater No. 2 in the Palace of Education at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. As guests of the California Library Association, they were shown the activities of that branch in four excellent reels and were given practical demonstrations of the application of moving pictures to things educational. Following this entertainment many visited the model Simplex booth and the exhibit room upstairs. F. B. Cannock, secretary of the company and machine designer, is now here for a stay of a month or six weeks and is meeting exhibitors and others interested in moving pictures. One of his latest devices, a speed controller, has been installed on the machines in use at the Palace of Education.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES SHOWN IN MOVING PICTURES.

A new note in the school activities has been struck by George W. Frick, Superintendent of Schools in Alameda County, who has had moving pictures taken in eighteen schools to show the distinctive ideas in educational work that have been developed. These will be shown through the state, especially in the rural districts, and will be a feature of the exhibit at the Exposition during the convention of the National Educational Association in August. They depict the children in manual training, domestic science, athletics and recreation and are intended to do away with the usual type of school exhibit. The pictures were staged by Archie Rice, of Berkeley, and consists of four reels.

CAMERAGRAPHS TO BE FEATURE OF SPECIAL DAY.

The Liberal Arts Progress Club is making great preparation for Liberal Arts Day, June 29, at the Exposition, and Powers Cameragraphs will come in for much attention on this occasion. Space has been set aside in five sections for the showing of moving pictures and these machines will be used exclusively. Machines will also be exhibited on the three main aisles and an expert will be on hand at each one to demonstrate its working and young ladies will distribute literature. The main booth will be decorated especially for this occasion, which is to be widely advertised.

Mr. R. W. Horn, who has charge of the Power display, has been very busy of late keeping this in shape and is now wearing a smile of satisfaction, the International Jury having awarded the Nicholas Power Company the Grand Prix for its exhibit of motion picture projection equipment.

RUTH ROLAND TO FLY WITH ART SMITH.

Miss Ruth Roland, the screen favorite, who is now making a visit to the Exposition City, is to make a flight over the fair site shortly with Art Smith, the popular aviator, and expects to loop the loop with him. Later she is to relate her experiences in the air from the stage of the Hippodrome theater.

COMPANY INCORPORATES.

The Compania Cinematografica De Las American has been incorporated at San Francisco, Cal., by L. Ivey, S. J. Vogel and C. S. Swan, with a capital stock of $25,000. Mr. Ivey is the leading subscriber to the stock.

Henry W. Laugenour has leased the Aidome at Woodland, Cal., to J. T. Hayes, who has been conducting the Dreamland playhouse. The latter will be remodeled during the summer for a winter opening.

EXCHANGES WILL MOVE.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN the fall the two leading film exchanges of Boston will move to new quarters. New buildings are to be constructed for both the Universal and the General Film Companies.

The Universal Company has had plans prepared for a three-story fireproof structure to be erected at the corner of Pleasant and Piedmont streets. The executive offices will be located on the first floor, the poster department on the second floor and the 20 fireproof vaults for film storage on the third floor. An exhibition room with a seating capacity of 250 and a pitched floor will also be located on the first floor.

The General Film Company is building new quarters at the corner of Ferdinand and Isabella streets, Boston. This will be a two-story structure, with executive offices and a hippodrome on the first floor.

NEW THEATER CORPORATIONS.

Four new moving picture theater corporations were chartered during the past week. All companies will be subsidiaries of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., the $7,000,000 corporation which was recently chartered in Massachusetts.

The Gloucester Olympia Company was chartered for $5,000. The officers are: Hiram E. Miller, Lynn, president; Arthur E. Lord, Lynn, treasurer; Ernest H. Horstmann, Lynn, clerk, and Hiram E. Miller, Frank J. Howard and Nathan Gordon, directors.

The New Bedford Olympia Company was chartered for $5,000. The officers are: Frank J. Howard, Brookline, president; Arthur E. Lord, Lynn, treasurer; Ernest H. Horstmann, Lynn, clerk, and Frank J. Howard, Nathan H. Gordon and Ernest H. Horstmann, directors.

The Washington Street Olympia Company, Boston, was chartered for $5,000. The officers are: Ernest H. Horstmann, president and clerk; Arthur E. Lord, treasurer, and Arthur E. Lord, Max Shoolman and Ernest H. Horstmann, directors.

The New Haven Olympia Company was the fourth to receive a charter. The officers are: Max Shoolman, president; Arthur E. Lord, treasurer; Ernest H. Horstmann, clerk, and Hiram E. Miller, Max Shoolman and Frank J. Howard, directors.

FROHMANS TO AIM HIGH.

Gustave Frohman was a visitor to Boston during the past week. In an interview published in the Boston papers, he is reported as saying, "My brother Charles set a standard in the production of legitimate drama which has put the stage of to-day on its present high plane, and it is the intention of my brother Daniel and myself to do the same thing for the photoplay. Before we have finished, every suggestion of the unclean, every taint of smut, will be as alien to the moving picture house as it is to the church. I do not mean that that we are to have a lot of namby pamby pictures preaching in consequential sermons. I mean that we are going to tell clean, thrilling, uplifting, interesting and entertaining stories.

The well known punch will be as much a feature as ever, but immorality will be lacking. I am now producing plays to show in the schools and churches and I intend to create such a demand for them that the exhibitor of sensations, which degrade rather than entertain, will be forced to change his policy and exhibit the clean instead of the crude. Boston is the most particular and independent city on the face of the universe. It knows what it wants and must have it. There is already a movement on foot to clean out the film places of all that is not clean, and I am here to lend a hand. The moving picture has become an institution and is here to stay. Now that it is here, it is up to us to make it as fine and as artistic as possible. Patronage is flocking to the moving picture houses, and it is a crime to show the patrons anything that is lacking in the elements that uplift.

SAMUEL PINANSKI MARRIES.

Samuel Pinanski, manager of the Modern theater, Boston, was married during the past week to Miss Ann Green, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Green of Dorchester. The ceremony was conducted very quietly on account of the recent death of the groom's mother. The couple are enjoying a wedding trip at Atlantic City.

WALTER S. DAVIDSON PROMOTED.

Walter S. Davidson, former Maine representative for Pathe Exchange Incorporated has been placed in charge of the Pathe interests for New Hampshire and Vermont, and continued increased business for the Famous "Rooster" program in his present territory is most gratifying.

Walter wishes to extend his most hearty wishes to the various exhibitors throughout Maine for their continued prosperity, and to thank them for placing the Pathe program on such a grand record basis during his road connections in that state. He says he will always entertain among his most pleasant recollections the real hearty hand-shake ever in evidence among Maine exhibitors and friends. He hopes his successor will enjoy the same continuance of prosperity, and incidentally adds that the Pathe "Rooster" just can't help crowing "success," and he further says that the noted Pathe movies can be seen in most every theater in the states of New Hampshire and Vermont. Good stuff.

NOTES IN NEW ENGLAND.

Plans are being prepared for the enlargement of the Shawmut theater, Roxbury. The house now has a seating capacity of 1,600 and it is planned to double it, making it the largest photoplay theater in New England. The work on this project will be started in the near future. The house will undoubtedly be opened in the fall with big features and vaudeville.

Manager Fred B. Murphy of the United Film Service of New England spent last week in New York.

Winchester and Boston society folk will witness a novel open air moving picture show next Friday evening at "Aigremont," the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Oren C. Sanborn, under the management of Miss Mary Kellogg and Mrs. Sanborn for the Winchester Hospital. The performance is for the double purpose of charity and to show the Winchester town fathers and others the kind of "movies" that Miss Kellogg and Mrs. Sanborn proposed to inaugurate in Winchester, had no objections been made.

A moving picture machine has been installed in the Wollaston, Mass., Unitarian Church by the Rev. Carl G. Horst, the pastor. This machine will be used in connection with the work of the Young People's Religious Union and church entertainments.

J. Putnam, proprietor of the Opera House at Bennington, Vt., died during the past week. The house now becomes the property of a moving picture concern. During Mr. Putnam's life, he would never allow a reel of pictures to be shown in his playhouse, as he had always played to road attractions.

The Allen Film Exchange, of which A. S. Stein is manager, has moved into its new headquarters at No. 69 Carver street, Boston, having been forced out of their old location, which is to be razed for the erection of an up-to-date office building.

The Gay White Way, at York Beach, Me., one of the leading summer photoplay theaters of New England, has contracted with Manager Harry F. Campbell for the use of the Fox productions.

NEWS LETTER FROM MAINE.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

THE Graphic theater, Bangor, is scoring a great success with the service of the Phoenix Film Corporation. In one week they have used three big attractions, one of them a London Film release first run. The London films were formerly released on the Paramount program.

Charles M. Stern, manager of the Bangor branch of the Universal Film exchange, was in Farmington, Livermore Falls, Lewiston, and other cities in central Maine, on a business trip during the past week.

Mr. Frank A. Owen has sold his interest in Central Hall theater, Dover, to his partner Mr. W. P. Sherburne. Mr. Sherburne will continue the business as before using regular service from the Universal, and one feature weekly of the new Phoenix service of which E. B. Tinker of Ellsworth is local manager.

H. O. Hussey, proprietor of Emery Hall at Bucksport, will open a theater at Verona Park on July 1 for the summer residents of that resort.

Belfast has now three picture theaters. This is but a small town and competition is rather keen. The new Nickel uses Universal service, the Colonial uses General and the Opera House, the original picture house of the town, W. J. Clifford, manager, uses Mutual regular service and the features of the Phoenix Film Corporation.

Many summer resorts are now opening in the vicinity of Bar Harbor, and more picture theaters will be run on Mt. Desert Island than ever before.

A small moving picture house has opened at Freeport, representing the first competition experienced by the Mortimer Amusement Company, F. E. Mortimer proprietor, which runs the Photo Play Theater. Mr. Mortimer is reporting good results from Universal service.

Mr. J. A. Emery, manager of the Star theater at Bar Harbor, was a visitor in Bangor last week, coming up to look over the Phoenix service which has first run in Maine at the Graphic theater. He is to install this service in Bar Harbor soon.

Arthur A. Allen, manager of the Palace theater at Bangor, is using regular Universal service and also announces that he has booked "The Diamond from the Sky" and World's Film Features. Mr. Allen has discontinued amateur night performances for the summer although he found them very profitable.

Earle B. Tinker announces that his company has purchased a large number of the Charlie Chaplin comedies and that he is taking immediate bookings on same.

J. A. Eslow, general manager of the New England Universal Exchange of Boston, was a visitor to Bangor during the past week. While here he was the guest of Manager Charles M. Stern.

The Strand theater, Old Town, Me., had its formal and very successful opening on Saturday, June 19, with the first show at 2.15 p. m. and evening shows at 7 and 8.45. "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the World Film Co. five part production was the feature. Music was furnished by the Schubert trio, and a concert was given by St. Joseph's band at 6.30 o'clock. The Strand is to use Universal service and features of other companies.

Paul Demmons, proprietor of the moving picture house at East Machias, has started in two nights a week, Universal service.

The Acme Amusement Co., John Goodwin, proprietor, has opened a theater at Belgrade Lakes, a fashionable summer resort, and will run every night, using Universal service. The formal opening was on Monday, June 14.

Charles Eaton has just opened the Nickel theater at Belfast, on the main street, and using Universal service. It is the only five cent house in town, and shows five reels. The other houses show eight to ten reels and charge ten cents. Mr. Eaton was only granted his license after considerable opposition, but persisted until it was granted. The Nickel seats 350 people.

PICTURES AND SANE FOURTH.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

The Reconstructed Fourth Association has decided to offer free moving picture shows in this city as a substitute for the dangerous fireworks, in accordance with the aggressive campaign which they are directing in order to insure the celebration of the Fourth of July in a "safe and manner. Admitting that so far the moment for a "safe and sane" Fourth, while eminently successful in the suburban districts, has made but little progress in the congested sections of South Philadelphia, Kensington and other parts of the city, the committee is devoting particular attention to reaching the children of the thickly populated sections.

Last year several free moving picture shows were given and met with pronounced success. On account of the wonderful results obtained during the previous Fourth, the committee will this year go into the moving picture field on a much more extensive plan. Wherever it is possible, arrangements will be made for the exhibition of some interesting film that will keep the kiddies attracted and prevent them from toying with large cannon crackers and pistols which are absolute menaces to their lives.

BOY SCOUTS AT THE STANLEY.

The Boy Scouts who recently attended the Boy Scout day matinee at the Stanley theater were treated to a show that had anything they had ever seen before beaten all holler. Pictures of famous persons, such as Ty Cobb, Hans Wagner and President Wilson, were flashed on the screen and important affairs like the parade of the Knight Templars were also shown. And, best of all, Mayor Blankenburg and Mrs. Blankenburg were there, sitting in a box. In accordance with the importance of the affair, Mayor Blankenburg made a short speech which was most enthusiastically received by the Scouts in attendance. The climax of the afternoon was reached when the picture entitled "The Adventures of a Boy Scout" was thrown on the screen.

LUBINITES PLAY COMIC OPERA.

An appreciative audience that taxed the seating capacity of the Broad Street theater, recently saw and heard the stars of the Lubin Company in some real acting, when they presented George M. Cohan's musical comedy entitled, "Fifty Miles From Boston." Ethel Clayton, well known film favorite, interpreted the role of Carrie Flagg, one of the fair belles of Brookfield. In the cast were Mrs. Marie Sterling, Gilbert Ely, Mrs. Jessie Terry, Carson Davenport, Peter Lang, Clara Lambert, Mary Charleson and many others.

FIRE LAWS UPHELD.

Judge Audenried dismissed an injunction suit begun by Harry Berman and Charles Segal, proprietors of a moving picture theater at Fifth and South streets, on Thursday, June 17. The moving picture exhibitors sought to restrain the city from enforcing the rigid fire protection laws of 1899 and 1901. An act of 1913, which apparently exempted theaters such as theirs from compliance with the old laws was declared to be unconstitutional by Judge Audenried. This case is the last of a number of similar injunction suits to be decided. In every case the court upheld the city in its fight to reduce to a minimum the danger of fires.

PHILADELPHIA NOTES.

The management of the Proctor theater, Plainfield, N. J., recently created much comment by serving patrons of the theater with ice cream as they sat watching the pictures. This was a great surprise and has certainly been a booster for the interests of the proprietor.

The Metropolitan Opera House, Broad and Poplar streets, Philadelphia, has recently been leased by the Shuberts, of New York, for a term of years, and will be put into use as a first class moving picture theater.

Free Shows in St. Louis

Interesting Municipal Movement in Missouri to Provide Free Moving Picture Shows in City Parks—Exhibitors Welcome Them as Advertisements of Their Programs—Good Pictures Make New Patrons.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE City of St. Louis opened the free moving picture performances that will be given in the parks and playgrounds this summer on the night of June 15. The first performance was given at Columbus square, at Tenth and Carr streets. The contract to furnish the program was awarded to the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, of 25th and Montgomery streets, who have a portable projection booth and a screen that is fitted with an ingenious arrangement of gas-pipe frames that admits of its being erected at a moment's notice.

The free moving pictures which were tried last year in the parks and playgrounds were found to be such a success that it was decided to make them a permanent feature. There was a little opposition to the scheme at first, from exhibitors who had theaters in the immediate vicinity of the parks used, but it soon died away, and most of the protesting ones found that it really helped business, as many people got the picture habit from seeing the free pictures that otherwise might not have patronized their theaters at all.

Columbus square, where the initial performance was given, is in the heart of the foreign quarter, and the first performance was attended by 11,000 of these people, many of whom are too poor to spend even the small sum of five cents necessary to visit a regular theater. The screen was placed at a distance of 54 feet from the first line of seats and this space was filled by several hundred children, who sat on the bareground and watched the pictures.

The city authorities furnish a detail of park officers, who go along with the performance to look after the details of the entertainment and handle the crowd.

Special Park Officer Geo. Upton, in command of the squad, says that the people love the pictures, and that they are a godsend, as they take many people out in the fresh air that otherwise would be huddled up in miserable tenements, and many young men that would otherwise be loafing around saloons are in the park.

The first program furnished by the city consisted of Joan of Arc, two reels, a current events film, a comedy reel, an animal film showing the life of non-poisonous snakes, and a travel reel. The performance started at 7.45 and lasted two hours.

NEW ST. LOUIS THEATER.

The well known amusement firm of Meyer Brothers & Pracht, who own and operate the Knickerbocker theater and airdome at 3145 Park avenue, are building a moving picture theiter at the corner of 39th street and Shaw avenue, South St. Louis, that will cost $35,000. The new house will be modern throughout, with retiring rooms for both sexes, drinking fountains and all the innumerable details demanded by modern theatrical concerns. The seating space will be all on one floor, which is in keeping with the style of most of the big houses that have been built in St. Louis in the last year.

So strong is the owners' faith in moving pictures as the future entertainment of the people that vaudeville will not be considered as even a remote possibility at the new house, since no stage of any kind is being built. The neighborhood of the new house is the new district west of Grand, and south of Lafayette avenues, that is building up very fast, and there is not a better or more promising location in the city. The only other theater at all near is a small airdome that runs only in the hot months.

MANAGER WOLF ON THE SHORT REEL PROGRAM.

Manager Wolf, of the Iola theater and airdome, at 2726 Lafayette avenue, is a great exponent of a short reel program. "I do not believe the people, as a rule, like the big five and six-reel features as well as they do a well-balanced program of four or five single reels," he says. "I have never used anything longer than a three-reel feature, and I do not take a three when I can get a two-reeler. Just now the picture theaters seem big feature mad, but I have stuck to my short reel program, and since I do not see any falling off in my patronage I am going to keep it up."

THOUGHTFUL ARRANGEMENTS AT WARNER'S NORTH GRAND.

Warner Brothers, who manage the North Grand Avenue theater and airdome, also operate the Queen airdome, at 4700 Maffit avenue, which is under the supervision of Mrs. Charles Warner. The Warners, who are veteran exhibitors, have some very good ideas in the management of theaters, that are worth passing on. For instance, in the North Grand airdome, which is a large place, the music, a piano and violin, is placed at the back of the garden near the projection booth, and another piano is down near the screen. This arrangement serves a double purpose, it makes the music audible all over the place and drowns the noise and whirr of the projecting machines, and the music can be heard outside on the sidewalk and serves to draw people into the place. Another good plan is the rule of no overhead wires of any kind. All the illumination is arranged on posts, and in the event of a heavy storm there is no danger of the panic that any sort of a falling wire is liable to create.

NEWSY NOTES IN ST. LOUIS.

The Parkview is a handsome new outdoor theater that has opened up just opposite Lafayette Park, on Mississippi avenue.

Christ Zotos, who has managed the Family theater at the corner of Broadway and Miller street, and has entertained his audiences in the theater summer as well as winter for the past six years, caught the airdome fever this season and is now showing in a fine new open air place that will seat 2,400. The new airdome is at Broadway and Barry street, a short block from the Family.

The Eagle theater, 1717 South Broadway, under the management of Frank Root, closed June 20 for the hot weather months with the exception of Sundays, when a matinee will be given.

With him he takes Marguerite Courtot, Nellie Lindroth and Henry Hallam. In speaking of his plans for the fall, Mr. Vignola said his only wish was "that he would be returned here, as Jacksonville was the only place in the U. S. A. that seemed like home to him." The many friends of "Bob" wish him a speedy return to Jax, and as a token of their friendship gave him a farewell banquet on Monday night at the studio.

EDISON.

IT MAY BE YOU (July 10).—Jack Kenwood, editor of the Clarion, has business perspicacity and has paper hanging on to life by a few thin threads, recovered fully. The advertisements in the Clarion have become fewer and fewer. The advertising manager is discouraged. Into the editor he goes, and the latter immediately has a plan to replenish the Clarion exchequer and rout all worry. Taking his paper, he makes the rounds of the offices in the town. As he enters the office of Jinks & Company, the senior member of the firm happens to be in a compromising position with his stenographer. Not taking any notice of this, he approaches Jinks, and solicits an advertisement. Jinks believes his goods are the best advertisement and refuses to buy even a half inch in the Clarion. Into the office of Mr. Hall goes Kenwood and a similar situation meets his gaze. Hall also decries newspaper advertising.

Various offices are visited with practically the same result. Back to the office goes Kenwood, admitting to himself that Lillian, his sweetheart, was right when she advised him to quit a losing game. He decides to go and see her and ascertain whether she has a suggestion to make as to his future. Arriving at the office where she is employed, he catches Lillian in a position which, to him, is indicative of undue familiarity with her employer. He excuses himself, leaving the office chagrined and resentful. Based on his observations in Lillian's office, he writes a squib to the effect that the Clarion regards lovemaking between employers and stenographers morally degrading, and that an instance of this condition of affairs has come to the personal attention of the editor of the Clarion. He threatens to expose the guilty employer. The article appears in the issue of the following morning, and the various men who had been paying more attention to their stenographers than to their work cannot get to the Clarion office soon enough. Each wants his advertisement run for a solid year and contracts are promptly signed. Bankers, merchants and professional men flock to the office, each thinking the article was directed at him. Result—new lease of life for the Clarion. Lillian explains to Kenwood's satisfaction that she had dropped her pencil, and her employer was in the act of picking it up for her when Jack entered the office. As they are embracing, one of the guilty employers enters, but exits quickly, leaving Kenwood in a quandary as to why the former looked so surprised.

EUGENE ARAM (An Adaptation of the Novel by Edward Bulwer Lytton—Special Four Parts—July 9).—Eugene Aram, devoid of opportunity as far as scholasticism is concerned, is ambitious to learn, and his labored course of study is a source of merriment to Housman, a degenerated distant relation. Housman chances to read a letter written by a man known as Clark to his son, Walter, at Grassdale, England, to the effect that he is about to return to him with a quantity of jewels and sundry valuables, given him as a reward for saving a person's life in India. Housman sees many of the jewels and rarities and determines to rob Clark. He persuades Eugene to go in on the job with him. Clark is attacked by Housman and felled by a blow, as Eugene comes up. Clark seizes the latter's hand as Eugene prevents another blow from being struck. Clark is killed, however, and Eugene, refusing to accept any of the money, dismisses Housman after the body has been covered up with leaves.

At Grassdale, Walter is in love with Madeline, who treats him with pronounced apathy in consideration of her sister, Eleanor, who loves Walter extremely. Five years pass and Eugene is a schoolmaster in Grassdale. His mind is tortured by the vision of Clark which he continues to have. Even his pupils, with the aid of significant poems and verses, seem to be conspiring to add to his discomfort. Eugene has met Madeline and they are enamored of each other, their association firing the jealousy of Walter, who warns Madeline against Eugene. Housman and his associates force entrance into the Lester home and Eugene, who happens to be there at the time, shoots Housman, but not fatally. They recognize each other, and Eugene promises to meet Housman at the glen the next day. At the meeting Housman demands a large sum to keep from Eugene's friends the particulars of Clark's death. Subsequently Eugene goes to Housman's hovel in London and gives him the money and receives the assurance that Housman will leave the country. Walter continues to disparage Eugene in Madeline's eyes.

Housman receives word that his child, Ann, is dying and holds up Walter, who is on a trip to London, and relieves him of his fleet horse. Housman arrives to find his beloved daughter dead. He enters an inn and soon is intoxicated. Some strangers are discussing the unearthing of a skeleton, supposed to be that of Clark, who disappeared five years before. Walter enters the inn and listens. Housman interrupts by stating that they are wrong, as he can show them Clark's skeleton. He goes to St. Robert's cave and shows him Clark's bones. He then tells Walter that Eugene Aram committed the murder. Eugene is arrested, tried and adjudged guilty on the strength of Housman's testimony. Walter implores Eugene to confess, promising him forgiveness, and Eugene gives the exact account of the robbery and murder. Walter believes and shows great gratitude and friendship. Madeline is approached by the now repentent Walter and is told the verdict. She crushes to her bosom the rose given her by Eugene and dies, the shock killing her. The closing scene shows Eugene on the gallows, expiating a crime that he did not commit.

THE BRAND OF CAIN (July 10).—Neil Carter is leaving on a hunting trip to South Africa, much to the discomfort of Agatha, his fiancee, who is, perforce, very apprehensive as to his safety in the dark interior. In Africa, Neil's negro guide is bitten by a snake and soon after being removed to a hut occupied by John Winter, dies, revealing, however, the hiding place of a diamond. Neil and Winter start out to find the precious stone and their efforts are crowned with success. Each desirous of retaining possession of the stone, an argument results, and Winter is hurled over a cliff to his death. The diamond rolls over with him in the scuffle. Neil descends the cliff to find the stone, but seeing the dead body of Winter, dares not pick up the stone. A deep gash has been made in Neil's face by Winter in the death struggle. Returning to America, Neil is cordially greeted by Agatha, who questions him about the scar. The vision of Winter falling off the cliff haunts Neil and he refuses to talk about the scar. Others question him until he is almost driven insane by the nervous strain.

His indifference toward Agatha, due to mental derangement as a result of his own silence, prompts her to disdain him and break their engagement. Realizing that peace will not be his so long as he remains in company and refrains from easing his mind by telling of the tragedy, Neil goes to the mountains, and, purchasing a hut, prepares to settle down as a hermit. More than thirty years have passed and Neil's hair is silvery. A party of hunters stop at his hut and ask to rest a while. They start to tell stories and one, an engineer, relates how, while travelling in South Africa, he come upon the skeleton of a man. A short distance above the fossil remains was a brilliant gem, which had every appearance of a diamond. Upon examination, it was found to be only quartz. With a stifled cry, Neil attempts to explain, but the shock is too great and he falls over dead.

THE REVOLT OF MR. WIGGS (July 5).—His wife, a militant suffragette, and he, the miserable sufferer, Wiggs, left at home to mind five children, feels married life is pretty closley approaching Sherman's ideas of war. This state of affairs grows worse, until one day, while his wife is leading the Suffragette parade on horse back, a pretty fortune-teller forecasts his future, adding that he is a direct descendant of gladiators and fighters. This fills him with pride, but when he glances towards his strong-armed wife, slumps back again into submissiveness. The girl insists he could conquer her if he tried, and finally Wiggs exclaims, "I'm going to break up that parade if it's the last thing I do!" Seeing a farmer about to drown a cage full of rats, he bargains for them and carries them off in a bag. Arrived at the grandstand where his wife is holding forth to the assembled crowd, he stalks up and brazenly defies her, then liberates the rodents amongst the women on the platform. A wild scramble follows, and the meeting breaks up in a riot. Wiggs grins over the fact that just before that Mrs. Wiggs had voiced the sentiment that women should vote because they are afraid of nothing! The Suffragettes never stop running until they reach a ladder leaning against a house. They scramble up frantically, clear to the roof, and when the painter, who has been using the ladder, nonchalantly takes it away with him, they can't get down. Wiggs sees their predicament, and after much parleying, he gets another ladder and helps the still trembling women down. His wife is all in, but when they get home, Wiggs grimly hands her the broom and tells her to get to work. He bosses her around and with a grin of satisfaction, smokes his pipe in peace.

THE MAN FROM THE DESERT (Broadway Star Feature Three Parts July 6.)—After three years prospecting in the desert, John Warrington and Richord Spencer, partners, decide to call it quits. They have accumulated $40,000 in gold dust. After dividing up, Spencer prepares to start East. Greed takes possession of Spencer. During the night, he robs Warrington, taking with him, both packmules, and all the water, leaving John with but a single shell in his revolver, and a note saying that when he goes mad from thirst, the quickest way is—the gun. But John Warrington does not die. He is picked up by Bill, a wandering prospector, and later, the two open up a rich lode on gold. They "go gahoots," and years later, John, still harboring thoughts of vengeance upon Spencer, tells the old miner he is going East after his man. They sell the mine now a large producer—and, leaving Old Bill to watch the claim, John goes to Chicago. There he meets Spencer's daughter, falls deeply in love and locates Spencer himself. For some time John does not know that Spencer is the girl's father. He sends word for Old Bill to mail a piece of the note to Spencer's address. Spencer, living in luxury, on his ill-gotten wealth, is struck dumb at sight of the little scrap of paper. He receives these at intervals until he is reduced to a nervous wreck. Learning Spencer is plunging wheat stocks, Warrington kills the man, financially. Then he finds Spencer is the father of the girl he loves, and the hollowness of revenge is brought home to him in bitterness. Spencer, as a last resort, appeals in person to John (who is operating under an assumed name) for a time extension. Then Warrington reveals his real identity, and with bitter irony, points to the big revolver and the one bullet, telling Spencer, "That's the easiest war!" Fortunately, at this juncture, the girl's appearance softens Warrington's heart, and he forgives his enemy.

THE WHITE AND BLACK SNOWBALL (July 7).—While trying out a now sled, Sonny Jim decides the easiest and speediest method is to hitch behind some team. So when Herman, the grocer, comes by, he asks him if he can do so. Receiving a satisfactory reply, he is soon speeding over the snow behind the team. Sonny sees his little colored friend, Lily, in trouble. She has found a pair of mittens, and a couple of small boys are trying to take them away from her. After rescuing the mittens for Lily and putting the would-be robbers to flight, Sonny and Lily pile on his sled and coast downhill. All goes well until they hit a pedestrian, knocking him off his feet and sending his high hat flying. Then they have to flee for their lives, but the grocer saves them and, with Lily on his sled, Sonny trudges back towards home. They have another exciting experience with a couple of boys who snowball them, but Lily and Sonny soon make them say, "Uncle." Sonny hitches his dog, "Toto," to the sled, and they have a fine ride, until "Toto" sees a kitty, then he "throws in the clutch" and is off at top speed. Sonny and Lily are thrown out, but "Toto" trees the cat. On reaching the house, Sonny washes his little colored friend's face with snow, telling her she could never go in with a dirty face like that! Then they enter, and find mother dear making cream tarts. After helping the children off with their things, mother tells them to help themselves, and they certainly do!

BERTIE'S STRATAGEM (July 8).—Just out of college, in love with Letty Grey, whose father is quick-tempered and opposed to him, also possessing a wealthy rival, Bertie feels he doesn't stand much show until he tells his troubles to Belle Chester, his cousin. Her sympathy and encouragement brace him up wonderfully. Meanwhile, Letty's father has bullied her into submitting to an engagement with the rival, Clarence Merkle, who is a susceptible gentleman of some 40 summers. Bertie learns of this, and in despair, again consults Belle. She tells him she will reconnoitre the enemy. She visits Letty, is introduced to Merkle, and learns he simply cannot resist a woman's wiles. She then secures a classy walking rig, tells Bertie to put it on, assists him to fix up as a fair young damsel, and gets him introduced at Grey's house as her friend from the West. Bertie meets Merkle and starts a most outrageous flirtation with him. They decide to elope, and at Bertie's instigation, Merkle writes a note to Mr. Grey informing him the engagement with his daughter is all off. Grey is furious and breaks all speed records trying to overtake the fleeing couple. At a country roadhouse Merkle has to dive through a window to avoid capture, and in following him, Grey is nearly run over by an auto. Bertie comes up in the neck of time to drag him out of danger, and in doing so, loses his wig. Grey then learns of the deception, and is raging, but cannot forget that he really owes his life to Bertie. Being also thoroughly disgusted with Merkle's actions, he finally decides that the young man might make a suitable son-in-law after all.

LOVE'S WAY (July 9).—The son of a prosperous and hard-working business man, Rand Cornwell, does nothing but spend money and waste his time. His father disgustedly announces he will pay no more debts incurred by his son. Rand sees Edith Havens on the street and, without waiting for the formality of an introduction, steps right up and speaks to her. After an exceedingly unpleasant five minutes, she has him arrested for a masher. The police lieutenant consents to call up his father, but Pa Cornwall angrily announces he will not give bail, adding that a night in a cell might do the boy good. Young Rand sleeps little that night and next morning is sentenced to thirty days. Edith is in court and begins to regret she had the young man arrested, but it is too late, and his self-assurance completely gone, Rand is sent to a cell. After the first bitterness, Rand realizes he got what he deserved, so he writes a very humble note to the girl, begging her forgiveness. She answers it in person, and, after expressing regret over the incident, the two part friends. On his release, Rand, resolved to make a man of himself, goes to her home and proposes —but she tells him that if—at the end of the year he can, by his own efforts, make a home for a wife—he may get a wife for the home. In another town he makes rapid progress and is promoted to foreman in one of the big cotton mills. When the year is up, he sends for his father to attend his wedding. Father threatens disinheritance if Rand marries, but he replies to the effect that "He should worry!" Hugely pleased at the evidence of "backbone" in his son, Pa Cornwall attends the wedding all right, and "comes across" like a good sport.

INSURING CUTEY (Special—Two Parts—July 10).—Fearing that his greatest box office magnet, Cutey, the matinee idol, is about to get married—thereby, depreciating his value—McCauley, the manager, arranges with Martin Zevine and Kitty Keene, confidential insurance agents, to watch Cutey closely. If possible, they are to prevent his marrying, and McCauley takes out a policy against the contingency of the star's marriage. Cutey finds out all about it, and plans to lead the agents a merry chase. He commences by devoting himself to each woman in the company, from the star down, in turn. Kitty—according to plan—tries to win Cutey's affection, and after following him about matters get more and more complicated, until the two agents are all at sea. Cutey then makes a date to meet six different girls at the same time and place. There is much subdued excitement as each girl thinks he is going to propose. At the appointed hour Cutey calmly counts the girls to see if they are all there, then announces he is going to take all for a ride. He points to where a large sight-seeing bus is drawn up at the curb. The truth dawns upon the girls that Cutey has been "kidding" them, and some burst into tears. At this moment, Zevine and Kitty come up and Cutey then delivers a final crushing blow to all present by bringing forward one of the girls and introducing her as his bride. But the manager says to himself: "I should worry. I'm insured."

ROAD O' STRIFE SERIES NO. 14, A STORY OF THE PAST (July 5).—To Madison and Alene, Professor Gershom tells the story of Alene. "The King of Urania honored me with his friendship, and I was not unknown as a scientist, eighteen years ago." He tells them of the splendor of the court of the Balkan kingdom, of the high pride and noble courage of the king, and of his great love for the baby princess, Alene, his only child; of how, realizing that the throne would soon fall, and wishing to save his child from the fate that he, the king, could not, in pride, evade, the monarch had secretly transferred to America his private fortune, to be held in trust until claimed by Alene on the day she became of age. How, soon after, came the terror of the revolution, when the king, sword in hand, died at the foot of his throne, and Gershom, in fulfillment of his trust, and despite a terrible blow upon the head from the weapon of a revolutionist, escaped with the baby princess, and eventually reached America, demented, but with one idea persisting and controlling his life—to protect the child. Gershom at once discovered that the secret trustee, Caleb Jerome, planned to steal the fortune, and, if necessary, murder the child, and fled in a panic of fear, hiding in the village of Elmhurst, where he bought a lonely house and reared the child, the secret of her existence being unguessed by the villagers.

The documents proving her identity he placed in the double bottom of a cup he made from a silver alloy into which he introduced a deadly poison only neutralized by the mineral water of a local spring, beside which he placed the cup. At last Caleb Jerome found Gershom's hiding place, and in an effort to discover and destroy the documents, resorted to an attempt at murder. His blow, however, eventually restored to Gershom the sanity wrecked by the revolutionist's club, and, in time, Gershom saw all things clearly, so that now he places the matter in the hands of the lawyer. Madison assures Gershom and Alene that, with the documents the recovery of the fortune is a simple matter, and takes Alene to his home, where she is kindly received by the lawyer's wife. Gershom, once more a shrewd and ambitious man, familiar with the political intrigues of Europe, hurries away on business, the nature of which he does not disclose. He has conceived a bold idea, suggested by the news of the day that the Republic of Urania has declared it will remain neutral in the great war, rejecting the overtures of the Hervo-Alesian Empire to become an ally, and that the old Royalist party is reviving and urging that Urania form an alliance with the Empire and enter the war.

THE CANNIBAL KING (July 6).—Willie is in a penniless condition when he finds that Grace Martin, his sweetheart, is to celebrate her birthday tomorrow. He sees an advertisement asking for extra people in a motion picture production entitled "The Cannibal's Bride." He goes and secures a job; they fix him up scandalous—bare arms and legs of ebony black, a short skirt, rings in his ears and nose. His hated rival, Fred, secures permission to visit the motion picture studio and takes Grace for an outing Willie, goring the life out of a fellow-cannibal, hears familiar voices, rises to his feet and is face to face with hated rival and his adored one. All thoughts of moving picture business desert him. All he wants is to get away as soon as he can; he upsets the cameraman and vaults the fence. Many and awesome are his adventures. He awakens a dozing cop, who gives chase. Willie runs into a saloon—a riot is the result, and the inmates sign the pledge. But the cops are hot on his trail and Willie can't stop. He sees the familiar home of his sweetheart and hot-foots to it for refuge.

Meanwhile, Grace has been all upset by the experience in the studio, of course not dreaming that the savage is Willie. She and Fred have returned home and are enjoying a tete-a-tete in the library, while Grace's pa has been endeavoring to rid himself of two suffragettes. Willie dashes onto the porch—the militants exit and pa sits dazed, rubbing his eyes and wondering. Willie bolts into the library, interrupts the love scene and falls on his knees, imploring Grace to find a hiding place for him. Fred vanishes, leaving Grace to her fate. Willie makes himself known to Grace, who has a sense of humor, places him on the davenport and throws all the available rugs over him. The cops have arrived and Pa Martin leads them within. They question Grace, who indicates a broken window (for which she is responsible) and tells them their quarry has flown. The cops pause to rest, and sit on Willie's prostrate form. After they have gone, Grace releases him and is so sympathetic that he proposes on the spot. He is accepted just as the cowardly Fred slinks back into the room. Grace orders him from her sight, with the information that she is to wed the cannibal king. Pa Martin, who also has a sense of humor, pronounces his benediction.

PING PONG WOO (July 6).—A cartoon comedy of a different sort, introducing a droll addition to the pen-and-ink creations of the screen. Ping is a Chinese urchin. He has an amusing adventure with a rat, and later, upon discovering that the luscious chop suey is made only at the cost of many, many rats, he determines to stop the traffic in rat souls. With the aid of a trusty bomb the suey house is blown to smithereens, and no end of rats are saved from the mincing machine.

THE BEAST (Special—Two Parts—July 7).—Will, from the city, is testing ore on Silver Ridge, happy in his work and his engagement to May, back in town. Will meets Tremway, a river fisherman, a big brute of a fellow, who is just the opposite of his pretty, fragile wife. Tremway scoffs at Laura's pets and her flowers. Tremway asks Bill to sup with his wife and himself and orders Laura to kill her pet chicken for the meal. Will refuses to partake of the fowl and wins Laura's timid respect. Tremway, however, sulks and conceives a bitter hatred for the young fellow. He attempts to make away with Will while the latter descends the side of a cliff by a rope ladder, but Laura, seeing her husband's knife about to sever the rope, snatches a rifle and fires at Tremway. He is wounded, but not before cutting the rope. Will saves himself by clutching shrubbery on the side of the cliff. He even ascends and ministers to Tremway just as Laura hurries up to say that it was she who shot her husband. Will helps Tremway home and orders him to remain quiet until the wound heals. It is known to Will and everyone else that Tremway will wreak a terrible revenge. Will prepares himself for the battle which must take place by working in the ore fields, hardening his muscles and training. Finally they meet on the cliff and the villagers gather to watch the outcome. May, Will's fiancee, on her way to pay him a surprise visit, arrives in a motor boat. Meanwhile, Laura hurries to the scene and sees from afar. She does not know that she is crossing the ground soon to be rent by dynamite. Will sees her and, with a final mighty effort, knocks Tremway senseless and dashes to Laura's rescue. He staggers with her to shelter as the blast explodes. As he lies panting beside the unconscious girl, Tremway creeps upon them and his attempt to brain Will is barely frustrated. Tremway, desperately wounded, is bereft of his great strength. With physical ruin comes a realiza-

WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY (Special—Three Parts—July 8).—James Rice and John Strong are partners in the firm of Rice & Strong, mining engineers. Rice is gentle and generous except in business where he never allows sentiment to become a part of it. He is a widower with an only son whom he maintains in a sumptuous home so that he may be well provided for when Nell Strong shall have become his wife. Plans, however, become disarranged by the winning of Rice's heart by Laska Ayon, a wealthy Brazilian visiting the United States with her father. She eventually becomes engaged to Rice. Strong is the direct antithesis of Rice, both in morals and business, and has often been unscrupulous and cunning enough to conceal his shortcomings from Rice. Although a married man, he maintains an Oriental studio which it pleases him to call Bohemia. Excesses and bad speculation place him on the verge of bankruptcy. He requests a large loan from his partner, but Rice tells him he must secure the money elsewhere. The partnership agreement specifies that when one of them dies, the surviving partner shall be repaid from the estate of the deceased the amount of capital invested by him in the firm. His many failures to secure the loan of $500,000 induce the thought of doing away with his more business-like partner and so secure the money he so sorely needs. Strong appeals to the wealthy Laska and her father, and they express willingness to loan the money if Rice will endorse. Rice, however, refuses to guarantee payment, and Strong becomes more bitter than ever.

There is only one way left, which is the death of his partner, and he carefully studies out a way that will defy detection. A letter which Rice has written to Strong furnishes the cue, which reads: "My dear John: Things cannot go on as they are. I cannot stand it any longer and mean to put an end to it for all time. You must straighten up and attend to our business or I will sue for a dissolution of partnership. Jim." The part of the letter which speaks of putting an end of it for all time will furnish grounds for the belief that he has done away with himself. Rice has an inordinate liking for sweets and has a box of candy on his desk at all times. On the evening when there is to be a double wedding between Rice and Laska and Tom and Nell Strong, the plot is carried into fatal effect. Strong purchases a box of bon bons. This he takes to a druggist, who is known to sell drugs to unfortunates, and who for a tempting bribe poisons the candy. This is sent to Rice's address and before the wedding ceremony can be concluded, Rice falls to the floor dead.

In the meantime Strong has prepared his proof of suicide by cutting away the top and bottom of the letter leaving the words, "Things cannot go on as they are. I cannot stand it any longer and therefore mean to put an end to it for all time." The verdict of suicide was duly accepted by everybody except Laska, and Strong's attempt to borrow money aroused her suspicions. She visits the detective department and offers a reward of $100,000 for the arrest of the murderer, but could interest only one man named Whitaker, who does not agree with the suicide theory, and they join forces. The druggist reading the report, visits Strong and attempts to extort money. Whitaker on the watch follows him and discovers the long suspected dope store. Strong, feeling himself unsafe, visits the drug store and shoots the druggist. He, however, does not die immediately and with a piece of charcoal writes upon the wall the words, "John Strong murdered Rice and me." Shortly after Whitaker enters the drug store and, finding the man dead, reads the lines on the wall. He then persuades Laska to make friends with Strong, which she does, and one night at one of his orgies he proposes to make her his favorite, to which she replies, "Are you quite sure that you will not send me poisoned candy whenever you grow jealous?" Strong demands why she makes the remark, and Laska replies, "Because I believe you murdered James Rice." Strong becomes paralyzed with fear, and Laska calls upon Whitaker to arrest him. He escapes in an automobile, Whitaker close behind. In the chase Strong attempts to cross a railroad track, an express train hurls the machine up in the air, and retributive justice comes to the murderer through the hand of fate.

MONEY! MONEY! MONEY! (July 9).—Roy a bank clerk, and his pretty wife, May, live happily in their suburban home until Tom, an old friend, returns from a long period of travel. Then Tom becomes the unwitting cause of trouble. He is a bachelor and wealthy. He has known the young couple since they were kids and takes an old friend's privilege of giving them presents and entertaining them in many ways. Tom and May become great chums, and Roy gradually becomes meanly suspicious. He unjustly assumes that Tom is winning his wife's heart with money. Roy broods over this. It is the custom of the neighborhood grocer to entrust every morning to Roy the earnings of the day before, for which Roy gives him a receipt, and on his arrival in town deposits in his bank the money to the credit of the grocer. But one night, as Roy makes his way home, expecting to find some new evidence of Tom's regard for May, he is accosted by the grocer, who hands him a large sum of money. During the day the store has been sold, and will Tom keep the money over night and deposit it next day as usual?

Roy accepts the money and a sudden daring thought assails him. Why not fake a robbery and lavish the money on May, since it is by money that she can be held? Late that night Roy breaks into his own home and is surprised to hear May and Tom talking in the drawing-room. Since she is suposed to be at her mother's, his suspicions are fanned into flame. Roy leaves the money and goes to listen. But a thief who saw the grocer hand the money to Roy, and who, peering through the window, has seen Roy secrete it in the sideboard drawer, steals the money and makes away. Roy discovers the theft and his cry of amazement brings Tom and May in. Roy declares that he has been robbed and confesses the role he meant to play, furiously denouncing May and Tom for causing him to resort to such desperate measures. Tom and May succeed in quieting him and convince him that it is to her husband alone that May's love is given. Roy sees the truth and Tom hurries off to the station to report the loss. There he finds the money and a policeman in charge of the thief.

THE NEW VALET (July 10).—Mr. Grouch, an invalid, is advised by his physician to seek recreation at the seashore. Being a bachelor, he advertises for a young man to act as traveling companion and valet. It is answered by a person named "Bill," who is engaged. Everything goes well until their arrival at the shore. Bill is unable to manage the luggage, and in his endeavors to carry it all he spills it. That afternoon, Mr. Grouch, desiring a little air, engages a rolling-chair and has Bill take him for a ride along the boardwalk. Bill espies a gay widow, and unconsciously lets the chair go to the bottom of the walk with a crash. He is severely reprimanded by Mr. Grouch for his carelessness. After the chair is righted they wend their way along the boardwalk, much to the amusement of the pedestrians.

After strolling about the boardwalk, they stop for a rest. But their rest is short lived, as the gay widow akain appears and starts to flirt with Bill. Bill is soon in deep conversation with her. Bill's admiration soon turns cold when he sees a young girl sitting above them making eyes at him. Bill leaves in a very rude manner and is soon talking to the young girl. But this does not last long, as her sweetheart makes his appearance, which causes Bill to beat a hasty retreat back to Mr. Grouch's side, who tells Bill that he desires something to drink. Bill is not long in getting it, and after pouring Mr. Grouch a drink, Bill accidentally squirts seltzer over the side of the boardwalk, much to the discomfort of the couple sitting below. The young man, seeking revenge, climbs up and drags Billie down by the leg. Bill treats the young man rudely, which causes him to go in search of a policeman, and Bill "beats it." In the meantime, Mr. Grouch has got on friendly terms with the widow, and they are seen by Bill strolling along the beach. Bill approaches Mr. Grouch but is received in a manner which causes him to bump into several more of his late acquaintances, who proceed to beat him up. Left to himself, Bill finally falls to the sand too exhausted to move.

She concludes that "education" has many meanings and is too expensive for the sons of simple farmer folks.

BIOGRAPH.

THE SUMMONING SHOT (July 5).—Carson and Deal, prospectors, make a strike. The old man shows his young partner a picture and, remarking: "My daughter—I promised to send for her as soon as I struck it," he writes the glorious news to the girl. Benson, a half-witted prospector, tries to jump the claim, but is warned off by Deal. He spies on Carson and learns where the gold dust is hidden. In a lonely spot he holds up the man and hurls him down a cliff. Carson is found by a rancher, who summons Deal. The old man is borne to the cabin. Benson, having found on Carson's body a note from his daughter, goes to the station, meets the girl, and tells her that her father has been killed by his partner. He works on her feelings until she takes his pistol and goes alone to the cabin. "When you hear a shot, you will know I have avenged my father," she says. At the cabin she learns the true state of affairs, fires a shot, and decoys Benson into her father's room, where he is captured.

THE SMUGGLER'S WARD (Special—Two Parts—July 6).—On the night when the smugglers land one of the biggest cargoes, a ship is wrecked off-shore. The single survivor is a little girl, whom the chieftain rescues and adopts. Years later, the waif, now a woman of great beauty, is persecuted with unwelcome attentions by one Cutler, a member of the band. Jack Hardy, a secret service agent, and his sister, Alice, visit their aunt, Mrs. Morton, who resides near the crags in which the smugglers have their lair. Alice visits the beach to try out a new camera, and, seeing Cutler and Rita, the waif, in a charming pose, takes a snapshot of them without being detected. Later the same afternoon she sees the smugglers landing a cargo, and sends her chauffeur to summon her brother and his aids. The secret service men raid the smugglers' cave and capture the leaders. Rita, who has been forced to take part in the smuggling, is borne away by two members of the band and left by the roadside in an exhausted condition. Here she is discovered by Mrs. Morton's maid and taken to the house, where she is revived. In time, Mrs. Morton becomes greatly attached to the waif and adopts her. Cutler turns state's evidence. Released from custody after the others are sentenced to prison, he discovers Rita and trails her to the Morton home, where he forces an entrance and demands money from the girl. The free members of the band have heard of Cutler's treachery and keep watch on him. Mrs. Morton's health is bad, and Cutler's entrance into the house aggravates a seizure which culminates in her death. After the funeral Jack and Alice take Rita to live with them. Cutler discovers the girl's whereabouts and plans to blackmail her. The smugglers are released from prison and join the others in the hunt for Cutler. Jack has fallen in love with Rita and is engaged to marry her. Alice, learning of their love for each other, remembers the snapshot she took, which indicates that Jack is not Rita's first love, but she does not tell what she knows until Cutler, having forced an entrance into the house, denounces Rita as his faithless sweetheart. Then Alice produces the photograph which seems to confirm the charge. The smugglers rush in and, learning of the charge, declare it is false. Then they execute summary vengeance upon the traitor, who is captured after having bolted from the house in a vain effort to escape.

THE CLAIM OF HONOR (July 8).—The prince regent of a foreign principality entertains an American girl, and is displeased by the attentions which the young Count Armand pays the fair visitor. In his cups, he offers a toast: "To the American lady's lips, which I——" He goes no farther, for Armand dashes a glass of wine in his face. The insult is one which, according to tradition, calls for atonement by suicide. Armand is saved from shooting himself by an American tourist, who urges him to leave the country. In the United States, a year later, he meets the girl and is about to elope with her when his father sends him word that he has been pardoned. At the club he runs across his tourist friend and accompanies him home, where he sees a portrait of the girl. "That is my wife," his host says proudly. On the table lies her note of farewell to her husband. Armand contrives to abstract it, and, going to the rendezvous, tells the girl that he knows all. His honor is at stake, and she must go back to her husband.

A TIMELY INTERCEPTION (July 9—Biograph Re-issue No. 5).—After a hard struggle the old man has just saved enough money to justify the marriage of his daughter and adopted son, when word comes from the oil fields near by that his brother has lost his job, the little girl is very ill, and there is no money in the house. The sacrifice is a big one, but it has to be made. The wedding is postponed. One day his brother rides over on a bicycle to pay a visit to his benefactors, but does not bring the money. The little family is at a desperate pass—the house has been put up for sale. An oil prospector discovers oil on the premises and takes an option on the property; then hastens away to form a syndicate. The old man's brother and the boy go out in a field to dig postholes, and strike oil. The importance of the discovery is appreciated by the former oil man, and the pair rush off to the house. On the way they fall into a disused well, from which the boy contrives to escape. The oil syndicate is on the way in a fast motor car when they are intercepted by a traffic policeman who has seen a little girl clinging to the back of the car. She is the old man's niece, who has risen from her sick bed, put on her roller skates, and gone on a lark. The oil men bundle the half-fainting girl into the car, rush to the house, and are forcing the old man to sign the papers when the boy enters and stops the transaction. The syndicate is foiled, and the great event takes place after all, some days later.

OLD OFFENDERS (July 10).—Under police espionage, Crooked Joe is living with his wife and baby when Norris, his former pal, tries to interest him in a job. He refuses, and subsequently earns his old pal's animosity when Norris makes advances to his wife. Norris "frames" Joe, and he is sent to prison on a charge of robbing his employers. His wife leaves her baby at the doorstep of a wealthy family, and subsequently dies. The Nortons adopt the child, and she grows to womanhood. Dick Ross, a society crook, wins her love. Norris, now a genteel card sharp and friend of Dick, holds the latter's I. O. U.'s for a large amount and forces him to steal the Barnato diamond necklace from Miss Norton. Joe, appointed butler in the Norton home, recognizes his daughter. He gets wind of the deal between Norris and Ross, and goes down to the lake, where the two are to meet. Norris, surprised, leaps into the lake and is drowned. Joe returns to the house, where a reception is in progress. Miss Norton misses her diamonds, which Dick has cleverly unclasped from about her neck. The guests are thrown into consternation by the arrival of detectives. Joe is suspected, but the police fail to find the diamonds and are completely at a loss. Then Joe steps forward. Knowing that Dick has the necklace in his pocket, he exposes him, and feels that at last he has justified his claim to honesty, besides being reunited with his daughter.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

HAMLET (Special—Three Parts—July 7).—The opening scene is in Elsinore, where a ghost is seen by the sentinels keeping guard on the battlements of the castle. This is related to Hamlet by his friend Horatio, who describes the spirit as much resembling the late King of Denmark, his deceased father, whom his Uncle Claudius is suspected to have murdered in order that the latter might usurp his throne. Uncle Claudius also married the queen, the mother of Hamlet, within a month after. Hamlet, moved by the narration of Horatio, determines to watch for the next appearance of the ghost. It is seen again at midnight, discloses itself to Hamlet as his murdered parent and relates to him the cruel circumstances of his cruel murder by the king, his uncle, and calls upon Hamlet to avenge it. In order to accomplish this purpose, Hamlet feigns madness, especially in his conduct towards Ophelia, daughter of Polonius, with whom he is enamored. Hamlet engages some players who enact a scene in the presence of the king and queen which displays the murder of his father, purposely to try the king. Claudius, on beholding this, stung by his conscious guilt and fearful of some outward event, determines to rid himself of his nephew by sending him to England. This project is aided by Hamlet, killing Polonius, whom he mistakes for the king and who was concealed behind the arras to listen to the conversation between the queen and her son, who had demanded an interview. Hamlet is by an accident made prisoner by some pirates as he is on his way to England but escapes and unexpectedly returns to Denmark. Previously, he discovers that the ambassadors are instructed by the king's letters to cause him to be put to death on his arrival in England. These letters he exchanges for others containing the same directions for the deaths of the ambassadors.

During his absence, Ophelia, distracted through her father's death and her own misfortune, destroys herself, and her brother, Laertes, urged by false rumors concerning his father's demise, rebels against the king, but he abandons his intention on being told that Hamlet committed the deed. A stratagem is evolved by the king in which Laertes basely consents to kill Hamlet by secret means Claudius wagers six Barbary horses against six French swords with Laertes that in a dozen passes he does not exceed Hamlet by three. Hamlet consents to make a trial and is first wounded by Laertes, who has treacherously used a poisoned weapon. In a scuffle they change swords and Laertes is himself wounded by the same deadly rapier. The king had prepared a poisoned chalice with which he determined to end Hamlet if Laertes failed. In the contents of this, the queen, unconscious that it is drugged, pledges Hamlet and is poisoned. Laertes, in the agony of death, confesses his own perfidy and accuses the king, and Hamlet, with the sword of Laertes, revenges himself by stabbing Claudius. The film concludes with the news of the death of Rosencrantz and Guilderstern through letters forged by Hamlet, and a eulogium on the unfortunate prince by his friend Horatio and the choice of young Fortinbras for King of Denmark.

THE WAR O' DREAMS (Special—Three Parts—July 1).—Arthur Ensign, an aged inventor, and his wife live together in poverty so that Bessie, their daughter, may receive an education. Ensign has long been working to develop a powerful explosive. His reputation as chief chemist for the nation years ago makes his investigations the more important. Bessie writes to her aged parents that following her approaching graduation, she will marry Lieutenant Leighton. Financial affairs for Arthur Ensign and his wife go from bad to worse, and finally he is obliged to sell the stove from their home in order to obtain food. Part of this money goes for chemicals.

By an accident Ensign discovers a formula for "Trixite," which, through the medium of ether waves, can be exploded at almost any desired locality. Ensign interests the war department in his new explosive. It is the more timely, because the government is worried because of inadequate defenses of the country against possible enemies. The discovery of Trixite is tested and proves a success, and Mr. and Mrs. Ensign are enabled to live more comfortably. Ensign dreams that his country is occupied by an enemy. As a last resort Ensign uses the ether wave, which checks the oncoming enemy and kills human beings by the thousands. However, his triumph becomes bitterness when he finds that through his invention his son-in-law has met death and that his beloved daughter has succumbed to grief beside the body of her husband on the stricken battlefield.

Ensign awakens from the nightmare. Lieutenant Leighton and Bessie visit her aged parents unannounced. Bessie tells her father that she has married Lieutenant Leighton and that they are very happy. The vividness of Ensign's dream has made such an impression upon him that he is hardly able to realize that his daughter and her husband are standing before him. As Arthur Ensign and his wife warmly greet Lieutenant Leighton and his pretty wife, agents for the government enter. They inform Ensign that his discovery of Trixite has been accepted and they assure the aged man that fame and fortune are to be his.

And then the aged inventor reaches for the precious formula holding the secret of Trixite, and he slowly tears to pieces the formula to which he has devoted a lifetime in discovering. He says: "I would rather live in poverty than live in wealth stained by the blood of mankind."

TRAILED TO THE PUMA'S LAIR (July 3).—Ted Mason loves his wife, Adoline, dearly, but the love does not seem to be requited. Henry Richards, the prosperous son of a mine owner, has told Adoline that she is too beautiful to waste her life in a mining camp.

After Mason goes to work Adoline leaves the cabin and is followed by Reynolds, her father, who sees her meet Richards.

Reynolds tells his daughter the story of his life: of how he gave a stranger shelter; how the stranger betrayed his hospitality by stealing his wife; of how the stranger was killed, and how a deadly puma killed her mother, but how Adoline, then an infant, was saved. Reynolds' story brings realization of her wrong attitude toward her husband.

A HARMLESS FLIRTATION (July 1).—Jerry flirts with pretty Nellie, who attracts him so much that he returns to see her for the second time. A masher, also stricken by Nellie's beauty, makes advances which become so obnoxious that she calls a policeman. The officer his just completed his duty of chasing the masher, when Bridget, his sweetheart, comes upon the scene. Together they sit down for a quiet chat. Nellie tells Jerry of her experience and the latter threatens vengeance. She directs her protector to the spot where the scene occurred. There he finds the officer and believing that worthy to be the guilty man Jerry pounces upon him and puts him to sleep.

Nellie's father comes in search of his missing daughter. Jerry spies him first and, believing him, too, to be a masher, treats him accordingly. He then returns to Nellie and relates of his deeds of valor. Nellie invites Jerry to her home to meet her father. Face to face come the two warring forces of a few hours before. To cap the climax the policeman whom Jerry had mistaken for a masher also enters. Jerry's troubles then come thick and fast but, being ingenious Jerry finally escapes in the very patrol wagon which the police had brought to cart home their quarry.

A DISMANTLED BEAUTY (June 23).—Harry finds a wallet stuffed with bills in the park. The "fat beauty" is seen in the distance and Harry drops his wallet when she is near and pretends it is hers. She pockets the money. Later, she carries on a similar flirtation with two other admirers and then goes home. One of them has presented her with a valuable necklace which he attempts to secure. He follows her to her room and then sees her disrobe. She has a false wig. Henry writes a note to Harry saying that if he disguises as a burglar he may recover the necklace. However, before he has an opportunity of sending the note, Miss Jane, the fat beauty, discovers him and he runs away. A real burglar then attempts to steal the necklace, the police follow him and the shots blow off the fat beauty's wig amidst much excitement.

THE CHILD NEEDED A MOTHER (July 7).—Little Gwendolyn was just sixteen years old. Her disposition also resembled a young calf's and she loved to romp with father, who unfortunately was inclined towards anemia and only weighed ninety pounds. Father couldn't stand these gambolings and went out in the park to look for a mother for his child. Not being particularly attractive, he attempted to win by wits what he couldn't by beauty, and wrote a note to a lady sitting on a bench. This note contained belittling remarks about Hank, her escort. Hank unluckily got the note, but threw it away. It lit on the next bench where a prize fighter was talking with his lady friend. The prize fighter naturally thought the disparaging remarks were intended for him and went over to remonstrate with Hank. Meantime, little Gwendolyn went out in the park to look for a mate.

Hank was the first specimen she encountered and she then and there decided he was her ideal. Hank tried to shake her but she wouldn't shake. Also her new-found love made her frisky and she wanted to gambol about with Hank. Meantime, her papa had nearly landed a wife, when daughter came in with her 300 pounds, and ruined the match. Hank now decided this mastodon must be painlessly although surely murdered. In making the attempt everything went wrong. The cops were involved, papa also was involved, and Hank got dissolved. After the unpleasantness had subsided, papa found he had no wife, Gwendolyn had no mamma or no Hank, and Hank had no girl. In fact, no one accomplished anything they had started out to do.

SIMPLE POLLY (June 29).—Stanton Carey, actor, director and playwright, is out of work. He owes Mrs. Jenkins a goodly sum for board, and has pawned everything available. He has written a play, but can find no one interested enough to read it with the exception of Polly, the slavey at Mrs. Jenkins' boarding house. Polly loiters over her work in Carey's room and he reads her his drama, acting it for her benefit. She has heard the thrilling lines so many times that they become a part of her and whenever she is alone she acts out the heroine's part. Fife Morine, a popular vaudeville artist, arrives at Mrs. Jenkins'. Her manager writes her she must open her season in a few weeks and poor Fife reads through sketch after sketch hopelessly seeking a good one. One day Fife overhears Polly reciting Carey's dramatic lines. She asks Polly how she came to learn the words. Polly explains and Fife tells her to have Carey bring his manuscript to her room when she will hear it and possibly buy it. Polly hastens to impart the good news to Carey. She assists him in making the best of his one suit of clothes by pressing it for him. She gives him a boutonniere from her treasured rose bush, which stands in the grating of her little window in her cellar room.

Fife is greatly impressed by Carey's appearance and also with his sketch, which she buys. She engages him to play the leading part. He pays Mrs. Jenkins and begins a new life, independent of landladies, rehearsing and making love to Fife. Polly continues her hard work, looking wistfully after Carey whenever he is near. He seems to have forgotten her. At last the day for their departure comes. Polly is scrubbing the front steps. As she sees them come out she hastily dries her hands and smoothes her hair, for surely Carey will remember and bid her good-bye. She draws in her breath expectantly as they come towards her. Fife smiles sweetly on Carey and he looks into her eyes conscious of her presence only. They go down the steps the little slavey is scrubbing and out of her life.

STEADY COMPANY (July 6).—Nan Brenner is a toiler in one of the large department stores. Her mother, built on a large scale physically, virtually overawes the household. Her husband, failing to make a living in the past, she has taken in washing and forces him to do the labor. As a compensation for his work she gives him ten cents on every dollar that she makes. This sum immediately goes to swell the funds of the liquor trust.

Jimmy Ford is a shipping clerk in a large wholesale house. Every evening he catches the car as it comes through the wholesale district and as the crowds usually get on downtown he always has a seat. He has noticed Nan many times and has offered his seat many times. She refuses each time. One rainy day he goes through the same routine and while waiting for Nan to take the seat, a laborer slips into it. Jimmy expostulates and a fight ensues, in which Jimmy throws the laborer out. Nan is weary and thankfully sinks into the disputed seat. When Nan goes to get off, she notices Jimmy has left his umbrella in the seat and takes it to him. He gets off with her and offers to share the umbrella with her. She at first refuses, and then reluctantly agrees. Jimmy gets a promise from Nan that she will go with him for a walk through the park the coming Sunday.

At last the long awaited day arrives and the two lighthearted young folks set out. Passing several of her acquaintances, Nan hears them remark that she has a "steady." Near the zoo they see a poor drunken sot who is being baited by a crowd of boys. Nan, with horror, realizes it is her father. Jimmy, not knowing him, takes pity on him and runs the boys off and offers to take him home. Nan tells him it is her father and he tells to go on ahead that he will bring him home. Nan thinks her newly-found romance is over, for when they arrive home, Jimmy will see her home life as it really is. When Jimmy arrives home with the old man, his wife abruptly jerks him out of Jim's hands without even a word of thanks for his kindness. Nan has gone to her room and thrown herself sobbing upon the bed. As Jimmy starts to leave, he hears her and timidly knocks on her door. She bids him enter and he bashfully tells her that they had better go back and finish the rest of the peanuts he purchased. Out in the park later is found a young couple. The girl is shaking with sobs, while her protector has his arms around her vainly trying to soothe her. At last she raises her head and looks searchingly at him. Satisfied with her scrutiny, she surrenders into his eager embarrassed arms and as the story ends Jimmy takes his toll of kisses.

SOULS IN PAWN (Three Parts—July 8).—John Tremain loves Violet Ellis, but she has given her heart to Dick Travers, a boy of twenty-two, who, despite his engagement to her, is throwing his money and his life away on an actress, Nina La Farge. John gets the whole story from Violet. He goes to the woman and offers to buy her off. She laughs at him at first but he offers such a large figure that she finally listens. She is growing tired of the boy anyway. John offers her a check. She sneers. She wants none of his checks to be tripped up on. He goes to the bank. Her real lover, a musician, arrives. Dick comes in on them. A quarrel ensues. Dick strikes the other man and he goes down just as John enters with the money. He takes in the situation at a glance and wonders what he will do. Making the boy realize how worthless the woman is by her eager acceptance of the bills, the man says he will shoulder the crime and let the boy go, for Violet's sake. The man sends him off—to freedom. Then he forces the woman to agree to all he says. The police are called. The man is questioned. "I murdered him because I was jealous of him," he tells them. They turn to the woman. She nods. "It is all true." Tremain is arrested and held for trial.

The boy returns to Violet. Always he is haunted by a vision of the man behind prison bars. Unable to stand life away from the woman the boy goes to her apartment and begs her to run away with him. She refuses and laughs at him. The man is still in jail. Time for the trial comes. The boy, seeking only a little rest, goes into the hop joints of his city and becomes addicted to the drug. The last day of the man's trial arrives. The boy is found and carried home, almost unconscious. Violet is sent for as his condition is alarming. When Violet comes to his bed he screams and tells her: "John is doing this for you because he loves you." Then he gives himself up and loudly confesses: "I did it." "I killed him—he was Nina's lover." Violet gathers enough to realize the truth, goes to court, creates a big scene and saves John at the last moment. Nina is called and, frightful of the consequences, tells all the details. John is vindicated and all go to the boy's home. The detective wants to go in, but they explain he is very ill. Violet stands in the door with John. The boy begs her forgiveness and then dies. The detective is dismissed and Violet falls on her knees at the boy's side and weeps. Silently John steals away. But later, in the spring time, John comes to her, in the country—and she does not send him away.

This four-act MUTUAL MASTERPIECE represents the Thanhouser conception of the so-called "thrill picture." It abounds in novelty both in situation and in the exploits of the characters. There is enough exciting incident to more than satisfy, and the tension throughout is high.

At the same time, however, the story is so absorbing and the action so well-balanced that "THE FLYING TWINS" win interest and sympathy by their charming performance, well supported by a strong Thanhouser cast. An unusual feature of this production is its genuine circus atmosphere, which helps portray the lure of the saw-dust ring. "The Flying Twins" is a thriller-classic.

VICTOR.

THE LITTLE WHITE VIOLET (Two Parts—July 5).—Philip Randell, a wealthy young Southerner, in search of health, travels in a coach to a little woodlawn resort, called Ardmore Inn. There he is cared for by old Tom Babcock and his lame wife, Rosa. The daughter, Sarah, is to be married the next day. In the garden of a near-by convent, Viola, a girl of seventeen, meets the Mother Superior, who reminds her that her eighteenth birthday is approaching, when she is to take the Holy Veil. On the wedding day of Sarah Viola gathers a large basket of roses for the bride. The village guests have assembled at the inn and Phillip, at the request of Old Rosa, acts as best man. After the ceremony Viola gives the roses to Sarah. She becomes self-conscious under Phillip's admiring gaze.

Phillip learns from old Rosa that Viola's mother, after her betrayal by the son of a wealthy man, had died broken-hearted. Before her death she left her infant at the door of the convent, where the child was found by the Mother Superior, who brought her up and called her Violet. The next day Phillip shoots a bird in the convent garden. The bird falls at Violet's feet. Phillip approaches, and his attitude towards Violet is a mingling of shame, amusement and awakening love. At the evening vespers she is questioned as to her strange mood by the Mother Superior, who, after soothing her, sends her to her convent cell to pray for divine guidance. Meanwhile Philip has a vision of Viola, and realizes how completely she has aroused his love for her. Viola has also fallen under the spell of love. She takes a piece of altar cloth she is embroidering, puts it on her head, and leans out of the window to pluck a spray of roses. The candle throws her shadow on the wall of her cell, and a vision fades in of herself arrayed in a white bridal gown and veil with an armful of roses.

The vision fades and Viola, terrified by her wicked thoughts, tears the cloth from her hair and flings the roses from the window. Unable to rest, she rushes out of the convent. Phillip, equally restless, leaves the inn and sits down on the steps of the village church. Viola, on approaching the church, starts as she sees the figure of Philip rise up before her. There in the moonlight they meet. Phillip confesses his love. The girl, alarmed at his passionate pleading, tells him she cannot be false to her vows, and seeks refuge in the convent, where she sobs in despair in her cell. Some days later Phillip is thrown from his horse in a hunting party and is seriously injured. Viola witnesses his fall. For a month he lies ill at the inn, while Viola looks eagerly forward to the day of his recovery. A week before Viola is to take the veil, Phillip comes out of his delirium, and longs to see her again. He finds a pencil and pad on the table near his bed, and writes her a note in which he asks her to become his wife if God grants his recovery. On reflection it occurs to him that it would be wrong to make her break her vows, and he is about to destroy the note, when he faints from undue exertion in his feeble condition. Old Tom, however, finds the note, and hands it to Viola, who, after reading it, rushes from the convent garden to the consternation of all the nuns. Viola enters the sick-room and kneels at Phillip's bedside. When Phillip opens his eyes and sees Viola, he masters his desire to clasp her in his arms, and asks her forgiveness, telling her he knows that she intends to be true to her vows.

Surprised at Phillip's apparent change of attitude, she staggers to the door of the convent, where the Mother Superior catches the fainting girl in her arms. Phillip, on discovering that the note he wrote to Viola has disappeared, learns from Tom that it had been delivered to her. Presently he finds the crumpled note at the foot of his bed, and realizes that Viola had come to consent to give herself to him instead of the Church. The shock causes him to have a relapse, and after his recovery he goes to the convent. Looking over the hedge he sees Viola, draped in black. With a little cry of grief Viola lowers her head in prayer and passes on without a word.

THE VIOLIN MAKER (July 9).—Pedro is a violin maker. One day while his talented ward, Marguerita, is playing on a new violin that Pedro has made, Maurice Puello, director of a theater, comes in with a violin of his own to have repaired. He hears the girl play and is enraptured. He persuades her to come to his his theatre and give a rehearsal. She is shy at first, but Pedro, too, urges her to accept, and she agrees. Her first appearance is a great success, and Pedro in the audience, wildly applauds her. Pedro decides to make a special violin for her and lavishes his love and experience in the work of art for his sweetheart. At last the work is completed and he goes to the theater to give it to her. Waiting at the stage door, he sees Marguerita and Maurice come out arm in arm. He is overcome with jealousy and disguises himself as a blind beggar in order to watch the girl.

One night as he is playing, Maurice and Marguerita come by and are attracted by the music. The girl immediately falls in love with the violin and they try to buy it, but he tells them he has made it for his sweetheart and refuses to sell. He shows it to them and they see an inscription on the back "to my Marguerita." Pedro, in anger, discloses his identity and furiously breaks the violin across his knees, throwing the pieces aside. One night Pedro wanders into a cafe in the Latin quarter and while sitting at one of the tables, sees Marguerita come on the performers' stage and give a rehearsal. He calls one of the waiters to him and, giving him a coin, tells him to take it to the girl and request another performance. The girl asks who sent the coin and Pedro is pointed out to her. She is surprised, but consents and renders a very touching melody. She goes to the table where Pedro sits, still playing and asks for forgiveness. He is about to turn her aside when he notices that she has the violin he had made for her and then broken. He is overcome by the evidence of the girl's devotion to him and the two unhappy hearts are once more full of gladness.

THE ULSTER LASS (Two Parts—July 10).—Teddy O'Neill, an Ulster lad, is in love with Eileen. Phadrig O'Toole, a rogue, is the leader of "The White Boys" gang. He and Red Barney plot the ruin of Teddy O'Neill. Phadrig poses as a seer and Barney, being poor, goes to him to learn a way to make his fortune. Phadrig at once sees a chance to work his downfall. He has Teddy draw a card from the pack, which happens to be the three of diamonds, and then mysteriously tells him that if Teddy will meet him in the glen at night fall he will have some news for him. The credulous Teddy places the card in his pocket and turns his steps homeward. Later Eileen sees the card sticking from his pocket and, thinking it is there for no good purpose, slyly removes it unknown to Teddy. Meanwhile, Phadrig and Red Barney have met a passing British army patrol who are out on the trail of the "White Boys." They inform the soldiers that Teddy O'Neill is the leader of the "White Boys" and carries upon him the three of diamonds as the sign.

The officers force Barney to accompany them to O'Neill's cottage, where Teddy and Eileen are together. Teddy is searched by the officers, but no card is found. Seeing the plot, Eileen slyly slips the card into Red's pocket, where it is found by the officers. Barney is placed under arrest. Phadrig learns of the downfall of his companion in crime, and is exceedingly angry. He has one of his men plant treasonable papers in the thatch of the O'Neill cottage; informs the officers, who find the papers and place Teddy O'Neill under arrest and bear him off to prison. Teddy is found guilty by the court and sentenced to be shot. A British captain has, meanwhile, been following Phadrig, who has come under suspicion. The captain's life is saved by Eileen. Later Eileen succeeds in helping Teddy to escape from the prison, but he is again captured and ordered executed within five days. Eileen and the captain are captured by the revengeful "White Boys" and are imprisoned in two vaults of a ruined abbey. Eileen succeeds in escaping and the soldiers return with her. A stiff fight with the "White Boys" follows, in which Phadrig is fatally wounded and before dying confesses. The party then set out in haste for the prison to save Teddy, who is even then being prepared for execution. They arrive in the nick of time and Teddy O'Neill is free to return to his Irish sweetheart.

"The Most Impressive Picture That Has Ever Come to My Vision"

The Commercial Review

THE COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL JOURNAL OF THE WEST

CALGARY, ALBERTA

May 25th. 1915

Mutual Film Corporation,

New York, U. S. A.

Dear Sirs:

Two weeks ago I read your ad. in the Saturday Evening Post; last evening I had the pleasure of witnessing the most impressive and reasonable picture that has ever come to my vision -- that picture was "The Absentee."

As you perhaps know, a great many films of various studios are released here. A certain young lady and myself see every one of any importance, we learn a great many things from the movies, these things are not always visible, but they are there.

I simply had to write this note of appreciation, not that my conscience troubles me one iota but the solemn truth of it all, the wonderfully true situations and vivid picturization of the weakness of our strength and the natural solution that lies within our grasp for all the obstacles we meet in commercial life; these things were so clearly expressed that I simply must extend my hearty thanks to you in your successful endeavors to entertain the public.

Very truly yours,

Alfred E. Hardy

Editor.

and orders her to return the ring immediately But the handsome leading man sincerely loves Lillian and is upset by her mother's injustice. Then he gets an idea. "Just leave the matter in my hands," he tells her. So he frames up a little scheme on mamma, disguising himself as a baron of wealth, and makes himself known in this identity to the widow. She falls. Binks is left in the cold. The supposed Baron is invited to call. The protesting Binks is ousted.

The leading man then invites Lillian and her mamma to "inspect his motion picture interests" the next day. Lillian, of course, accepts and mamma is delighted. The next day the outraged Binks is let in on the frame-up. He is ordered to have a real minister on hand at the studio with the promise that he will surely have a chance to marry the widow. So Lillian and mamma accompany the supposed Baron. They arrive at the studio. The movie director is also let in on the frame-up and promises to aid the scheming couple. A wedding scene is set up on the stage. Binks arrives with the real minister. Mamma is awfully interested. She does not dream for a moment that the affair is real when the director approaches the supposed Baron and Lillian asking as a favor that they help him out by acting in his wedding scene. They do this and go through the marriage ceremony watched by interested mamma. Imagine her horror when she discovers that the whole thing is real! After she recovers she realizes the humorous side of it all and gladly marries the happy Binks.

THE MYSTERIOUS LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (Episode No. 4 "Baffles Aids Cupid"—July 8).—Banker Shultz has not had a vacation for over thirty years. His doctor advises a rest or a breakdown will soon result. But it is impossible for Shultz to leave the affairs of the bank a moment. At last he hits on a great scheme. That of getting his friend, Detective Duck, to impersonate him. His old friend, the famous sleuth, Detective Duck! But before Shultz takes leave he acquaints Duck with the fact that Tom, one of his poor clerks, is persistently asking for the hand of his daughter, Lillian. He admonishes Duck to keep this pair apart under all circumstances. Then Shultz departs, and no one penetrates the disguise of the pseudo banker.

Detective Duck's troubles soon start when Tom appeals to him for his daughter's hand in marriage. The Mysterious Lady Baffles, in search of loot, with her mystic manner, enters the private office of the bank. Even she does not recognize her old enemy, the famous detective. But she witnesses the mean way he kicks the ardent Tom out and orders him about his business. Baffles is touched with womanly sympathy by Lillian's sobs. She takes exception to the supposed crabbed old Shultz's manners to the loving couple and determines to use all means within her power to make this old fossil accept Tom as a son-in-law. That night the bank is entered by Lady Baffles. With her secret preparation, steelburnite, Lady Baffles gains entrance to the great vaults and robs them clean. Imagine Detective Duck's chagrin when the faithful watchman calls him up in the dead of the night with the awful news. The newspapers get wind of it and the next morning there is a wild-rush on the bank.

Detective Duck finds a mysterious note, which reads: "When youse get ready ter hitch up yer Lill with dat guy Tom, just hang a sock in yer window. (Signed) Lady Baffles." Detective Duck locks Lillian up and fires Tom off the job. The howling bunch of frenzied creditors piling into the bank make him sincerely wish he had never meddled with Shultz's job. This sincerity is intensified when the real Shultz, after reading the awful news, arrives. The stampede of creditors becomes terrifying. Baffles is grimly waiting from a lofty roof cornice taking it all in with a telescope. She patiently waits for the sock signal she knows is sure to come. And sure enough it does come. Banker Shultz, thoroughly disgusted with Duck, overrules the latter's objections and hangs out the sock. Immediately he receives the message. "Marry the parties at once." At this Shultz balks. Then he hears the howling mob outside. That settled it. A minister is soon secured from the frenzied line and the joyous young couple are married. Immediately comes another message to Shultz: "Take a glimpse in the waste-paper basket." And sure enough! The big basket is filled to the brim with the bank's funds. The day is saved.

THE WRONG LABEL (July 5).—Mary Grey, a young working girl, is in love with Chip Malone, a young fellow, who, while not bad at heart, has, through evil associates, learned to shirk work and spend in drink what money he is able to obtain. Discouraged by her failure to reform him and hopeless when Mary loses her position, she can see no way out of her troubles but suicide. An item in a newspaper to the effect that a man has swallowed bichloride of mercury, and is awaiting the slow death which that poison brings, suggests to her the means to carry out her plan. She goes to a drug store, asks for the same poison and takes the box to her room, where she swallows the contents.

Meanwhile in the room next to Mary's another tragedy is about to be enacted. Roric Graves is the son of the district attorney of the city, a boy weak in the face of temptation, who has sunk lower and lower until he has become the member of a gang of thugs, which is being prosecuted by his own father. When the gang decide to do away with the district attorney and the lot falls to Roric to carry out the crime he realizes the error of his ways and shrinks from the gang, who proceed to deal with the traitor. Mary hears the struggle, and, only conscious of the fact that some one is in danger, hurries into the presence of the gang and denounces them. Roric grasps the opportunity to escape and when Mary returns to her room she finds him hiding there. He tells his story to Mary and she decides to save him.

Together they hasten out to go to Roric's father. On the way there they learn that Roric's father has been shot by a member of the gang. This upsets Roric so that he enters a saloon with Mary to brace himself with a drink. There a moment later detectives, who recognize Roric as a member of the gang, arrest them, but as they lead their prisoners out Chip, who happened to witness the arrest, stands them off with his gun and Mary and Roric escape to Mary's room. There Chip, who has also made a getaway, joins them. Leaving Roric in her room, Mary hastens to the district attorney's residence and fetches Roric's mother, who is overjoyed to clasp her wayward boy in her arms again. Meanwhile, the detectives have located the building where Roric is hiding, but Mary, by a clever ruse, decoys them to the gang's room instead, and the thugs, as well as Mary, are handcuffed and led off to the police station. There Mary awaits the approach of death. When Chip arrives with the doctor, who has examined the box which Mary believed would be her death, he brings the news that the contents of the box was harmless and that the wrong label was used. Surrounded by the laughing policemen, Chip, who has also learned his lesson, pledges his love for Mary anew.

COPPER (Two Parts—July 9).—Bill and Bert, prosperous young brokers, are rivals for the hand of Florence, the daughter of wealthy and socially prominent parents. Each seems to have an equal chance. Bert has in his employ a stenographer, Violet, the only support of the family, consisting of her mother and small brother and sister. Bert one day, realizing what a beautiful girl she is, makes advances to her which she scornfully rejects. Soon after Bert discharges her. The following Sunday when she has the children in the park, they wander away during their play and Billy, also walking in the park, sees one fall. He takes the child to its sister and an acquaintance begins. Bill, being in need of a stenographer, advertises in the paper for one and Violet, seeing the ad, makes application for the position, among other girls. When she is taken in to see Bill he recognizes her and gives her the position. Bert, calling a few days later, finds Violet and, after taunting her, attempts to kiss her. The struggle is heard by Bill, who comes from his private office. He and Bert quarrel and fight. Bill gets the better of Bert and drives him from the office. Bert, smarting under his defeat and anxious for revenge, goes to Brown, the proprietor of a bucket shop and a mutual friend of both, and induces him to help him ruin Bill financially.

Florence calls at Bill's office with a wealthy woman friend who wishes to invest a large amount of money. She places it with Bill for that purpose. At that moment Brown, accompanied by Bert, calls Bill on the phone. Brown tells Bill he has the chance of a lifetime to make a fortune by buying copper, as it is going up fast. Bill has a struggle what to do, as the money left to him to invest tempts him, and he finally yields to the temptation. Violet, the stenographer, sees something is wrong, and when Bill comes to her to write the letter enclosing the check to Brown and telling him to buy copper, she, after he has gone, changes the word copper to steel, and the order goes through that way. Bert and Brown, thinking Bill has invested heavily in copper, drive the stock down and down. Steel continues going up. When steel has reached a high figure the manager of the brokerage concern calls Bill on the phone and tells him he ought to sell. Bill cannot understand, as he believes he bought copper and not steel. When he goes to Violet to find out about the letter, she is gone, having left at once, as she thinks she is betraying his trust. Bill sells out at an enormous profit. He realizes what Violet has done for him and goes to hunt her up at her home. Bert meantime goes to Florence and tells her Bill is ruined. She consents to marry him. Bill finds Violet at her home and they both realize that they love each other. The story ends as they are about to embrace, watched and laughed at by the kids.

also in control of the Boyd Chemical Company, another large corporation with the same greedy and heartless policy which turns out upon the public certain harmful and toxic medicines, among which is Saco-Ozone, a widely advertised cure for tuberculosis and pulmonary diseases.

Back of the powerful arm of Emerson Boyd is David Duncan, general manager of the Boyd Mills. Duncan is also a crooked politician. He is in love with Eleanor, Boyd's daughter, who, however, is secretly engaged to Matthew Brand, one of the idle rich. Emerson Boyd reads a newspaper attack upon the Boyd corporation and, in a great rage, calls Duncan to see what influence he can use as a political boss to muzzle the paper. Eleanor goes away and Brand runs across the newspaper article against her father. Alarmed by the facts set forth in the paper, Brand determines to investigate, and, calling upon Cole, the editor of the "Clarion," hears a story that makes him sick at heart. Then he learns that Boyd's political machine has muzzled the paper.

Brand pays a visit to Boyd's factories, and is horrified at the unsanitary conditions. Brand visits the "Clarion" office and buys the paper, but retains Cole to help him. They start at once on an article that drives Boyd wild with rage when the paper comes from the press. Brand goes to call on Eleanor. At the same time Duncan and the detective are closeted with Boyd. While Brand is telling Eleanor of his campaign with the Tuberculosis Society to wipe out the dread disease the detective is telling Boyd that the man who is so bitterly opposing him and printing the vitriolic stories is none other than the quiet Matthew Brand, who has been courting his daughter. Boyd is astounded.

Meanwhile, Eleanor has become so enthusiastic that she determines that her father must hear the story and hurries to the library, where Boyd is closeted with his hirelings, and begs him to come and listen to Matthew Brand. When Brand sees Boyd, the latter attacks him unsparingly and, refusing to grant him a hearing, orders him to leave the house and never return. Eleanor is astounded. The National Tuberculosis Society meets with failure, for, when Boyd learns of the proposed sanitorium, he orders the mayor to prevent it, fearing that it might hurt his patent medicine business. Following the dictates of his superior, Mayor Alrich replies that the finances of the town would not warrant such a measure. Meanwhile Boyd becomes interested in the persistent attack upon the horrible system of the great mills and inquires of Duncan as to the truth of the stories. The latter lies glibly.

In the meantime, Eleanor has gone to the "Clarion" office to see her sweetheart. Duncan calls, and Brand pushes Eleanor into an adjoining room, that she may hear what is said. Duncan threatens Brand to induce him to stop the damaging articles, but Brand defies him. Boyd is beginning to admire Brand, but Duncan plans to dynamite the "Clarion."

Eleanor, becoming very ill, the old family physician is sent for, and, making a thorough examination, tells Boyd the crushing news that his daughter has symptoms of tuberculosis. Duncan arrives at the rendezvous where he learns that the police have become suspicious of the gangsters and they had retired to await his orders. Duncan is angered to the utmost over the hitch in the well-laid plans, and, calling them all the utmost cowards, takes the bomb himself and bids them follow. In the darkness of the rear of the "Clarion" office, Duncan sets the bomb and lights it, while on the inside, Brand and a helper are working over some copy. The bomb has a defective fuse, and a premature explosion takes place, killing Duncan, while the falling bricks and masonry seriously injure Brand.

Boyd's family physician tells the money king that there are no places in Every-town for the proper treatment of tuberculosis, as Boyd and other corporation owners have persistently fought to keep out all sanitariums. Boyd thinks of his own remedy, and sends for a case of Saco-Ozone. He reads from the testimonials of its wonderful cures, but the family physician appears, and hurls it all from the window, telling him that it is harmful and poisonous. He then tells Boyd that Eleanor, to get well, must be sent to an open air sanitarium. When Boyd tells Eleanor of the doctor's suggestion, and offers her anything her heart desires if she will only try to get well, he is told that her one wish is that he will send for Brand and listen to him. Boyd leads Brand to the library, where he listens to the other's talk on the existing evil conditions and of his efforts to prevent the spreading of tuberculosis. Boyd thereupon plans to reconstruct Every-town.

Miracle upon miracle is accomplished by the enthusiastic money king, who sends his daughter to a sanitarium, where she ultimately recovers after receiving good care, fresh air, rest and wholesome food. The story ends one year later with a big banquet to celebrate a new and clean Every-town and, incidentally, the engagement of Eleanor and Brand.

NESTOR.

WHEN THEIR DADS FELL OUT (July 6).—The small father of the great big boy and the large father of the little girl are bosom companions and neighbors. Both are interested in farming. It is the heartfelt desire of both dads to have the boy and girl marry. One day while the two old men are talking over their respective crops, they have a falling out and order their respective offsprings to have nothing to do with the other family. This break in the friendly relations came at the wrong time for the boy and the girl for they had just about completed arrangements to be married. They sneak off on every occasion to see each other and in these clandestine meetings finally decide to elope in spite of their dads. The boy's father orders him to hitch up the buckboard next day, as he intends to take a trip to town. The boy has made all his arrangements and, instead of coming back for the old man, hurries to the girl's house. The girl, too, is ready when he arrives and they set out for the station.

The boy's father misses him and, in searching for him, sees his son and the girl in the buckboard speeding for the station. The girl's father has seen her departure and, getting his rig, sets out in pursuit. He meets his "enemy" and they join forces to catch the culprits. The elopers see they are about to be overtaken and catch a handcar at the track nearby. By a flying leap from the car they catch the outgoing train. But the old men take the handcar and, although the big dad almost breaks his neck pulling with the little dad on the other end, they make good speed. Luckily they manage to get an auto and the chances of catching the pair seem better. The road parallels the track and the elopers see their dads gaining on them. The boy makes a search of the train and digs up a minister who reluctantly agrees to marry them. All go out on the observation platform and the ceremony is performed in sight of the old couple who are frantically trying to catch up. At the next station the irate fathers arrive too late to take the couple to account for they are now man and wife. All start back in the auto and as the picture fades they decide to "bury the hatchet" and have peace in the family.

LIZZIE BREAKS INTO THE HAREM (July 9).—Lizzie is the household drudge. One day she sees a notice in the paper that one of the inmates of the Royal Harem of the Sultan of Turkey has escaped from her luxurious home. Lizzie resolves to pack her belongings and get a place in that harem, where she will be kept in the "lap of luxury." The keeper of the Royal Harem of the Sultan is having his troubles, too. His master is angered that his wives are escaping and notifies the keeper that the next time a woman escapes off goes the keeper's head. Lizzie arrives at this strenuous time and finds her way to the harem. She tells them that she wants to be one of the harem girls and tries to break her way in, when they attempt to keep her out of the harem. She finally wins her way in and is amazed at the luxurious sights that meet her eyes. She is determined to meet the Sultan, and asks to be taken in, but all in vain, for the keeper of the harem throws her out. Just at this time another of the Sultan's wives escapes and the keeper is in despair for, if he can't capture her, off will go his head.

Meanwhile, Lizzie has gone dejectedly on her way. She is accosted by the escaped woman, who is still in her harem costume and she tells of her ambition to become a harem girl. The woman gladly exchanges clothes with her, in order to assist in her own escape. Lizzie comes on arrayed in the harem clothes and is pounced on by the keeper and his guard, who are searching the town for the fugitive, and taken to the harem, believing she is the one they seek. Lizzie is brought in and thrown among the other women. They see she is a stranger and ply her with questions. Lizzie tells them she has come to be the favorite of the Sultan. Lizzie is taken before the Sultan and her ruse discovered. She is about to be thrown out, when the Sultan's favorite wife halts them and questions Lizzie. Back at home Jed has been pining for his Lizzie and sells his possessions and sets out. He arrives in the Turkish capital and immediately sets out looking for Lizzie. He slips into the harem and wins his way into the Royal Baths, where the women are taking their ablutions. There is consternation and Lizzie is brought on during the excitement.

It had been decided to make a slave out of Lizzie and have her wait on the other women. This was quite a blow to her as she had expected to hold the highest place among all the women. She rebels and sadly thinks of the home she has left. When she sees Jed she is more than glad to join him in an attempt to escape.

There is a chase around the baths, which results in Jed and Lizzie breaking out of the harem safely. They make all speed for the boat, and, as the picture fades, they bid a heartfelt farewell to the land of the harem.

LAEMMLE.

BETTY'S DREAM HERO (Two Parts—July 7).—Betty is the daughter of a Southern planter and her self-imposed daily task is the distribution among her father's slaves of necessities and food. Betty is known and loved by all the mammies and pickaninnies on the plantation, and one day while she is distributing her dainties an old mammy gives her a queer chain and tells her that if she will rub it three times, she will see her future husband. Feeling is pretty high in the South over the slave question and one day Bob, a young Southern lawyer, while talking to a crowd, tells them that because of his love for the South he must fight against it. This angers his hearers and a fight ensues. Bob is overcome by numbers and takes refuge in flight. He finds safety in a hedge nearby where Betty lives and his pursuers fail to find him. It is spring in the South and Betty, like all young girls, is full of thoughts of love and romanticism. She finds pleasure in solitude and while she is dreaming of her hero, she suddenly looks up and finds herself facing Bob. Both of them realize they have met their ideal.

War is declared and there is a pall of sadness over the women of the South, for they know that they are taking their last look at many of the laughing faces of friends and loved ones. Bob, in accordance with his convictions, goes to the North and joins the Federal forces. In the gloaming Ella is seated with her mother and father. The darkies with their ebullient spirits are singing the songs dear to the hearts of all Southerners. Lulled by the crooning songs, she falls into a doze. A vision of Bob appears to her in the flames. She sees him in danger and stretches out her arms to him. Her hand is scorched by the flames and she wakens screaming. Meanwhile the war is on with all its horrors. Bob, in the uniform of a Confederate, is chased by Confederates and is about to be captured, when he takes refuge in Betty's room. She has just been dreaming of him, when she wakens and finds him standing at her bed. She realizes that if he is captured he will be shot as a spy. Accordingly she hides him in her closet. The searchers take her word that he is not there and leave. Betty makes Bob promise that he will never again play the part of a spy and, overcome by their mutual love, they plight their troth. Bob promises to return to her when the war is over.

MARTIN LOWE—FIXER (July 11).—Abner Stebbins, Martin's crony, has a daughter, Helen, whom he wishes to marry to the bank clerk, Richard Willis, who is a "swell dresser," but addicted to the use of alcoholic beverages, unknown to Abner. Abner's clerk, Harry Matson, and Helen are simply "made for each other" and Helen does not take to the idea of tying up with the bank clerk as she knows some of his bad habits. Abner, however, can't see things that way and insists that she marry him. He also takes occasion to "bawl" Harry out for daring to think of marrying his daughter. The two youthful lovers seek out their mutual friend, Martin Lowe, and find him engrossed in a very interesting magazine story. He puts his book aside and they pour their tale of woe into his sympathetic ears. He agrees with them and promises to use his utmost efforts in bringing the girl's father to their way of thinking.

Martin finds his old friend engrossed in a magazine story and eating peanuts "by the peck." He is welcomed in and offered some of the "fruit." Martin tactfully tries to talk Stebbins into letting the two youngsters have their way, but in vain. At last, desperate, he tells Abner of a seemingly true story wherein a father forces his daughter to marry a man of his own choice, who turns out to be a drunkard and abuses his wife shamefully. Both old men are touched by the story and wipe the tears away. Just as the story is finished, Willis comes in with a "jag" on. They tell him he has been drinking and he indignantly disavows the charge and leaves. The two lovers some along and give him the merry ha! ha! which insults his dignity more. The two lovers come into the office to learn their fate, and so diplomatic has been the work of "the fixer" that her father grudgingly agrees to the match. Martin then takes out the two to a celebration at the soda fountain. Stebbins, although he appears to have been taken in by Martin's story, is not so dense as he appeared and, slyly going to Martin's room, finds the identical magazine he had been reading telling the story that Martin claimed as his own. In a spirit of fun he marks across the page the word "plagiarist" and, Martin, coming home from his celebration with the two lovers, finds the book. His poor old brain whirls when he tries to figure out the word. As the story closes the old man is seen painfully searching out the word in the dictionary.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE BLACK BOX (Fifteenth and Final Episode, "The Black Box"—Two Parts—June 14).—The death of John Craig forces Quest to start on a new trail. The disappearance of Prof. Ashleigh adds to the mystery. Quest and Inspector French decide to search the Professor's house for the mysterious black box which they hope contains the clue to the mystery. They enter the house by means of Quest's pass key and, after some searching, Quest discovers a hollow space in the wall of the library. They take out the tiles and find the small black box. With it is a card which reads: "To be opened only in case of my death (Signed) Edgar Ashleigh." Inside the box is a slip of paper containing the following words: "See page 62 of January number of the American Medical Journal, 1905." French and Quest try to find the Journal and see upon the table a bound edition of the magazine for the year 1905, but the item on page 62 has been clipped out.

Meanwhile, Lenora and Laura have found Craig's diary. Arriving at the Professor's house Lenora discovers a revolving bookcase and, as they push it aside, they see a bit of paper on the floor. It is the missing newspaper item and it reads as follows: "Professor Ashleigh, after being bitten by the anthropoid, rapidly developed hydrophobia. After being treated with a new serum, the patient was relieved of all hydrophobia symptoms, but from that time this mild-mannered, humane man seemed possessed of all the characteristics of the anthropoid, being cunning, thieving, and brutal. (Signed) James Merrill, M. D." They realize that the Professor himself was the great criminal. Quest pries open Craig's diary and reads: "Ten years of horror, struggling to keep him from the other self; trying to keep the world from knowing. Now Sanford Quest has come. Will it mean discovery?" Quest realizes that a search must be made for the Professor at once, and orders French to take his men and look carefully through the house and grounds.

Another page from Craig's diary tells of the devilish scheme which the professor concocted as a means of hiding his crime, a black suit of some sort of cloth which makes him invisible under certain light conditions. The diary also tells how Craig protected Edgar Ashleigh at the cost of his own reputation. Quest finds the mysterious suit and dons it. Immediately he becomes invisible. To all appearances he has left the room, and only his eyes and hands can be seen. The girls, although realizing what has happened, are startled for the moment, until Quest suddenly removes the black cap from his head, and again he stands before them.

Meanwhile, the Inspector and his men can find no trace of the Professor, although they have searched the house and surroundings carefully. They are about to enter their automobile when there is a sudden cry from the library. They rush back into the house to find the Professor himself crouched in a chair, gazing into space, attempting to ward off an invisible enemy. For a moment the Professor seems hardly human. Then he stands up, once more the cultured scientist. He says: "Mr. Inspector, handcuffs are not necessary. Let us go to Mr. Quests's study." Arriving at Quest's apartments, the electric thought-transference apparatus is adjusted on the Professor's forehead, and, after Quest has brought the Professor under his control, a vision appears in the mirror. It shows the heart of a jungle, the Professor struggling in the clutches of a huge ape. Vision after vision follows, making plain the author of all the crimes. Quest takes the apparatus from the head of the Professor. Suddenly a cunning smile comes over the Professor's face. He asks permision to write. At the desk he objects to Quest's stub pen and asks permission to use his own. The moment he has it he presses the pen into his wrist and then proceeds to write. When he has finished, he hands the paper to Quest. It reads: "I hereby exonerate John Craig. He was the victim of circumstances. I alone, am to blame. (Signed) Lord Edgar Ashleigh." As Quest finishes reading he looks up at the Professor. He is once more the animal. He strikes at Quest. Clutching at his wrist the scientist relapses to the brutal, ferocious animal. Again he has won and Quest has lost. The criminologist rushes to Ashleigh, but the latter waives him aside. "You are a clever man, Quest, but you should have examined the pen." Without a struggle, Professor Ashleigh, the greatest criminal of the day, has died. Quest decides to have a little fun with Lenora. Calling her to him, he shows her a letter addressed to Inspector French, telling him that as he is about to be married he is going to give up detective work. For a moment Lenora is puzzled, then suddenly decides that she was mistaken in believing that Quest cared for her. She hurries to her own room and puts on her hat and coat. As she comes out, Quest sees her and smiles. She says to him: "I have decided to return to England to my aunt. I am going now to see about my ticket." She is leaving the room when he asks her to wait a moment. He calls his secretary and says to him: "If anyone calls, say that I have gone to be married. My wife and I will be back in a moment." And Quest and Laura leave on their way to look up a minister. Soon after Laura and Inspector French also are married.

THANHOUSER.

THE TWO-CENT MYSTERY (June 20).—In the annals of Scotland Yard there may be on record more intricate cases. But up to date the "two-cent mystery" is still puzzling the heads of Barbara and David and their small friends. Barbara brings home from kindergarten a perfect report, and her mother rewards her with two bright pennies. She takes the pennies to the nursery, and while eating her dinner, hides them under a plate for safe keeping. A woman friend of her mother's drops in and Barbara is called into the sitting-room. On her return, she finds the money gone. At first she suspects that some of her dolls or toy animals may have taken it. But after careful investigation, she is convinced of their innocence. A little later, she distinctly sees a company of very small fairies dancing on the table. She believes now that the fairies have taken the coins to hide them in the bowels of the earth. But when the money unexpectedly drops upon her head, she is still more mystified, and fancies the fairies have been stricken with remorse. However, deciding to take no more chances, she promptly exchanges her wealth for candy which she eats as rapidly as possible. David, the small boy next door, has been locked into a closet because he has brought home a very villainous report. In the closet he is tormented by witches. Later, he tells Barbara that doubtless it was they who stole her pennies, and that the fairies rescued the money and brought it back to her. Nancy, Barbar's nurse, has yet another version of the mystery, however. She thinks it more than likely that, in clearing the table, she overlooked the coins and that in shaking the table cloth out the window, they fell into the awning below. Then, when the awning was lowered, they fell onto the child's head. But this, of course, is ridiculous. And Nurse Nancy does not believe in fairies, anyway.

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS?"

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

WHICH SHALL IT BE? (Two Parts—June 22).—A wealthy, childless old couple, living on a fine country estate, envy Farmer Selden, their neighbor, his big family. As the farmer is poor, they do not doubt but that they can induce him to let them have one of the children in return for money and land. "It isn't as though we were asking the Seldens to give up their favorite child," said Mrs. Kenniston, "any one of the seven will do." So Mr. Kenniston writes to his neighbor, stating the case and making him a handsome offer. Poverty is pressing hard upon the farmer and his family. He and his wife sadly agree, that perhaps the best thing they can do is to let the rich Kenninstons take one of the children. That night they tiptoe upstairs to the children's bedsides, to decide which one of the seven they will let go. Of course, they cannot give up Baby Lillian, and to separate their twin girls is out of the question. Jamie, next to Lillian in age, is still too young to be sent to strangers. Donald, crippled since babyhood, they cannot think of sparing. Strangers could never understand how uncomplainingly he bore pain. Dick is a little terror, always in hot water. "Only a mother's heart could be patient enough for such as he," whispers Martha Selden, and they move on to the side of their eldest son. But John least of all can they do without. "He is so like his father," weeps his mother. The rich, old couple are very much surprised when they receive the farmer's courteous answer to their note. For Farmer Selden tells them that he cannot give away even one child. What queer ideas poor people have, to be sure!

INNOCENCE AT MONTE CARLO (June 27).—Richard Marcus, a young man who lives by his wits at Monte Carlo, notices at the roulette wheel a young girl, one plainly never before in such a place. She wins, and leaves the table. Marcus follows her. Outside, Alice Brownell is met by Eulalie Perdue, one of Marcus's confederates. She confides to her her story. She was on her way with a nun from her convent school in France to Genoa, to meet her parents, when she left the railway carriage at Monte Carlo to buy some flowers. The train had gone off and left her. She had not enough money to buy a ticket to Genoa, but, happening to hear a woman telling a friend that she had "won enough to take her to Egypt," she made inquiries and found her way to the famous Casino. Now she had enough money and more to get her to Genoa, and she must catch the next train. Eulalie tells Alice that the last train to Italy is gone for the night and persuades her to accompany her home. A little later, Marcus turns up at Eulalie's apartments. He brings a bogus telegram, purporting to be from Alice's father, placing her in his care. Eulalie, supposing she is wise to his intentions, does not demur when the gamester takes the girl away with him. In a short time he returns alone. He is questioned about his victim. And then comes a surprising revelation. Marcus tells his associates that he has put Alice aboard the Genoa train and wired her father to meet her. "And I hope some decent man would do the same for my young sister," he added, "if ever she got into such a fix."

FALSTAFF.

THE STOLEN ANTHURIUM (June 25).—A little old maid and a nice old bachelor live side by side. They do not know each other, though Dana Hood always lifts his hat to Miss Emily Bradbury when he passes her on the street, and she returns his courtesy with a demure glance. Both are devoted to flowers, and each has a back yard garden. Their little Edens are separated by a high board fence. Someone sends Miss Emily a rare specimen of cactus, and she places it in her open front window where it can get plenty of sun. The bachelor long has wished for a cactus. He does not happen to see the plant in his neighbor's window. And that afternoon, when the very specimen he has coveted, falls in a litter of glass and dirt at his feet, he is completely mystified. By the time he can get his head out of his broken window, the naughty boys who committed the deed are far down the street. He plants the cactus in his garden. Miss Emily, some days later, looking down from an upper window, sees her lost plant over the fence. She completely ignores Dana Hood when he bows to her on the street. That same day, Tom and Ned, in the custody of their mother, are marched to the home of the old bachelor. They confess. Dana Hood digs up the cactus, reports it, and for the first time in his life goes to Miss Emily's door. She is overjoyed to have her cactus restored, but even happier to find that her neighbor, after all, is not a thief. And now it is rumored in the neighborhood that the two gardens and the houses side by side are to be turned into one.

to convert him. Dakota flushes and replies half angrily that he has never seen the parson's girl and don't ever want to. However that afternoon Daisy goes to the saloon and invites Dakota to attend church. Dakota refuses her invitation. Daisy tells him she will make a bargain with him to tend his bar for five minutes if he will go to church the next day. Dakota is slightly startled, but he admires her grit and accepts the challenge.

Daisy goes behind the bar. The men line up and she is about to serve a fresh guy when he suddenly reaches over and kisses her. Dakota immediately knocks him "cold," and, ashamed of his bargain with Daisy, grimly escorts her to the door. The next day he tells the men that if they don't accompany him to church he will close. They reluctantly consent to go with him. Daisy's father is very much pleased to see the harvest he is reaping, and after the service invites Dakota to take dinner with them. Dakota and Daisy soon learn to love each other and Daisy promises to marry him if he will close his saloon and try to control his temper. He promises. The following day "Ace" Farrell, an eastern gambler, favors the village with his presence and on seeing Daisy inquires who she is. The villagers tell him her history.

"Ace" goes to the saloon and there makes insulting remarks about Daisy. Dakota deals him a stinging slap across the face. "Ace" is right back at him and a fierce scrap commences. Dakota throws "Ace" out of the door and "Ace" draws his gun and shoots. Dakota fires two shots and hits "Ace" in the arm near the shoulder. He crumples up on the sidewalk. Daisy comes along and, without giving Dakota a chance to explain, helps "Ace" to his feet and takes him to her father's house, where she nurses him back to health. Dakota determines to leave the country. He is riding away when he sees "Ace" and Daisy, who have been gathering flowers for the church. They go into the church. Dakota hears Daisy scream and follows them in. "Ace" attempts to kiss Daisy and she runs up to the bell loft. Dakota shoots "Ace" and he and Daisy make up their quarrel.

HIS MOTHER'S PORTRAIT (Two Parts—July 2).—Darrell Blackley, backer of musical comedy show, admires the work of Lotus, and promises her the lead. The next day Lotus goes to the theater to rehearse and, having accomplished it to the satisfaction of Blackley, he promises her the job, but insists that she have supper with him and take a short ride into the country before the show that night. Lotus tries to avoid going with Blackley, but he insists. At the cafe Blackley drinks freely and when they start for their ride he is pretty well "lit up." His machine breaks down near a farm house, and Lotus runs into the house for protection.

She enters a room which has been occupied years before by Bert Hamilton's mother, and which he has kept in the same condition as she left it. She is attracted by the picture of a sweet-faced woman and, raising her hands, she kneels before the picture in supplication, beseeching the gentle woman in the picture to protect her from Blackley, whom she hears entering the house. Blackley breaks in the door which Lotus has locked. She screams and Bert hears her. Before him appears a vision of his mother which points to the house, and, rushing into his mother's room, he throws Blackley out the door. He returns to Lotus, who has fainted. He takes her into the front room and revives her. Blackley secures a team and has his machine towed away. Lotus remains at the farmhouse. The next morning, when Bert is driving Lotus to the station he tells her of his love for her and instead of going to the station they go to the "little church around the corner."

DOMINO.

THE ACE OF HEARTS (Two Parts—July 8).—His courtship of Celeste Lebault, forbidden by her father, Jean Desmond, a young French Canadian trapper, is forced to meet his sweetheart clandestinely. He calls at her cabin in the absence of her father, who is nearby chopping cord wood. The father breaks the handle of his axe, returns home, and catches Jean courting Celeste. The father orders Jean from the cabin and a fight follows, which is witnessed by the neighbors. Jean and Francois, the father, are separated. Lebault sends Celeste on a long visit to her aunt to break the infatuation for Jean.

On the morning of Celeste's return, she finds her father's murdered body in his cabin. She is thrown into hysteria and the village seethes with excitement and speculation of who could have murdered him. Suspicion falls upon Jean, the villagers remembering the hard feeling between him and the dead man. The police are sent for and Sergeant Adams of the Northwest Mounted, reports in citizens clothes. Sergeant Adams finds a clue in a torn piece of playing card clutched in the dead man's right hand. The torn piece of card is a piece of the ace of hearts. Adams searches the village for a similar pack, he, too, at first suspecting Jean, but a search of Jean's cabin shatters the suspicion, for in it Adams finds a deck of cards with the ace of hearts intact and of a different design from the one taken from the hand of the murdered man.

Celeste refuses to share the village suspicion of Jean and believes him innocent and welcomes his sympathy of her bereavement. Adams, unable to solve the mystery, starts back to headquarters to report. His horse falls and throws him hard, breaking his left arm, also breaking the leg of the horse. Adams is forced to shoot the horse to end its sufferings and he looks about for a shelter for the night. He comes to the cabin of Baptiste. That night a terrific blizzard swoops over the mountain and snows Adams in and he is unable to leave. The next day Baptiste proposes a game of cards to pass the time. Adams consents. During the course of the game the damaged ace of hearts turns up and Adams tries to arrest the man. Baptiste overpowers him and is about to kill him with his own revolver when an avalanche of snow hits the cabin and shatters it. The cabin takes fire. Baptiste, badly hurt and dying, is rescued by Adams. Dying Baptiste confesses to the murder of Lebault.

AMERICAN.

MOUNTAIN MARY (Two Parts—July 5).—A feud exists between Hazen Doone and Giles Turell, both grizzled old men of the mountains. Wandering in the rugged heights, Giles comes upon Hazen, whom he shoots from ambush. Hazen is wounded in the arm, but manages to reach his mountain home. There he discovers that Ivan, his son, has returned from the city, where he has been a student of art. Ivan vows to avenge the wound of his father, and Mary, the young man's mother, suggests a form of revenge more terrible to their foe than death—the ruination of Giles' dearly loved daughter, Mountain Mary. The artist sets about his mission. Shaving his beard, he proceeds to pitch camp in the mountains, not far from the Turell cabin. He is dabbling idly with his brush, when Mountain Mary comes upon him. Ivan becomes a visitor at Giles' cabin, and, though the aged feudist sees something familiar in the young man's features, he does not recognize his mortal enemy's son.

Ivan awakens to a realization that he loves Mountain Mary. He is torn by conflicting emotions—love for the girl and the promise he had made to his wounded father. Love for the girl, however, triumphs, and they plan to elope and marry. Then Ivan receives from a friend a picture of a woman from which he is asked to make a painting. He is studying the features when Mary comes upon him. She thinks the picture that of a former sweetheart and bursts into tears. Running to Giles, her father, she tells that Ivan is insincere. In a rage, old Giles shoots Ivan, and the wound is a dangerous one. He has learned, too, that Ivan is the son of Hazen, his lifelong foe. In a flash, Mountain Mary's disappointment is forgotten and her love for Ivan asserts itself. Carrying her rifle with her, she runs to the wounded man, for whom she summons a doctor. At the point of a rifle, she compels her own father to aid in comforting the man he shot. Then Hazen comes up. He, too, is made to assist his enemy in caring for the young man. Ivan explains to Mary the circumstances of the picture. The two embrace. Astounded, the two fathers make as if to grapple. Then Mountain Mary steps in. Taking the grizzled hands of her father and his foe, she places them together. For a moment the old men falter. Then their fingers close in a hearty clasp that marks the end of the feud.

THE HIGH COST OF FLIRTING (July 7).—Ethel Dunne and Jack Blakeney are lovers, despite the objections of Ethel's father. Pater Dunne has just admonished the young couple, particularly his daughter, when he falls captive to the winking wiles of a flirtatious gypsy beauty. It is a put up job. Dunne is in the act of kissing the dark skinned girl, when her young husband appears with drawn stiletto and the corpulent Dunne makes a hasty and undignified exit.

Tony, the husband, sends a black hand note to Dunne, who consents to place $1,000 in a designated spot to escape an Italian bomb. Ethel and Jack find the note, and take a hand in proceedings. When Dunne leaves the money, Jack seizes the swarthy Tony, arrests him, and puts the money in a bank to Ethel's credit. Next morning's paper informs Dunne that the plot miscarried. Where is his money? He sets out to investigate. He finds the satchel that contained it, and thinks, of course, that the money still is there. Arrived at his home, he tells of his great bravery in foiling the designing gypsy. Jack and Ethel finally choke him off by revealing their part in the little comedy. He can but accept defeat gracefully and give the happy pair his paternal blessing.

BEAUTY.

THE GUY UPSTAIRS (July 6).—Larry Trelawney, son of rich and aristocratic parents, is a victim of the idea that he is a pugilist, and his associates are the tawdry hangers on of the fighting fraternity. Things have come to such a pass that Larry is ordered to remove his friends from the Trelawney homestead, which has grown to resemble a fighter's camp. Larry receives the offer of a fight, and he and his rowdy companions set up training quarters at Opalhurst. He receives warning from one G. M. Cranston, an author, that the writer will retain two rooms on the second floor of the establishment, and will contest the pugilistic presence. The big trainer goes to "t'row out dat Cranston guy," but when Larry and his party see the big fellow come rolling down head over heels down the stairs, they are filled with deep respect for G. M. Cranston. That night two ghosts invade the sleeping quarters of the trainers and the others. There is a wild scramble and Larry is left to train alone for the coming battle. He is running along a country road when he falls and turns his ankle painfully.

Meanwhile Cranston, the author, is busy at work on a novel. Larry is confined to his bed for a time, and the girl who helped him on the day of the accident is nursing him through his trouble. Larry at length is recovered, and deeply in love with Shirley, his pretty sympathizer. Then Cranston receives a message from Larry's father to the effect that a huge sum of money will be forthcoming if Cranston can induce Larry to forget his prize fighter aspirations. Larry decides to throw Cranston out, and sets about it at once. Imagine his surprise when he comes upon Shirley in the room the author occupies. "Where is Cranston?" he demands. "I am Cranston," comes the demure reply. Larry is astounded. Then and there he declares his love, and is accetped on the condition that he discard his fistic aspirations. He agrees, and he and Georgia Cranston claim the reward that Father Trelawnley offered.

RELIANCE.

IN OLD MEXICO (June 30).—Juan and his wife, Dolores, accompanied by her sister, Mercedes, and Manuel, who is in love with Mercedes, attend the fiesta. There Don Jose, a toreador, is smitten by Dolores, and attempts to force his attentions upon her, which she repulses. Juan has made his wife a present of a beautiful shawl. In the course of the evening Mercedes, feeling chilly, borrows the shawl and with her lover, Manuel, seeks a secluded nook. There they are seen by Don Jose, who, recognizing the shawl, thinks that Dolores has repulsed his attentions, only to accept those of another.

He immediately hastens back and informs Juan of what he supposes is the perfidy of Dolores and takes Juan and show him the couple. Juan also recognizes the shawl, thinks that his wife is unfaithful to him, hurries home and secures his pistol. Jose stands at the door watching Juan, who is now on his way to revenge the stain upon his honor, when in walks Dolores, seeking her husband. Don Jose is aroused from his drunken stupor, questions Dolores and finds that it is not she, but her sister whom he saw. He realizes the harm he has done her and the danger in which he has placed Mercedes and follows Juan in an effort to prevent the horrible crime which Juan is about to commit.

Juan has returned to the spot where he saw the lovers, raises his pistol and fires, but the gun misses and he is about to raise his pistol for another shot, when Don Jose rushes in, grabs the pistol, explains to Juan that it is not his wife that he sees in her lover's arms, but her sister, who has borrowed the shawl and that his wife is at home seeking him. He persuades Juan to leave and when they come to the sister they see Dolores searching for Juan. Juan is conscience-stricken for the suspicion he has cast upon his wife and takes her in his arms.

LITTLE MARIE (Two Parts—July 3).—Beppo Puccini loses his wife at the birth of a child and conceives the idea that the doctor or the priest has been instrumental in taking the woman away from him. He drives them from his hut and refuses to allow any one to touch the dead body of his wife or minister to his child and it is only by waiting outside his hut until he has fallen asleep after many hours of vigil, that the priest is able to finally enter and minister to the occasion. When Puccini wakes up and finds his wife's body and the baby both gone, he goes almost crazy with grief and is only half reassured when he finds the priest has been caring for the child and returns it to him.

An interval of several years finds him in America with his baby girl. He has become a laborer on a railroad under the foremanship of Sam Coggini. He lives just opposite the boarding-house in which his foreman lives. This boarding-house is run by an attractive Italian woman named Bianca Pastorell, who has noticed the child (Marie) and has made friends with her. One day Marie sees Bianca at the gate of the boarding-house, and points her out to Puccini who, seeing that his baby wants something, immediately conceives that he must get the woman for her. Bianca brings Marie a little present and in this way meets the father, who asks her to marry him. Bianca runs off considering it a good joke, but Puccini cannot understand jokes, and when he later sees Coggini meet Bianca every evening, he conceives the idea that Coggini is standing between him and his baby's desire, and he decides to kill him. He places a bomb in Coggini's office, but a workman sees him and saves Coggini's life.

Coggini "fires" Puccini. He watches the nightly meetings between Bianca and Coggini and finally works out a plan for their mutual destruction. He makes another bomb and plants it at the gate of the boarding-house in such a way that the moment the gate is opened it will explode the bomb. He sees Bianca come to the gate. Coggini appears, but just before he reaches the gate Puccini is horrified to see his own baby Marie run across the street and meet Coggini. Puccini then realizes that he must reach the gate before it is opened and he rushes down stairs and tries to cross the street in time to prevent the explosion, but is held up on the way by two street cars which pass each other. Finally he succeeds in crossing to find that Coggini, with the child on his shoulder, is just on the point of opening the gate. He dashes up, grips Cogini hands and holds them from the gate. He confesses his crime. When Puccini kisses Coggini's hands and begs him for the baby's sake to forgive him, telling him that it was through jealousy for Bianca that he did it. Coggini understands the situation and explains to Puccini that he is not in love with Bianca, but is married and has a baby of his own. He joins Bianca's hand with Puccini's. Bianca is petulant at first, but when she realizes that Puccini wants her so much that he is willing to commit a crime for her, and when Marie holds out her arms for her, Bianca turns to him and they are united in an embrace.

THE HEALERS (July 5).—Gertie and Moxie lose their jobs in a third-rate vaudeville show. They take to street faking in their extremity, and are driven out of town when a rube becomes wise to his shell game. Moxie and Gertie trudge along. Weary and disheartened they reach the environs of a village, where they stop to rest. In the village lives little Violet, a cripple, who, arousing the sympathy of Moxie and Gertie, is cured by Moxie, who, an acrobat, is expert in muscular manipulation. The townspeople acclaim the child's recovery a miracle, which belief Moxie and Gertie immediately commercialize by opening a resort and hold manifestation meetings as they, in a trance, commune with divine powers.

To treat the town's banker of dyspepsia, they dose him with the "Crystal elixir of life" which they secure at a mineral spring. Then a "miracle" does happen. The banker gets well and believing that Moxie and Gertie have some patent prescription to concoct the elixir he has it analyzed. The chemist tells him it is natural mineral water and the spring from which it comes is of value. Moxie and Gertie

MAJESTIC.

THE KID MAGICIANS (June 29).—Georgie, a rich little boy, and Carmen, his sweetheart, are taken to the golf links by Georgie's mother and father. Tiny Rags, the caddy assigned to the party, is scarcely big enough to drag the golf bag. Georgie's mother invites the urchin to Georgie's birthday party. This delights little Carmen, but it makes Georgie jealous.

The day of the party finds Rags ashamed to go into the party because of his poor clothes. He hits on the idea of forcing Willie, a mama's darling, to exchange clothes with him, and to keep the boy from informing, locks him in the coal cellar. Rags appears at the party. Later, the children are taken to a vaudeville show, where they see a magician break eggs into a hat and take out little chickens. Back in the nursery Georgie attempts to perform the hat and egg trick with his father's opera hat, with the result that the eggs will not come out of the hat.

The hat is placed back in the clothes press containing the broken eggs. Willie's fashionable mother arrives to take him home and goes into hysterics on finding Rags dressed in her boy's clothes. Willie is discovered in the cellar, black with coal dust, and is taken to the bathroom to be scrubbed. The climax comes when Georgie's father dons his opera hat and is drenched with scrambled eggs.

ROYAL.

WHEN THE HOUSE DIVIDED (June 26).—A brother and sister, both meek as Moses, marry martinets. Their rich uncle dies, leaving them his large estate, provided they and their partners live in his house together for one year. The quartette moves into Uncle Steele's mansion. The bullying husband and the virago of a wife, make their spouses miserable. They also keep up continuous warfare against one another. At last, lines are chalked on the carpets to divide the house into two parts. Even the servants of the two families are forbidden to cross the lines. The meek brother and sister soon reach the limit of endurance. They indulge in some wine and then venture to assert themselves. The despotic husband and the domineering wife are straightened out by their respective partners, and the chalk lines are erased in the scuffle.

ONE GOOD COOK (July 3).—The cooking in Kentville is bad. Just one woman, the Widow Kearn, can prepare a meal fit to eat. Husbands and fathers protest at a public meeting, and the women persuade the Widow Kearn to start a cooking school. The after effects of the first dinner, however, are terrible. As the undertaker boards with the widow, she is suspected of being in league with him, and the women rush to the school to get their revenge. A tramp, who has been trying to get a meal all through the story, at last succeeds as a savory plateful comes flying through the window.

KOMIC.

BEPPO, THE BARBER (July 11).—The Duke de Touche is wanted by the police. He and his confederate, Lotta Kale, have been hiding at a hotel resort. Miss Kale learns that a detective is on the trail of the duke and warns him to get away. He, however, not caring to leave the place where business for the two crooks is good, decides to have his beard shaved off so the detective will not recognize him. He goes to Beppo the barber, who does a neat job. The Duke informs Beppo that he is returning to Europe. The rich Miss Kale long has fascinated the ambitious barber from a distance. He now plots to win her. Disguising himself in a beard, Beppo goes to the hotel, meaning to impersonate the Duke. However, he mistakes Fay, the manicurist, for the heiress and gets in deep before he discovers his blunder. The barber is accused of the villainies of the real Duke. He sits on a freshly painted bench and is forced to borrow the first pair of trousers he can find. They happen to belong to the Duke. Beppo is arrested with his pockets loaded with valuables. But the Duke makes the fatal mistake of accusing Beppo of having stolen his trousers. Then the victim owns up that said garments are not his, and proves, to all concerned, that he is indubitably only a barber—and the Duke pays the penalty.

THE FLYING TWINS (Thanhouser—Four Parts—July 1).—A wealthy manufacturer has two twin daughters. As a companion they have their cousin, a country girl, who makes the acquaintance of a vaudeville acrobat. When this undesirable relationship is discovered and broken by the manufacturer, the country girl meets and marries a young clerk, and the twins are sent to their Aunt Sally in the country while their father and mother are away on a trip.

When a circus comes to the little town, they are much attracted by its tinsel display. The acrobat the girls met with their country cousin is now with the circus. He and his wife discover the girls and persuade them to join the circus. They become clever performers, and the acrobat rejoices in the distress their disappearance has occasioned their father, the manufacturer, who broke up his friendship with the little country girl. His hatred leads the acrobat into mailing a taunting, anonymous letter to the manufacturer. A clever detective traces the communication and the little girls are restored to their home and distracted parents.

THE COUNTER INTRIGUE (Special—Three Parts—July 10).—Gregory Ingram runs an opium smuggling business while supposedly conducting a tea importing house. When he finds the secret service agents are on his trail he unloads the business on Everett Morgan, who does not suspect the character of the trade.

Morgan is convicted and sent to prison. Ingram, who is infatuated with Heloise, Morgan's wife, then makes love to her. She suspects that he was the guilty man and openly encourages his love affair while working with the secret service agents, who also believe that he was really the guilty one, although the evidence pointed to Morgan.

Heloise convinces Ingram she was glad to get rid of her husband and he finally is caught in her net and confesses his guilt. The secret service operators are placed in a room where they can hear all, and arrest him. He is sent to prison, while Morgan is set free.

THE DELICATESSEN SHOP (L. & K.—May 31).—Mike and Meyer had worked in perfect amity for many years. The little delicatessen store which began in a humble way, grew prosperous, and Mike and Meyer should have been happy, for their money began to accumulate. But when riches came in by the door, happiness went out of the window. Mike had a daughter; Meyer had a son. The parents were so proud of their offspring that jealousy broke out between them. And being jealous of each other they became, also, suspicious and each thought the other was trying to rob the business. So at night each slept on one side of the cash register. There came into the store by day as well as night, all kinds of people, over whom Mike and Meyer quarreled. Thus the once happy little store became the scene of unreasonable discord. So Mike and Meyer being unable to agree, agreed to differ, the result being that Mike and Meyer became bitter enemies and were put in prison as disturbers of the peace.

RAFFERTY SETTLES THE WAR (All Celtic —June 7).—Rafferty is a dreamer of dreams. He dreams of a method of settling the European War, so he elects himself President of the United States, summons the rulers of the embroiled nations from the trenches to the White house, and, of course, insists upon the signature of a Treaty of Peace.

Then Rafferty wakes from his dream to find that his cigar is out. This theme is worked out in the picture with the most laughter-provoking effects. Rafferty is a pungently Irish humorist, who before proceeding to the White House has a number of funny adventures with his neighbors, who are of various nationalities. He stops several street fights, and gets the idea that as he is successful in suppressing small troubles, he may tackle bigger and more momentous quarrels. From his insinuating housekeeper comes the suggestion that he should bring about peace in Europe. After which comes the dream.

LITTLE MISS BROWN (Brady—June 7).—Betty Brown is an egregious coquette and flirt. She fools a pair of lovers and as the result of her indecision she lands herself in a pretty mess at a Hartford hotel, where she is cajoled into passing herself off as the wife of a man whose real wife is on her way to meet him. Betty just butts into a sea of trouble for the man and his wife are to receive some money from the former's uncle on condition that the wife meets with his approval. The general mix-up at the hotel caused by the meeting there of all these opposing interests is the cause of a great deal of fun and confusion, the central figure of which is always Betty Brown.

FINE FEATHERS (June 14).—Temptation to cheat comes in the way of a young couple in reward for which the wife can escape from the bitterness of life on $25 per week in a New York suburb, i. e., Staten Island. There are no "classy," well-dressed people in New York south of Thirty-fourth street. Jane Reynolds, the aspirant after Fifth avenue fine feathers thought this way, when the tempter came along and persuaded her to induce her husband to pass on an inferior quality of cement for a great dam then in course of construction.

"Bob" Reynolds fell for the bribe and Jane got her fine feathers. The gambling mania got "Bob" and he was financially ruined in double quick time. The bursting of the dam, due to the bad cement, completed the tragedy of "Fine Feathers." The chief culprit, the tempter, committed suicide, and the young couple resolved to commence life all over again and go straight.

THE MOONSTONE (Shubert—Five Parts—June 21).—The story relates how a valuable diamond is stolen by an Englishman from the eye of an Indian idol. The Englishman, on his return to London, is pursued by three Indian priests in disguise whose object is to secure "The Moonstone" at all costs, as failing its recovery, the priests will lose caste. The Englishman, Hearncastle, is found drowned, presumably having been killed by the Indians. The diamond passes into possession of Franklin Blake, his friend.

Blake is followed by a band of Indian magicians. He presents the diamond to his fiancee from whom it is stolen. A detective is called in. Another girl in love with Blake commits suicide and suspicion attaches to her, as she leaves a mysterious note for Blake. Subsequently, Blake finds the diamond in the possession of a money-lender. His fiancee, learning of the dead woman's attachment for Blake, quarrels with him. A doctor discovers that Blake walked in his sleep and took the diamond himself while in that state. The diamond was stolen from Blake while he was asleep and never recovered. The thief confessed and died, and Blake and his fiancee were reunited.

THE FACE IN THE MOONLIGHT (Shubert —June 28).—During the latter part of the reign of Louis XVIII, in France, Ambrose, an aristocrat, loves Jeanne Mailloche, a peasant girl, but is compelled to marry his cousin, Alice de Fontelles, to preserve their respective estates. Jeanne dies soon after, leaving a son, who is kidnapped and raised by a band of ruffians. Alice's son, receiving every advantage, is raised as an aristocrat.

Twenty years later, at the time Napoleon was in exile, the young aristocrat, Victor by name, becomes a captain in the King's army. His half brother, Rabat, son of Jeanne, has degenerated into a criminal, with a price on his head. Strangely enough, they look exactly alike, though neither knows of the whereabouts of the other. In fact, Rabat is ignorant of Victor's existence. The young Captain is told of Rabat's existence by his father when the latter is on his death bed. Victor is engaged to Lucille, the niece of Munier, who is Victor's father's secretary. Munier becomes associated with the conspirators, who are seeking to place Napoleon on the throne of France. In Munier's endeavor to steal the funds of the conspirators, he becomes associated with Rabat, the criminal.

Victor is called to the army, and arranges with Lucile for their final adieu at the diligence office. Being unaware of the existence of Rabat, Lucile believes her lover guilty of the murder which she sees Rabat commit at the meeting place appointed by Victor. Rabat's face in the moonlight almost causes Lucile to abandon all faith in Victor. Victor is arrested for the murder, but before his execution, Lucile learns the truth concerning Rabat and forces her uncle, who has acknowledged his connection with the murder committed by Rabat, to intercede. This stays Victor's execution as a murderer, but as Napoleon has returned to power, Victor is arrested as a political prisoner, and ordered to be shot.

Victor's release as the murderer has caused the arrest of Rabat for that offense. He is to be beheaded. Both Rabat and Victor's executions are scheduled for the same day. Lucile, knowing of her uncle's part in the actual murder, forces him to intercede with Napoleon, thus saving the life of Victor. Later, Victor meets Rabat, his half brother, for the first time, and inspires him with the necessary confidence to face his death. Munier escapes from the country and with Napoleon's pardon for his political offenses, Victor and Lucile are happily married.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 8 —Two Parts "A Mind in the Past"—June 21).—Entering the house after a futile search for Blair, the Widow Stanley was startled by the terrific slam of a door. Hurriedly, the widow ran to the room where she left her visitor. It was empty! Everything about the room, however, bespoke a desperate struggle. Search for Hagar finally led the widow to the secret closet. Pressing a concealed button, the electrically controlled wall moved slowly back. In a dark

Exposition of Motion Picture Arts
San Francisco, July 13 to 16, 1915

ITEMS OF INTEREST ABOUT THE CONVENTION

It is to be held in the most magnificent auditorium in America, as shown above. The convention chamber seats 2,000.

The Convention closes Friday night with the greatest ball in motion picture history. The dance floor in the Auditorium is 197 feet square, and is entirely unobstructed by pillars or posts. The galleries have a seating capacity of 5,000.

You can visit the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco and the San Diego Exposition; also the great motion picture studios of the Pacific Coast without extra expense. An opportunity like this will never be repeated in a life time.

Plan to arrive in San Francisco not later than Tuesday morning, July 13th, and spend the entire week.

This is our LAST CALL for the greatest opportunity exhibitors are likely to have in years to combine business and pleasure—to get together at a great convention and to see the Exposition and our great Pacific Coast at the same time. Do not miss the opportunity.

Hotel rates are very reasonable. The Convention Committee is making reservations and guaranteeing the rates. Accommodations may be secured as follows: One person in single room, without bath, $1.00 per day up; with bath, $1.50. Two people, with bath, $2.00 per day up.

M. P. E. L. of America bids you a Hearty Welcome.

corner she found Hagar, unconscious and bleeding. With the aid of a colored servant, she carried the queen to the sitting room and succeeded in reviving her. The blow on Hagar's head had clouded her memory. But Mrs. Stanley needed no enlightenment—she know who was guilty. The gypsy queen was driven back to Stanley Hall and given into the care of Esther. Failing to remove the cloud from Hagar s brain, Esther decided, and the doctor agreed, that she might benefit if she was brought back to the gyspy camp and its familiar surroundings.

As the party was leaving Stanley Hall a stranger drew up at the gate and dismounted. It was Marmaduke Smythe, legal representative of the Earl of Warwickshire, returning, after an absence of twenty years, to inform Arthur of the aged Earl's death and of his inheritance of his estate, title and the diamond from the sky. Certain, after hearing Esther's story, that Arthur was dead, legally, if not physically, he averred that Blair, as the next direct male descendant of the Earl, was entitled to the inheritance. Back again in the gypsy camp, Hagar fell into a troubled sleep. As darkness settled over the camp, Luke Lovell moved, snake-like, through the tall grass, an ugly knife between his teeth. At that moment Arthur, alone in the desert, many miles away, woke from a restless sleep with a start. Something seemed to tell him that Esther's life was in peril.

"Kiss me? Not until you return the diamond from the sky to me, will I grant any such request," warned Vivian, alone with Blair in the garden of the Randolph home in Richmond. She was chiding him for his failure to recover the precious jewel. Blair promised to secure the diamond. In a badly mussed dress suit and what remained of a once respectable high hat, Strap McGee, philosophical knight of the rails, paused alongside a pig-sty on the outskirts of Richmond, over which was bent a little colored boy. Playfully, Strap slapped him on the back, and something the boy held in his hand dropped into the mud of the sty. It was the diamond from the sky!

Quickly, Strap dug the gem out of the mud, and dashed to Richmond. The curiosity shop of Hung Li, den keeper and tong leader, desirous of striking a quick bargain. No sooner had Strap passed the bauble to the wily Oriental than the trap door, on which he stood, was sprung. It was Strap's last vision of anything earthly. Gloating over the fortune handed him, Hung Li, hurried to the room where the great god "Lung" reposed and hung the diamond about its throat. That evening, Mrs. Randolph, chaperoned by Detective Blake, was hostess to a slumming party "doing" Chinatown, and, as on all such occasions, the itinerary included a visit to Li's place and, if possible, a peek into the joss house. Up the back fire escape of the Chinese den crept the form of a man. Stopping at the partly curtained window of the sanctuary, the man raised the sash with as little noise as possible. Then he reached in his hand and took the diamond suspended from the idol's neck. The next instant it was torn loose and the hand withdrawn, just as Li, preceding the party of visitors, entered. He grabbed a sharp two-edged sword and swung at the mysterious hand, but missed. A second blow cleft the head of the image. As it fell, it overturned an altar light and started a terrible conflagaration.

THE SINS OF THE MOTHERS (Vitagraph—Five Parts—June 14).—At an early age, Trix, the daughter of Mrs. Raymond, the proprietress of a gambling resort, shows an inherited tendency to gambling. Mrs. Raymond sends her to a convent school, and, learning that Trix desires to become a nun, her mother gives her consent, provided she still cares for that life after spending a year in the social world. The girl is taken into the gay social set and learns the evil ways of the world. With a beginner's luck, she wins at the gaming table, until her mother, frightened, begs her to play no more. It is too late, the girl cannot stop, and when the inevitable turn of luck comes, she is plunged into debt.

She calls upon Norris, an old sweetheart, for help, and after paying her debts, he begs her to marry him. She consents, but soon after the wedding breaks her promise by betting on a horse race. She continues gambling surreptitiously and loses money borrowed from Dovey, the old servant. Finally, she pawns a necklace given her by Norris. Dovey is accused of theft and lies to save her young mistress. She is arrested. Norris finds the pawn ticket, forces a confession from his almost insane wife and secures Dovey's release. Her mother sells her business to Henri De Voie, a gambler, and takes Trix away for a trip. Norris is later elected District Attorney, and resolves to stamp out gambling. Trix again finds herself in the terrible clutches of the gambling fever and—unknown to her husband—plays at De Voie's gambling house. Her mother finds her there one night and it so happens that Norris has decided to raid the place on the same evening. When he and his men burst into the place, they find both Trix and her mother. The proprietor tells Norris the truth, and in a quarrel, De Voie draws a revolver with the intention of shooting Norris. This is forestalled by Trix's mother, who, with one loving look at her daughter, atones for her sins by throwing herself between the two men and receiving the bullet in her own heart. Norris leads his sobbing wife away and she turns her back on the gaming table forever.

MY BEST GIRL (Rolfe -Five Parts—June 14).—Dick Vanderfelt, scion of a wealthy family, is a student at the Stamford University. Deeply in love with Dora, daughter of a chemist, he advances large sums of money to her father in order that he can carry out experiments on a new and highly destructive explosive powder. Dora does not know that Dick is befriending her father—her affection for Dick is inspired by real love. Paul Denton, a student in chemistry, a fellow student at Stamford, a conscienceless chap and woeful flirt, has had a disastrous love affair with Ann Bludge, and has cast her off. Ann's brother, learning of his sister's plight, vows to kill Denton. Dora's father, when his experiments prove valuable, arranges to show it to the government, and through Dick sends a specimen to Denton to be proved. Denton, discovering the value of the new explosive, plots to marry Dora himself and gain control of the explosive. When Dora's father receives word that the government had accepted his discovery he is overcome and dies. Dora is now sole possessor of the secrets.

Ann Bludge, learning of her brother's threat, goes to the college dormitory to warn Denton. Denton, when someone approaches, places Ann in Dick's room, where she is discovered by an official. Dick is expelled from school and disinherited by his father. To escape the disgrace, he arranges with Brown, a no-account, to exchange names for two weeks. Brown is a deserter from the army and Dick, assuming the name, is arrested and sent back to the barracks at Angel's Island. At the barracks he sees Dora and Denton in each other's company. Sending for Ann Bludge, Dick finds Dora and learns that Denton, and not Dick, was the cause of Ann's downfall. Ann's brother later catches Denton trying to steal the explosive from the barrack safe. A terrific fight ensues, with the resultant arrest and conviction of Denton, the exoneration of Dick and the happy consummation of the dream of Dick and Dora's life.

THE DICTATOR (Famous Players).—Brooke Travers, a young society man of a roving disposition and much leisure, gets into a cab with his valet and his trunks, to go to his yacht for a cruise. Arriving at the pier, the cabman demands an exorbitant charge for his fare, and, upon Travers resenting the charge, he is again soaked by the cabman, this time with his capable fists. Tavers strikes back, and the cabman falls, his head hitting a curbstone. The ambulance surgeon arrives, pronounces the man dying, and advises Travers to flee. Taking the advice and the cab, Travers and his valet hasten for another wharf, and take ship for Central America. As they are landing at the little port of Porto Banos, the consul of that place, who is also an instigator of revolutions, offers to let Travers take his credentials and pose as Dictator in his place, pretending to be afraid of the yellow fever, but really because he has learned of a new revolution, and is afraid of his life. Travers, fearing the law is already on his track, eagerly accepts the offer, and goes ashore as the new Dictator. Then things happen with marvelous celerity, and Travers becomes the center of a small cyclone of trouble, the chief factors of which are the opposing faction of the revolution, the wife of the consul, a vengeful former sweetheart of the latter, and a pretty young missionary, with whom Travers has fallen desperately in love. How he finally comes unscathed from his many perils, and wins his lady love, form an interesting denouement.

MOTIOGRAPH

MR. EXHIBITOR:—Be very careful in selecting a machine that has a record of destroying film, or a machine that is made of soft parts—they are a source of continual expense.

Not so with the MOTIOGRAPH; its ground and hardened parts will insure long life, small up-keep and rock-steady pictures.

A comparison is convincing proof of the quality of the MOTIOGRAPH.

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

To the Exhibitor:

SELLING our famous Minusa Gold Fibre screen is getting to be so easy we are about to cut down the dealer's discount or steal the office boy's lunch money.

One of our dealers wrote us that he had sold four screens in one day.

He said all he did was to put the sample up, throw a picture on it, and the screen "sold itself."

Pshaw! That's not selling. That's taking orders. Even an ad-writer could do that.

But anyway that's the experience of all our dealers.

The Minusa screens sell themselves because they are scientifically correct; because the Anderson Method and the Hetzel finish have established a projection quality which cannot be approached. Because they are "BUILT BY BRAINS" to fit your theatre.

ASSOCIATED SERVICE

Complete Programme of 21 reels a week

Dramas, Comedies, Animated Cartoons and Educationals

Important Announcement

We wish to state that in deference to the wishes of the exchanges which have contracted to handle the ASSOCIATED SERVICE, we have decided to postpone the initial release date from July 12th, as originally intended, to the early part of August.

For months past we have been concentrating our undivided efforts to the planning and developing of our project. The difficult problems of distribution have been solved, the operating details of our organization have been decided upon, and thousands of feet of film have already been completed and are stored in our vaults.

There will be, however, no cessation in the activities of the studios of the seven companies composing the Associated. These plants are running and will continue to run to their full capacity, producing the full amount of their allotted work.

While we are in a condition to begin releasing on the date at first intended, we will utilize the extra time at our disposal to bring every department of our organization to a state of higher preparedness, so that our operations, when once started, will go forward steadily, without delay or interruption.

We Put Theory Into Practice

Professor Simon H. Gage says in Optical Projection: "Every care should be taken to render the surface as smooth, white, and opaque as can be made, inasmuch as the brilliancy and perfection of the picture will greatly depend on the whiteness, and the sharpness of outline upon the smoothness of the screen."

Edwin Thanhouser

presents the following releases of the Thanhouser brand:

"A Maker of Guns"

This offering rouses one with a jerk to the fact that this little old world of ours is not as it should be—and the plot is timely. Imagine a man who manufactures cannon; he takes pride in their power—shows them off exultantly and explains how many men they can kill with one shot. Oh, yes! He's got 'em perfect as science and dollars can make 'em. Then—bingo! The big kick comes on—his own son's life-blood is spilled over the battlefield by one of those grand guns! Can you see ACTING? Can you see Mignon Anderson, Morris Foster, Peggy Burke and Arthur Pauer doing justice to it? YOU CERTAINLY WILL!

Released in two reels. Tuesday, July 6th.

"Tracked Through the Snow"

It's a drama, but it will keep you cool—there's a furious, raging blizzard in it! Snow in July is welcome and there's mountains of it here. Little Baby Badgley plays the lead, aided by a whopping big, shaggy bow-wow! And the regular Thanhouser favorites—Boyd Marshall, John Lehnberg, and some more.

Released in one reel. Sunday, July 11th.

Let the FALSTAFF COMEDIES put your audiences in good humor; they are polite, neat and reliable. This week

Edwin Thanhouser presents
"Madame Blanche, Beauty Doctor"

Riley Chamberlain plays a grouchy, rheumatic old duffer who needs an operation on his bank account. Harry Benham becomes a beautiful Madame, and Mignon Anderson takes a jolly good part in the jolly work—and it's all free from horseplay.

Released in one reel. Friday, July 9th.

BOOK NOW

For FIFTEEN Big Weeks of Screaming Smashing Success

The good old kale is awaiting you in "THE BROKEN COIN" and there are forty ways and means provided to help you get it. This big play, which one of our biggest Exhibitors calls the "world's greatest serial," was released on June 21. The Bookings—well, they are more than satisfactory for the very good reason that the wise ones recognized that in a story by the great American author, Emerson Hough; a scenario by Grace Cunard, who wrote and played the lead in "Lucille Love"; directed by Francis Ford, who also directed and played the lead in "Lucille Love," they would get a really big serial. They knew, too, that the "mighty helping hand" of the Universal would be behind it to PUSH IT and LEAD THEM TO SUCCESS. And so the bookings are pouring in. This is a tip to you to get the big FREE Campaign Book from your nearest Universal Exchange. Read the story of "THE BROKEN COIN." Then you will know that it's a whale of a picture with a real punch and a tantalizing suspense scene at the end of every episode. You can't read that story without wanting to book the play.

"The Broken Coin"

Is the serial of the year. Fifteen episodes—thirty reels. Wire, write or 'phone your Exchange at once for your booking date. Get in your standing order for all the business-getting advertising supplies. You can't afford to overlook this one. It's a winner. And when the Universal says it, it's true. BOOK NOW.

The new MinA Films have attained such a remarkable vogue that a new MinA Company has been formed to make the same striking one-reel comedies for which this brand is renowned.

Exhibitors have found the new MinA Films so good that they are clamoring for more! That means business. Are you getting your share?

In further proof of the good things that have been said of MinA Films read the following excerpts from reviews of recent releases in the trade papers:

MOVING PICTURE WORLD—June 19
"LIFE'S MYSTERIES"

One-Reel MinA Comedy from the New Los Angeles Studio Is Filled With Rapid-Fire Fun.

* * * "Life's Mysteries" suggests solemn thoughts, weighty deductions, sighs and tears; nothing but fun of the broadest and most hilarious sort enters into the making of this capital farce. * * * Milton H. Fahrney, the producer of the film, has fortified the ground plot with skill and laid siege to the risibility of an audience with every device known to screen strategy. Louis Fitzroy, as Count Padinsky, makes this over-rated gentleman a comic figure of large physical proportions and equal powers to amuse. George Ovey is unctuous, facile and speedy, as a native born son, and Goldie Colwell is an inspiring heiress. Jefferson Osbourne is another worthy member of the cast.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS—June 19
"LIFE'S MYSTERIES"
(MinA—One Reel)

"There is an amusing situation which is well handled in this comedy, the climax being particularly effective * * * gets plenty of laughter from the audience."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD—June 26
"FATHER FORGOT"
(MinA)—June 10

"A lively one-reel farce, played with spirit by Louis Fitzroy, George Ovey, Goldie Colwell and their associates—skillful work by the director, Milton H. Fahrney, insures almost constant laughter."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS—June 26
"FATHER FORGOT"
(MinA—One Reel)
(Reviewed by Peter Milne)

"'Father Forgot' embraces no mean collection of stock comedy moments, interspersed with a smattering of slap-stick action that was responsible for great hilarity."

Balboa Feature Films Are Supreme

So great has the reputation of Balboa Features become that the demand has forced the company to more than double its productive capacity.

Twenty Thousand Feet of Negative Per Week

Within two weeks all planned extensions will have been added and eight companies will be working steadily. Balboa efficiency and Balboa proficiency make it possible to release twenty thousand feet of finished negative per week.

Pathe, Inc., Gets All Balboas for Five Years

The Balboa Company has signed a contract with Pathe-Freres by which that mighty motion picture corporation secures all Balboas for a period of five years.

Balboa Made the Famous "Who Pays?" Series for Pathe

The Pathe-Inc. Exchanges are now booking the twelve marvelous human interest dramas—those exceptional photoplays that are arousing hurricanes of enthusiasm and causing money to deluge box offices in all sections of the United States, Canada and Europe outside of the war zones.

Foreshadowings of Big Balboa Events

The next big undertaking is the serial, "Neal of the Navy," for Pathe in fourteen episodes with Lillian Lorraine, William Courtleigh, Jr., and William Conklin. Directed by Harry Harvey and photographed by Joseph Brotherton. At the same time the Balboa Co. will produce for Pathe "Comrade John," a five part picturization of the world-famous novel by Samuel Merwin and Kitchell Webster, with William Elliott, and Ruth Roland. Directed by Bertram Bracken and photographed by William Beckway. Jackie Saunders, the fascinating Balboa girl, will appear in a series of powerful heart interest dramas especially for Pathe and these pictures will be exhibited in multi-colored films, the very latest and most marvelous process that has ever been invented—so far ahead of any other colored pictures that there is absolutely no comparison. Other competent companies are appearing in important three and five reel special features that will command world-wide attention when released.

3-ACT COMEDY-DRAMA FEATURE "HER VOCATION"

The situation in this feature is laughable enough to lighten a play with a human bright touch that will appeal to all—that of the wife who a writer would be and sends her husband to the tenderloin to collect the material and "atmosphere." He collects it all right and then the police collect him and a newspaper woman who is there, also under an alias, to write up the life of the denizens. The author, Mary Rider, knows the place and life she writes of and succeeds in giving us a true picture of another world without even the suggestion of coarseness.

Augustus Phillips plays the role of the husband with his usual and capable sense of delightful comedy and forcefulness, while Sally Crute as the adventurous newspaperwoman is splendidly cast. Margaret Prussing as the wife shows keen comedy aptness. With Harry Beaumont and Mrs. Erskine. Direction James W. Castle. Friday, July 16—3000 feet.

PACIFIC COAST NUMBER

Mecca of the Motion Picture

Review of the Beginning and Growth of Kinematographic Production in California---Wonderful Development of a Modern Art that Has Builded Cities and Established Great Public Institutions on the West Coast--- Views of Studios and Stories of the Players In and About Los Angeles

Compiled by George Blaisdell

IT WAS only a little over seven years ago that Frank Boggs at the head of a small company of Selig players came to Los Angeles and established a studio at the corner of Seventh and South Olive streets. Mr. Boggs was cut down a few years later by the hand of a Japanese religious fanatic. Had he lived until today he would have seen one hundred directors at work in the territory where he was a pioneer, nine of these for his own company; he would have seen a score of concerns making pictures, employing several thousand men and women; he would have seen the motion picture industry in a position where it is conceded by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to rank first in importance in this city of nearly six hundred thousand inhabitants; and he even would have seen the population of Los Angeles double in the seven years. The judgment of Mr. Boggs and his employer has been vindicated in a remarkable degree.

There is in existence no statistics of official authority bearing on the motion picture industry in Los Angeles. The United States Government census experts are now procuring figures, but these will not be available until the end of the year. Arthur W. Kinney, industrial commissioner of the local Chamber of Commerce, in a formal statement printed during the spring estimated that 15,000 persons in Los Angeles were supported by the industry, with which assertion it is unlikely any one seriously will disagree. Mr. Kinney also said that on a conservative estimate the film industry is worth $15,000,000 a year to Los Angeles. If by this somewhat indefinite statement it is intended to imply that this figure represents the sum annually paid in salaries and wages to officials, producers, actors and employes, there will be serious disagreement. An official of the Chamber of Commerce in conversation with the writer said that the figures quoted perhaps were high and that there was a disposition to modify them—that probably $7,500,000 was nearer the exact amount.

Manufacturers and others in a position to know the labor cost connected with the output of one hundred directors very likely will agree that it will be not over five or six million dollars annually, that even the latter figure is high; and it will not be surprising if when Uncle Sam finishes his official quiz it will be found well below the former. In a rapidly expanding industry and in a fast growing community the use of large figures is the rule. It is the natural outgrowth of the spirit of "boost," and no stranger can remain three months in this community composed of a majority of natives of states other than California without feeling its influence, without noting, for instance, the tendency of the press to enlarge upon the wonderful climate of California and apparently to lose no opportunity to call attention under large headlines to untoward weather conditions in other parts of the country. Candor compels the admission, however, that if in Southern California all the conditions for picture-making were as desirable as are the weather and the photographic light there would not be so many feet of film exposed in other parts of the country.

One hears here on every hand the assertion that 75 to 80 per cent. of the pictures produced in the United States are exposed in California. Let us see. We have for a beginning the definite figure of one hundred directors. One company employing more than a half a dozen producers requires that each shall turn in at least an average of a thousand feet of finished negative each week. Another with over a dozen directors concedes an average of a thousand feet a week. A third employing between six and twelve does not release on an average of over six or seven hundred feet for each a week. The nature of the work is such that a larger amount would interfere with the particular quality the company desires to maintain. Many feature companies, using elaborate sets, cannot turn out more than a single reel weekly, if they accomplish that. There was a concern recently which extracted from its directors two thousand feet weekly, but that concern is not now doing business. The latter figure may be attainable where all or nearly all scenes are exteriors, and all other factors favor, but there are few producers who will maintain that it is a safe average. All of which will indicate that 125 reels is hardly an underestimate of the amount of finished negative sent east every week from this vicinity. Two hundred thousand feet is a conservative computation of the weekly output of American film manufacturers—it will probably run considerably higher. Under this basis 60 per cent. or 62½ per cent. would be a more exact estimate of the relation of the output of this community to that of the whole country—which by all means is no mean figure.

Thus it will be seen that among the manufacturers of the United States there is a preponderance of opinion in favor of Southern California as the ideal location for the making of motion pictures. While some firms hold to the east for the production of the larger part of their output nearly all maintain studios here. The Vitagraph and Lubin companies are instances, the Edison is an exception. Biograph splits the year between the east and the west—it believes the advantage of the long days and the sunlight in the winter compensates for the expense involved in the trip out here; and also that the advantage of change in scenery and of backgrounds of the metropolis and of live grass as opposed to dead warrants the return—and in Southern California during the summer and fall grass that is not artificially watered is dead. Mutual, Selig and Universal do most of their work here. Albuquerque, Balboa, Horsley, Morosco-Bosworth and Lasky do all of it.

That on the part of many manufacturers there is no change of heart regarding the desirability of Southern California is suggested if not indicated by the activity in building operations. The Lasky company already possessing an extensive plant, has big plans under consideration, but is reticent as to them at present writing. The Lubin company is razing its wooden structures and replacing them with concrete. Balboa has taken additional ground and is doing much building. There is photographic evidence in following pages of the accomplishments of the Selig company. David Horsley has just completed a large studio. The Famous Players has a new studio, well equipped, but Mr. Zukor is not decided whether he will come back to it in the fall or whether he will build a great plant in the east. It seems fair to assume that Universal is settled in quarters that will be adequate for many years to come. The Morosco-Bosworth is situated in a new structure of concrete and steel, built on advanced lines. Kalem is making additions to its Glendale plant, that it may have greater facilities for large productions.

The Keystone has completed additions to its studio that double its stage capacity and as well has renovated the older section of the establishment. The second plant of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, that at Santa Ynez canyon, beyond Santa Monica, is being much enlarged, in spite of talk during the spring that it was practically to be abandoned and the entire force removed to a sixteen-acre plot in Hollywood. The Reliance-Majestic studios at 4500 Sunset Boulevard are being constantly added to. The Albuquerque, now leasing from the Norbig company, has building plans under consideration. The Norbig, which has been doing commercial work, intends to begin production of western subjects. Quality Pictures is remodeling the old Nestor plant and installing an up-to-date laboratory, which will be operated under the name of the F. B. Film Laboratories, of which the president as well as of the former corporation is Fred J. Balshofer, who purchased the property in question January 1 last. The National Film Corporation has already produced four subjects in its studio, that formerly occupied by the Oz and then by the Famous Players, before removing to its new home. The Essanay within the past two months has taken over the studio on Fairview avenue recently vacated by the Rolfe company, which like the Famous Players has departed for the east. The Vitagraph company, too, is reported to contemplate doings.

It is hardly likely the taxable value of property devoted to the production of motion pictures would equal the sum or sums freely and rather loosely quoted by many Angelenos. An official of the local tax department said that while of course there were some establishments that were rated at a figure that would command attention, there were more that would not. This was due of course to the fact that the business was expanding so rapidly and many manufacturers were so busy providing for present requirements that they had given less attention to erecting large and more substantial structures in anticipation of the growth of years to come. Undoubtedly two years hence will see a great advance over the total valuation for 1913. One of the factors that has tended to lessen the cost of production in the west as compared with the east has been the availability of the open stage, a platform with diffusers, as against the expense involved in the installation of lights in a closed structure. Then, again, there are only one or two companies that do their own laboratory work other than the making of a sample print. As New York City is so much nearer the geographical film consuming center it is easily seen why it is cheaper to send to the east one negative and a sample print than to ship from here the full quota of finished positive.

Los Angeles is a good place in which to live. Of churches there are many; and the churchgoing division of the little apartment in which this is written is positive that not even in Brooklyn, which once was known as the City of Churches, has she seen such large congregations. This condition, or situation if you prefer that term, is reflected at night in the busier streets. The streets are cleared early—of undesirable characters none are in evidence, certainly not in the newer section of the city; there is, we believe, an older section and a very small one which as yet we have not had a chance to prowl through. It must be borne in mind that in 1880 the population of Los Angeles was 11,093, in 1890 50,395, in 1900 102,479, and in 1914 (estimated) 550,000, and in the county 780,000—remarkable figures. If the churches are well attended the picture theaters are well patronized—which goes to prove that these two elements of civic life are affiliable and not antagonistic as some radicals would have us believe. "The Clansman," by the way, has finished a run of sixteen weeks in one house, and that in a period of eighteen weeks, and what is even more noteworthy, in a theater seating 2,900 persons. The cost of living, especially during the summer, when rents are quoted at less figures, cannot be said to be high.

In the opening paragraph reference was made to Frank Boggs and the little company of Selig players he brought to Los Angeles in the early days of 1908. Two of that company are still in the employ of Mr. Selig here, and they are his oldest co-workers. These are James L. McGee, manager of the Edendale studio, and Thomas Santschi, a director at the big studio opposite Eastlake Park. Others in the party were James Crosby, manager; Harry Todd, for many subsequent years with the Essanay company in the west and now at Niles; Gene Ward, and Mrs. Boggs, who professionally is known as May Hosmer.

The next company to reach the coast was that of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, making the Bison brand of pictures, which reached here the day after Thanksgiving in 1909. The seventeen players were under the command of Fred Balshofer, now the president of Quality Pictures Corporation. Among them were Barney Sherry, still with the company; Evelyn Graham, Jane Darrell, Charles K. French, Mrs. French, of the New York Motion Picture Co.

Ad. Kessel

Charles Inslee, now with Charlie Chaplin, and James Youngdeer and Redwing, who in later years did such splendid work as Naturich in "The Squawman," the initial production of the Lasky company. The first pictures were made on the site of the present Keystone studio, a block away from the Edendale studio of the Selig company, and consisted only of a horse corral and a stage—western pictures were made solely.

The Biograph company came to Los Angeles in January, 1910, and remained thirteen weeks. Among the party were General Manager Hammer, D. W. Griffith, director, and Lee Dougherty, now chief of production. The first studio, in which it established offices and developing and printing quarters, was at Washington street and Grand avenue. The company undertook the trip for the express purpose of making "Ramona" in authentic locations. This single reel subject is conceded to be the most expensive picture put out by any manufacturer up to that time. While the Biograph since 1910 has sent companies to Bermuda it has never missed a season at Los Angeles, the period of the stay having gradually been lengthened until now for several years it has been an even break between the east and the west.

An Essanay company of ten players under Gilbert M. Anderson left Chicago on August 15, 1910, and proceeded to Golden, Col., sixteen miles from Denver. At the end of October the company went to Los Gatos, Cal., and running into the big rainburst of the year never turned a wheel for five weeks. After a stay of nine weeks more the company visited Redlands, Santa Monica, where was made "Tag Day," the first picture to be produced in the town; San Rafael, the present home of the California Motion Picture Corporation; Lakeside, near San Diego; the present home of the Kalem at Hollywood, and then to Niles.

Kenean Buell brought the first Kalem company to the coast. The Kalem company had been one of the pioneers in breaking away from the home studio, but had previously confined its attention to Florida. It was on December 11, 1910, that Mr. Buell opened a studio at Verdugo canyon, which was the beginning, by the way, of the present Glendale plant. In the latter part of 1911 P. C. Hartigan opened the studio at Santa Monica which was recently abandoned. The Hollywood studio in Fleming street, now under the direction of "Rube" Miller, was opened in September, 1913, by Carlyle Blackwell.

David Horsley's Nestor forces were the first motion picture players to invade Holywood, Mr. Horsley renting buildings for studio purposes at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Gower streets and occupying them in October, 1911. He also was the first manufacturer to bring three companies to California. These were under Thomas Ricketts, producing dramas; Milton Fahrney, westerns, and Al. E. Christie, comedies. On May 20 following, the company was merged with the Universal.

William Horsley,
Builder of Universal and other Coast Studios.

The first western Vitagraph company left Brooklyn October 23, 1911. An attempt had been made to take westerns in the Adirondacks, but results had not been satisfactory. In the party were Rollin S. Sturgeon, director; Charles Bennett, Anne Schaefer, Tom Fortune, Robert J. Thornby, Helen Case, Tom Powers, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Burns, Robert Burns, Walter Straddling, cameraman, and Alfred Ziegler, assistant cameraman. Stops were made for two weeks at Colorado Springs and at Grand Canyon. The party arrived in Los Angeles on November 23 and were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. William T. Rock. On the following day the force occupied a studio on Ocean avenue, Santa Monica; a year later occurred the removal to the present studio.

The Universal, as before stated, took over the Nestor studio on May 20, 1912. On July 12 following the company acquired the great plot of ground across the street, now the home of the L-KO company. The next month William H. Swason, then treasurer of the company, leased 1,299 acres at the end of San Fernando Valley, adjoining Griffith Park, and now known as the old ranch. In August of 1914 the company gave up this property, destroying the structures for picture purposes, and moved to the present site, ground for building on which had been broken the previous May. Early the present year the Universal again acquired the old ranch and still holds it. Carl Laemmle in the spring of 1912 made pictures for his Imp brand at a studio on Brookyn Heights, but abandoned the plant on the organization of the Universal. Universal City was formally opened on March 15 of this year.

Production of Keystone pictures began on July 4, 1912, on which date Mack Sennett took a small party of players, including Mabel Normand and Ford Sterling to Fort Lee, N. J. The making of subjects under this brand had been in contemplation for a number of months before this date. In September of the same year the company came to Los Angeles and took over the studio that had been the original site of the Bison company, the forerunner of the present Broncho, Kay-Bee and Domino. The older division of the New York Motion Picture Corporation had removed to Santa Ynez canyon near the end of 1911.

It was about this time the companies began to congregate in Los Angeles. James Young Deer commenced the making of pictures for Pathe. The Thanhouser company opened a plant in the latter part of 1912, but soon returned to the east. Edwin S. Porter brought to the coast a company in support of Mary Pickford. Among the subjects produced was "Tess of the Storm Country," a picture which added to the reputation of the Famous Players and the star. The company has been here each of the following two seasons. The Lubin company has been represented for two years by players under command of Captain Wilbert Melville. The Balboa and Albuquerque companies have been in operation about two years, Bosworth, Inc., about twenty-one months and the Lasky company about eighteen months. It was about a year and a half ago that David W. Griffith brought his Reliance-Majestic companies to the city; he stepped into a studio already in operation, with four directors working.

S. S. Hutchinson,
Founder of the American Plant at Santa Barbara.

A great picture making community is this bit of Southern California clustered in and about Los Angeles. Nor is all of the state's production centered here. There is the big plant of the American between the hills and the seat at Santa Barbara, a hundred miles to the north, which has been under operation for four years to the great satisfaction of President Hutchinson and his associates. There is the home plant of the western division of the Essanay at Niles, thirty miles east of San Francisco, with innumerable canyons in plain view of the studio and where the fogs of San Francisco Bay reach it not a dozen years in the year. There is the studio and laboratory of the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael, in picturesque surroundings an hour's ride from the city behind the Golden Gate. Studios that contributed to the recent Kriterion program were situated at San Mateo, near San Francisco; at Santa Barbara and at Pasadena. It is announced that their owners are preparing to resume operations under the auspices of the new Associated Film Manufacturers, Inc.

Great natural advantages must there be in any country that in the space of a few years has drawn to it such a proportion of the motion picture manufacturers of the United States. The opinion among producers that Southern California is all that is ideal is not unanimous, however. The writer has in mind two prominent directors who hold the opinion that no place in the country can compare with New York—where are centered so many trained actors available for picturemaking, and which may be procured without the delay necessitated by a trip across country and the added output involved in higher salaries and expenses. It is to be expected this assertion will be combated vigorously here by directors who will point out that the supply of actors is bound to grow as the industry expands, and that more and more players will seek employment in Los Angeles.

Locations? Ay, that's the big word. Here locations are of many sorts and degrees. There are mountains, even with snow; there are desert plains and valleys, some in flower, some sterile; there are city streets and high buildings; there are palaces set in gardens of semi-tropical luxuriance and marvelous beauty; there are trees, from the pine and the cedar to the eucalyptus and the palm; and there is the ocean. Los Angeles will hold its strong grip on the industry of motion picture production just so long as its varied backgrounds continue to charm the eye of the picturegoer.

Arthur Mackley

The Far Famed "Sheriff" of Motion Pictures Tells How He Got the Title.

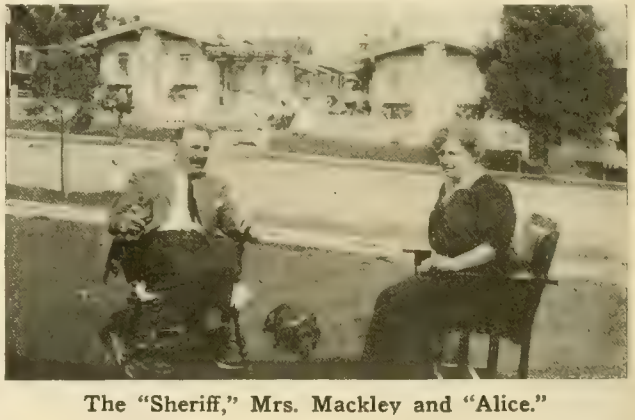
IN THE multitude of pictures that have portrayed the story of the West, of the pioneer period as well as of the present time, no figure is more familiar to followers of the screen than is that of Arthur Mackley, "the sheriff"—who has in theaters all over the world been shown as the representative of law and order, as the man behind the star which in primitive communities is often the sole symbol of the heavy hand of the law. The history of the territory which to-day is becoming recognized as the real West, the far West, covers hardly more than the span of a human life—we are speaking now of the American phase as distinguished from that of the Spanish. As one journeys through this rugged country, this land of great distances, where even to-day you may travel scores of miles without seeing—from a car window—a sign of human habitation, he is impressed by the fact that there is substantial basis for the stories of the early conquerors, of the tales seemingly romantic that have made so vivid an appeal to the imagination.

Arthur Mackley.

In the history of the West the character of the sheriff bulks big. It is a type that needs no introduction. So it is the natural thing that man who has been seen in hundreds of portrayals of this official, in a period covering four years, and at a time when releases were comparatively few, should be known to the picture public as "the sheriff," in spite of the fact that his work to-day is in roles more varied and perhaps also in keeping with the changing requirements of the exhibitor. For a year and a half Mr. Mackley has been producing pictures at the Reliance-Majestic studio at 4500 Sunset Boulevard.

"How did I get into that sheriff role?" said "Mack," in response to an inquiry. "Well, we were making pictures, mostly Western, that as a rule had a crook in them, and of course the crook had to be taken care of. It was in the very first picture made by the Western Essanay company, in Golden, Col., just after we left Chicago in August, 1910, that I had the part of a sheriff. It was not much of a part, but they seemed to think my work looked that of a sheriff. It was the beginning of a long association in the picture public mind that I was the sheriff. Of course, for a considerable while I was unidentified by name, but I used to get letters, nevertheless, from five to ten a day. They were addressed to 'The Sheriff, Essanay Company.'

"We have had in the company some bad men—men who could not go back to Texas; and when you say that a man can't go back to Texas you are talking in language that cowboys understand—fellows who will shoot at the drop of a hat. There was a time when it seemed if any cowboy got tired of his job he would look up the Essanay company and apply for a place. We've had them by the dozens."



The "Sheriff," Mrs. Mackley and "Alice."

The talk turned to the outstanding characteristics of men who were "bad." Mr. Mackley agreed with William S. Hart that the really dangerous citizen is a man of few words. "There is an old saying in the West," remarked the sheriff, "'Don't have your hand near the hilt of your gun when you are talking with a man that doesn't talk back,' and you may be sure that is good advice."

How They Spend It.

What Some Photoplayers on the Coast are Doing With Their Money.

By Clarke Irvine.

A BROAD estimate, based upon facts and figures gathered from as many studios as possible, shows that photoplayers own over a million dollars worth of automobiles, and close to a million dollars worth of homes, and additional property that cannot be listed will probably increase the land total to well over a million, exclusive of studios. Closer figuring made the automobile owners have $888,000 invested, and the houseowners total over $500,000 in holdings. Many people, however, own property and valuables which they will not mention, so it is quite difficult to place any reasonable estimate on what they all own.

Before mentioning any names, let me quote from The Tidings, a Catholic publication, a few paragraphs on what they think of the photoplayers in California. It is very true:

"The industry is producing also a new race of actors and actresses. They do not keep late hours, and as of old did the old theatrical profession turn night into day. They report for duty in the early morning, and the nature of their duties require a clear eye and a healthy body. Have we not all seen them dive from cliffs, thrown into the sea, pass through wrecks, ride outlaw horses, and men and women alike go through the most strenuous physical exercise as a part of the day's work? This sort of work requires good nerve and responsive muscular activity, and is done most often in fresh air and sunshine. This sort of life is a far cry from facing the footlights night after night in a badly ventilated theater, and the stage door Johnny and his co-partners are unknown in the movies.

"Most of the large companies pay direct and close attention to the character of the persons in their employ, and those who do not measure up to the standard are quietly dropped and told why. Contrary again to the practice forced upon the old time theatrical employee, the film actors have permanent homes and a comfortable family life. There are no one-night stands, no unpleasant traveling, and no poor hotels in film land. Should it be necessary, as happens often, to work distant from headquarters, the company furnishes transportation by auto usually; it furnishes the commissary and the cooks, and the company go into the mountains or to the seashore, or to some of our famous old California ranches, picnic fashion, and enjoy it every minute."

Now among our many permanent resident filmers are many who live in flats and yet own homes or other property. They invest their money and say nothing about it. Some owners of automobiles own homes and others do not. They are mixed. Some have ready cash to buy automobiles, but prefer to walk or ride than to be "bothered" with a car. But if one could see into the privacy of several thousand bank books held by photo people here the total would help out greatly on Rockefeller's income tax.

Homes of the photoplayers are unique in most cases, because of the artists who own them. Thomas H. Ince, for instance, owns one of the handsomest homes in Hollywood. He didn't buy the place, he just built it. The land, 490 by 320 feet, cost $20,000. The building of the bungalow totalled about the same amount, and the furnishings cost another twenty thousand. Therefore the total cost is about $60,000. Quite a sum indeed.

VIEWS OF THE CALIFORNIA HOME OF THOMAS H. INCE.

The property runs half on a side hill, and is protected by a picturesque rural fence, painted white to conform to the shade of the dwelling. A long stone walk leads to the front entrance and drive, also to the rear buildings, garage, and park. A large Roman pool, under a pergola, is a feature of the place. This is bordered by palms and other graceful greenery.

The house proper contains seven large rooms, exclusive of two bath rooms, a kitchen, breakfast room, and two sleeping porches. Within Mr. Ince's home is replete with mission and Louis XIV. furniture and antiques and relics. A den is stacked with Indian appurtenances, the value of which is $3,000. This is where the scripts are gathered together. A Japanese garden is a feature here as well as the many trees and flowers.

Since living in Santa Monica for three years Rollin S. Sturgeon, former star producer for Vitagraph, has invested about $25,000 in good property, including his own home, which is a dream cottage situated in the Palisades section and within a few blocks of the seashore. Mr. and Mrs. Sturgeon enjoy their cozy home and its refined furnishings, and two prize-winning children and an automobile.

Scenario artists also are homefolks. Mary H. O'Connor, who turns out brainy scripts for Mutual, has a fine bungalow in Los Angeles, and the interior shows that money has been spent in furnishings and decorations besides paintings, pottery and bric-a-brac. The place is worth about $7,000. It has a garage which will soon be filled with a car.

Raymond B. West, Ince producer, has a home in Hollywood on a lot 50 by 217 feet, which is filled with a wonderfully clever little house, garage, gardens and trees. West fancies trees and shrubs, having 300 roses, and hundreds of varieties of other plants and choice trees.

Kathlyn Williams is at the present time building a magnificent home in exclusive Selig Heights, near her studio. The place will be one of the best in the southland and will be a pride to filmdom.

Ford Sterling has a home in Los Angeles in which his mother lives. She uses one of her son's cars. Ford lives in a flat with his dainty wife, Teddy Sampson. He owns several machines, as he related to me one night. First he has a big limousine, a touring car, a special roadster, and a racing car, and a plain town machine, a Singer sewing machine, a Victrola, a washing machine, a projection machine, and an adding machine.

Myrtle Stedman, of Morosco players, owns a petite gray bungalow on a beautiful little street near the studio. She is wrapped up in her gardens and loves to dig and to plant new flowers. Her place is one of the coziest, homiest of homes, both within and without.

R. S. Sturgeon's Bungalow.

Rhea Mitchell, of the New York, owns a home in Los Angeles, where she lives with her mother and father. It is another dainty little place and was bought with salary earned in the pictures.

Miss Myrtle Gonzalez, of Vitagraph, has a Los Angeles bungalow which is a revelation in artistic taste and which does credit to the society girl who plays in the pictures. It is furnished richly with Indian trophies and mission furniture.

Al. Filson owns a pleasant home in Selig Heights, where he thinks out plots and prepares makeups. His money goes into the ground, and as many picture men say, "I'm increasing my account with the world."

Oscar Apfel, formerly director for Lasky and then for Morosco, and now with Fox, owns one of the finest homes in Los Angeles, and he is going to keep it, too, he says.

Herbert Standing, of Morosco, has fixed up an abode in which he takes just pride. Mrs. Standing holds many social functions in the home, and it is a place known for picturesqueness, hospitality and screen simpleness. Mr. Standing is a good gardener, and his spare moments are taken up with tree surgery and planting of flowers.

Billy Foster, cameraman from Universal, is a happy landlord at thirty, having under his property registry an apartment house. Eddie Uhlmann, another grinder of film, owns a home, as do many other statics.

At Glendale, the Kalem players mostly own their own homes, and the Hollywood players have much cash invested in property.

Much money has been spent on homes and automobiles in Santa Barbara. Many are fast letting their salaries slip from the bank into the real estate man's purse and to the coffers of the automobile maker—and they are not all small cars either!

The picture men's automobiles are of many kinds and natures. There is the ferocious racing car, genuine and fast; there is the extra man and his stripped midget that barks and snorts away at 25 miles an hour, and there are the director and his limousine and the leading players and their spacious touring cars. The petite ingenue and her little roadster and the big, husky heavy with his thundering seven passenger are all familiar here, and are recognized by the fans. Automobile salesmen are the greatest fans imaginable, and find the studios a happy hunting ground.

When you hear a man say that the photoplayers throw their money away you ought to tell them to think again, for the picture players in the west are the best-thought-of people among the leaders. About 90 per cent. of home and car owners have not been named, but space is cramped.

Western Photoplayers at Play.

A Glimpse of the Bohemian Existence Which Adds Charm to the Life of the Picture People on the Coast.

By George Blaisdell.

THE LOS ANGELES screen players enjoy opportunities for fraternizing with their fellows not within the reach of their brothers and sisters back in New York. This, of course, primarily is due to the compactness of the restaurant section of the Southern city, its smaller area devoted to night life, as compared with the various and distinct sections of New York.

While in a city maintained to an appreciable extent by tourists it is the natural thing there should be many restaurants, it seems to be a fact that practically there is but one eating place where on any one night numbers of photoplayers will be found. Some there are who on occasion visit the dining rooms of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, which on three nights of the week admits women to its restaurant. This institution is one of the big clubs of the town and is even claimed to be one of the best in the country. Those who are enabled to take advantage of its privileges, however, are comparatively few.

Many of the players who frequent the restaurant are married. They may live in the city proper or in Hollywood or other outlying sections. A majority may drive in in their own cars—this is a town of automobiles. Some couples make a practice of coming into town on one stated evening each week; others may come on several occasions weekly. To the eastern player or film man it is a cure for homesickness to look over the big room and see so many he may know, either personally or by reason of screen appearance. There is quite a bit of "visiting" from table to table. In the opportunities these little sessions provide for interchange of greetings, and gossip as well, are to be found the wings on which film news so swiftly travels from studio to studio.

It was on May thirteenth last that at the restaurant in question there was a stated gathering of photoplayers. For several days previously a card near the entrance had announced the coming event. Seven o'clock on the evening in question found two long tables in the center of the room. All other tables were filled or engaged, and a goodly number waited an opportunity to be accommodated. Many had taken the precaution to reserve places, anticipating the demand. Some of the prominent players and directors took their regular chairs.

It was nearly 8 o'clock when the long table began to fill. There was handclapping for Henry Walthall, "the little Colonel," when he took his seat. Some of those seen about the room—and no attempt was made to compile a list—were Frank Bushman, just arrived in Los Angeles, delighted with the town and mighty glad to see a man from the east; Fred Balshofer, Raymond Hitchcock, Mack Sennett, Charles Arling, Hobart Henley, three weeks out from New York, having been transferred by President Laemmle at his own request to the Western Universal from the Eastern; Travers Vale, Louise Vale, Franklin Ritchie, Lottie Pickford, and more than a hundred others. Among the film men were Fred Aiken, special representative of the General Film, accompanied by Mrs. Aiken and Mrs. Powers; W. H. Clune, the big Los Angeles exhibitor; M. J. Goetz, of the Market Street Theater, San Francisco; James Slevin, Winfield R. Sheehan, of New York, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation; Harry Leonhardt, special western representative of the Fox company; E. D. Horkheimer, secretary-treasurer of the Balboa company, and Charles M. Peck, vice president of the same concern.

There were cheers when Mr. Walthall arrayed in his "little colonel" flowing tie, arose at the head of the tables, just under the orchestra platform. "I have the very great pleasure and the honor," he said in that fine voice of his, "to announce that our fellow artist and photoplayer, Charles Chaplin, will now lead the orchestra."

Mr. Chaplin made humorous reference to the large sum one of the papers had announced as having been offered him. "You must know, of course, I have been working very hard today," he said. "I have taken a fall and hurt my elbow." The comedian removed his coat and immediately replaced it. He faced the musicians and shook at them a mane that would have done credit to the leader of the Royal Italian Band. Roars of laughter followed the gymnastic efforts of the little funmaker. Suddenly it dawned on the big party that what it had construed as comedy was as a matter of fact straight hard work. Chaplin really was leading; the musicians were with him to a fraction of a second. The body swayed, the masses of black hair flowed from side to side; the most temperamental of Latin bandmasters apparently had in his bag of tricks nothing Chaplin didn't expose. Stirring indeed was the execution of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever"; and absorbingly interesting it was, too, to watch the serious, even stern, faces of the musicians. There was a hush as Chaplin's arms rested at the cutting of the last note; then came a roar of applause testifying the admiration of the comedian's confreres and of the general public as well. An encore followed. Then the situation changed from drama to comedy, and there were many laughs.

"I am not going to introduce but to announce Truly Shattuck," said Mr. Walthall. The old-time player put her hands upon the toastmaster's face and the diners cheered. Then followed "Gone are the days," and nearly every one sang the chorus with Miss Shattuck. When there were calls for more the singer beckoned to Charles Murray, and Mr. Murray came forward. He is always at home in this house; frequently he has been known from his place at table down front to assist the orchestra leader. The two sang in fine voice that which so often they have sung together on the stage—"Alma, where do you live?"

Martha Golding gave a recitation in French patois and Roscoe Arbuckle told two stories. Harry Gribon sang; so, too, did Polly Moran. Leo White recited. Hal Williams sang "Tipperary." Tom Mix, who in the Rodeo had been jumped on by a horse and badly hurt, was called up so that the party could cheer him. Porter Strong in a dance with an Oriental touch made a lot of fun.

Charlie Murray gave a recitation in blank verse; it was not a recitation, either; it was more of a speech. He told of the woes of a comic, he praised Charlie Chaplin and took off his hat to him. He spoke of Julian Eltinge and of the dear old Burbank days. He said there were many familiar faces out in front of him and that he could go down the line. For once Mr. Murray was serious, but he carried the party with him all the time.

"Our distinguished guest, Julian Eltinge," announced Mr. Walthall, and the ensuing applause was hearty. "I am very grateful to be here," said the well-known impersonator. "I just came out on a little vacation. Now I am not going to apologize for my voice but for my throat." In the splendid singing of "The Crinoline Girl" that followed there seemed to be no occasion for apologizing for either. Mr. Eltinge got his full meed of hearty praise.

Ruth Roland was given a reception that indicated in unmistakable manner the affection her fellow players bear her. She sang sweetly and simply "Wrap me in a bundle and take me home with you." The screen boys and girls would not let her go, so she sang "California and You," and the diners helped her with the chorus. This is a good place to say that Miss Roland is a California girl—a San Franciscan. Dell Henderson, the last president of the Photoplayers' Club, responded to the call of the toastmaster by giving a recitation—and doing it well.

One of the hits of the night was that of Victor Moore. After an introductory talk Mr. Moore told the story of the Broadway newsboy—"Partners." None of the pathos of the poem was lost in its telling. The speaker did not have to raise his voice; absolute silence was provided for him, or rather the art of the actor and the heart appeal of the simple tale secured it for him. "Over three thousand miles from here there is a little girl to whom I always drink every night when I am away from home," said Mr. Moore, as he concluded the story of the "newsy." "I'd dearly like to have you join me in drinking tonight to the best of girls, the best of pals—my wife." Everybody joined Mr. Moore. It may have been due to the influence of the story and perhaps it may have been partly owing to appreciation of the fine sentiment behind the toast or even again it might have been in a measure due to the reversion of thoughts to homes and pals back East by many of the expatriates, but there were more dry glasses than there were dry eyes.

And the foregoing is just a part of the story of one night among the photoplayers of the West Coast.

On a New Basis.

San Francisco Exhibitors' League Reorganized Under Auspicious Circumstances.

AFTER having remained dormant for many months the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of San Francisco was reorganized in May and a new constitution and by-laws were adopted to meet conditions now prevailing. A feature of the new organization is the fact that many large houses that took no interest in the old League are active members of the new one and this infusion of fresh blood is expected to be highly beneficial. Changes have been made in the method of apportioning the dues and initiation fees, these being based now upon the seating capacities of the various theaters, placing the heaviest part of the burden upon the owners of large houses.

Robert Abraham.

The headquarters of the local League are in the Mechanics' Bank Building, with those of the State organization, but the meetings are usually held in the assembly hall of the Pacific Building, where there is more room. Since the reorganization a number of very important questions have come up and these have been promptly dealt with, notably the one precipitated by the local exchanges having for its object the enforcement of a rule for the prepayment of all film service. The success that was attained in the peaceful settlement of this has done much to attract attention to the good work of this organization.

The local League has a highly efficient leader in its president Robert Abraham, prominently known here through his connections with the Kahn & Greenfield Circuit. Mr. Abraham is respected by all who know him, both for his ability as an exhibitor and for his splendid character, and it is doubtful if anyone could be named who could do more at this time to perfect a strong organization of the owners and managers of moving picture houses.

One of the best evidences of this rejuvenation can be seen in the great team work the San Francisco exhibitors have been doing in behalf of the National League Convention. Efficient committees were organized and their work has been of the quiet, but persistent sort that produces the best results. No stone has been left unturned by these earnest workers in their efforts to make the stay of the visiting exhibitors in San Francisco something to be pleasurably remembered for very many years to come.

The Western Drama

An Analytical Discussion of the Past, Present and Future of the Plays in Which Pink Teas and Boiled Shirts Do Not Fit.

By Thomas H. Ince,
Director General New York Motion Picture Corporation.

ONCE upon a time an upright epigrammatist quoth rich logic when he said "The proof of the pudding is in the eating." He may not have realized then that, one day, it would be delightfully applicable to motion picture productions, but the pithy little sentence has never been copyrighted, so I use it with a clear conscience in responding to the query: "Is the Western drama passing?"

The Western drama is not passing. What is more, it never will pass. True, it has suffered a decline; but that will serve only to make the product the more popular. It commands a position as a class of amusement that cannot become extinct. Public demand will not permit it.

Tom Ince.

It is in its attribute of bigness that the Western play finds its note of appeal to the human emotions. I found this out five years ago when I learned that the first Western picture I ever made was greeted throughout the country with a wave of popularity. It was entitled "War on the Plains," and coursing through the spectacle of magnificent scenery there was a big idea—a big human theme—that struck the proper chord.

Forthwith, "the Western," as people were wont to call it, sprang into instant favor. Producing companies everywhere—those that were then in existence—set about the manufacture of cowboy and Indian films. Wild West shows were besieged with offers of employment to their members. Realism, even in those early days, was the keynote. The demand was greater than the supply. And the greater part of what supply was available was made up of mediocre plays. All too many producers were content to call their pictures "Western" just because you could see leather chaps and shooting irons on the actors. They didn't bother themselves with the construction of a story that had what is commonly known as "the punch;" they didn't comb the country for a man who could portray the Westerner as he is; in short, they imposed on the patience of the good old American public. That fact spelled decline for the Western production.

What was the result? Slowly, but certainly, the Western plays lost prestige. People didn't flock to the theaters to see them, as they once did. Their plaint was that the element of human interest was too sadly lacking in most of the offerings. Too much attention, they argued, was being paid to costumes and scenery and not enough to the story. They had read books about the West, they said, and in few instances were the characters ever transplanted to the screen. "Give us a story with your scenery and costumes," was the ultimatum, "and we'll be entertained." Most of the producing companies, consequently, curtailed their output of Western photoplays, and this situation built for the persevering producer a road that was hard to travel. It behooved him to smash the barrier of indifference and recreate the enthusiasm that for the Western play once waxed warm.

The smashing process has been going on so industriously that to-day the selfsame American public, which not so very long ago pledged itself to fastidiousness, is more eager than ever to have its emotions moved by forceful Western dramas on the screen. The enthusiasm is evident wherever good Western dramas are shown. That savors of an attempt to deal in generalities, but as a matter of fact there is a line of demarcation between the good and the bad in the Western photoplay production. And the average photoplaygoer is the best judge in the world.

It is only natural that the Western drama should endear itself to the hearts of the public. In the heart of every man there lurks a longing—be he prone to admit it or not—for the bigness of the out-of-doors. It is a mild form of "call of the wild." It tells him that there is a "God's country" on this old earth and that its natives are big men—big of heart, pure of soul and rugged of frame—and that he is missing something worth while if he doesn't acquaint himself with it. It is an ember of that primitive instinct with which our forefathers were imbued.

I am not a Westerner—in fact, my birthplace is on the Atlantic coast—and yet I distinctly remember that the words "The West" meant much to me. They represented, to my mind, a place where only big things are done; where men live with their souls bared and where they breathe without inhaling the nauseate fumes of scandal and other destroyers of human happiness that most of flesh is heir to.

That is the kind of a West I have striven to picturize on the screen. In "The Bargain" they tell me I have succeeded, and in "On the Night Stage," and in the less pretentious productions in which William S. Hart also has appeared. If I have, it is because I have made certain that each scene was immune from criticism—unfavorable criticism—by a genuine Westerner. It is, too, due to the fact that each scenario had to establish a big theme and its elements of human interest before I sanctioned its production.

Western pictures, more than those of any other class, offer countless opportunities for little touches, as it were, of human interest. Let me cite an example. In "On the Night Stage" the dominating character was Texas, the road agent. From the start he was "planted" as a big, fearless, though God-fearing man of the plains. His sole aim, after learning that his life had been saved by an athletic parson, was to "do the parson a good turn." His chance arrived in the unwelcome attentions paid to the parson's wife by Malone, a cad. He resolved to put Malone out of the way, without the use of gunplay. So he tortured him by making him walk into the mountains, away from the scene of his machinations.

At this point interest in Texas was at an intense pitch. The audience had come to know him as a cruel bully—made cruel by his burning desire to fulfill the ends of justice and to erase his obligation to his fellow man. And the audience rejoiced because he was cruel.

Now to dismiss Malone from the story would simply have been a matter of Texas bidding him depart. But to emphasize Texas' wrath and to sustain interest in it to the very end it was necessary to inject that "little touch." So, instead of allowing Texas merely to discharge his captive, I had him compel the cad to walk back fifty feet—to where Texas was astride a horse—to receive his orders. This little incident, I am given to understand, is one of the "punches" in the play.

Word constantly comes to me that Western pictures are regaining the popularity that a few years ago began to wane. I am not surprised. The announcements are bearing out my contentions. So confident am I that the Western production is a fixture in the motion picture industry that I am contemplating its output, in the future, on an even larger scale.

There are people in all parts of the world who never will get an opportunity of seeing the West except on the screen. They must have Western dramas to gratify their craving. There are books—written and being written—which from cover to cover are and will be of Western character. They eliminate the danger of repetition in theme. The West never can be made the East. Natural scenery is permanent. Man can never shirk that "call of the wild" I spoke about. The argument works out logically. And, in spite of any opinions they may hold to the contrary, the multitudes will clamor for the true depiction of mountains and plains and of struggles and triumphs fought and won by the raw-boned, whole-souled men who never saw a classroom.

The Albuquerque Company

Gilbert P. Hamilton is Its President and Dot Farley The Scintillating Star.

THE temporary studio of the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, producers of the Luna brand, is on the property of the Norbig Company, on Allesandro street, where under the direction of President Gilbert P. Hamilton two reels are being produced each week for release on the United program. One of these a comedy-drama which is written by Miss Dot Farley, is made under the immediate supervision of Mr. Hamilton; Miss Farley also plays the lead. The second subject, a comedy, is directed by Nick Cogley, a man with wide experience of the stage as well as of the screen. Mr. Hamilton is a pioneer film man. Associated with him as vice-president is Thomas B. Leddy, and as secretary and treasurer H. F. Connelly.

Gilbert P. Hamilton.

Miss Dot Farley.

The Albuquerque company has been in business two years, and in that time has turned out many pictures. From the beginning Miss Farley has been featured. One subject in which she appears and of which Mr. Hamilton thinks particularly well is "When Quality Meets," a story written around the recent Los Angeles Rodeo. Playing with Miss Farley in the subject is Winna Brown, in the estimation of Mr. Hamilton the best horsewoman of the west. She has been declared the champion woman relay rider of the world. Miss Farley more recently has been confining her attention to comedy character portrayals, in which she has had unusual success.

The stage of the Albuquerque company is 60 by 60 feet in dimension. The developing and making of the sample print is done by the Norbig company in their commercial laboratories at the same address, while the positive prints are made by the Crystal company in New York.

PAUL BOURGEOIS JOINS UNIVERSAL

Paul Bourgeois, known in the motion picture world and on the vaudeville stage as one of the most fearless of animal trainers, has joined the Universal's forces at Universal City, Cal., where he will produce wild animal pictures under Henry McRae's direction. Mr. Bourgeois has worked with his lions, tigers and other wild animals for Pathe Freres in Paris and in New Jersey, and also with the Gaumont, Solax, Blache, Eclair and Vitagraph companies.

FIELDING'S LUBIN COMPANY

While Phoenix, Arizona, is not a coast town, it is far enough west to be included in this resume by reason of the fact that one of the Lubin companies under the direction of Romaine Fielding is located in that city. Mr. Fielding's specialty is western melodramas of the most "melo" type, in which he personally does some daring work when the occasion requires. He is surrounded by a capable company and has produced a number of features dealing with western life.

Describing one of his recent pictures, it is recorded that "Fielding mounted on a spirited horse, rode up the steps and into the city hall, demanding a marriage license quick. When the frightened clerks complied, Fielding galloped down the steps with the city hall crowd in hot pursuit. Fielding allowed himself to be captured, just beyond the camera, and treated the town to buttermilk—the favorite beverage in Arizona."

It is to be regretted that we have no extended data regarding Mr. Fielding's company and work, but it is understood that he ran out of press agents some time ago and since has not been in close communication with the outside world.

Great Selig Enterprise.

Enduring Monument Erected by Famous Motion Picture Producer in Los Angeles Known as the Selig Zoo—A Remarkable Collection of Wild Animals Splendidly Housed, to be Formally Opened and Dedicated to the Public on July 19.

By George Blaisdell.

WILLIAM N. SELIG will go down in motion picture history as the pioneer manufacturer of the Pacific Coast. That fact will have interest for those everywhere who are concerned in matters kinematographic. Among the descendants of the present residents of Los Angeles, however, it is possible and probable that Mr. Selig's work in the realm of natural history will be regarded as his more enduring monument. In the creation of the great Selig Zoo out on the Mission Road, opposite picturesque Eastlake Park, the Chicago film manufacturer has done something more than gratify a hobby: he has done something more than bring together the largest collection of wild animals in the world; he has done something more than to plan for contributing to the entertainment and instruction of the present generation. He has builded for the future. Mr. Selig does not say so; but his chiefs believe it, and point to the fact that his structures are of solid concrete, that the ornate entrance, on which alone $60,000 was spent, should withstand the wear and tear of the elements for a thousand years.

No brief story can do adequate justice to the collection of seven hundred animals and birds which Colonel Selig—the Governor, his employees call him—has brought from the four corners of the earth. While it may be true that the motion picture trade is interested in the Selig Zoo only in so far as that big establishment may be related to the production of pictures, it is also true that it is interested in the doings of one of its best known men when those doings have a public side—and the Selig Zoo has a public side; it is providing facilities for first-hand study of natural history, one of the most interesting factors in the curriculum, and it is also aiding in the preservation from extinction of many of the rarer beasts and fowl.

The thirty-two-acre park comprising the Selig Zoo has been under its present management for three years. Picturegoers of a few years ago will recall "Captain Kate" and "Lost in the Jungle," those thrilling pictures in which Kathlyn Williams and Thomas Santschi were featured and which served to introduce a new brand of courage to followers of the screen. These subjects were made in Florida, at Jacksonville, and the animals used in them were the property of "Big Otto," a showman. The success of the pictures was so marked that Mr. Selig bought the beasts and had them forwarded to Los Angeles, where they served as the nucleus of the present extensive collection. The initial investment was a quarter of a million dollars. An equal amount has been expended since.

Mr. Selig has been in Los Angeles for many weeks giving his personal attention to the completion of arrangements for the official opening of the park, which will be celebrated on the arrival of the Selig Special from Chicago by way of San Francisco and following the exhibitors' convention in the latter city. All the time the film side has never for a moment been obscured. Every morning has found him in the projection room of the Edendale studio going over the work of his nine directors. In the afternoons he has been at the Zoo, his time divided between Thomas A. Persons, general manager of coast studios, and John G. Robinson, superintendent of the Zoo.

William N. Selig.
The Pioneer Motion Picture Manufacturer of the Pacific Coast.

The entrance to the Zoo, opposite Eastlake Park, is a thing of beauty. The design was executed by Romanelli, an Italian sculptor; the figures of the animals on the pedestal between the gates were modeled from beasts within the grounds. Work on the buildings was begun a year ago. An immense amount of preliminary labor was necessary; the soil was swampy, and much drainage was required to prepare the foundations for structures of concrete and steel.

Matching the entrance in striking and imposing appearance is the home of the lions and tigers. It is mission style, the great patio in well kept lawn. The home of the elephants, some distance away, is in the same style of architecture. So, too, is the large amusement pavilion. There are many buildings on the grounds, among them the costume rooms, special storage structures, monkey pavilion, animal cages, bear houses, and the many buildings devoted to the sheltering of birds large and small.

The offices, near the business entrance, which is at a distance of several hundred feet north on Selig Boulevard, as the finely asphalted portion of Mission Road passing the property is known, are in rustic style. Here on the border of a great grove of eucalyptus trees are the quarters of the officials and directors and scenario writers. Over on the eastern side of the park are the stages where five directors are working—Tom Santschi, George Nicholls, Lloyd Carlton, Marshall Neilan and Mr. Chaudet. There are runs for jungle scenes, caves for illusions, an exact duplicate of a village in Colon, and the large collection of structures known as Bloom Center, the site where are being photographed the rustic comedies produced by Marshall Neilan.

Bloom Center is a village. One may stand in front of the hotel and look down two streets, or should we say roads? There are the Weekly Bugle print shop and the grocery. The print shop is equipped with the orthodox Gordon press and old style cases filled with type. There are a drug store, with regularly labelled bottles and jars; blacksmith's shop, laundry, livery, barber's shop, brewery, and, to complete the picture, a town hall with its op'ry house and a church. Two primitive lampposts add to the atmosphere.

Near the stages is a large concrete dressing room. In the rear of the stages are the extensive carpenter shops, property rooms and quarters for the scenic artists. In the garage are numbered stalls, each employee—official, director, actor or other—owning a machine having his or her individual storage place. Along the southern side are the corrals for the animals other than those in the category of the wild sort. There are stables for the ponies and the many horses, including Sultan, the "high school" animal famous for his "scholarship." Here, too, are quartered the fourteen camels and three dromedaries and the two giraffes. Prince Chan, orang-outang, resides in an electrically heated home. Five of his species are on the way to join him. Toward the entrance are the aviaries where are quartered all manner of fowl and birds from all countries.

Superintendent Robinson showed the World man over the grounds under his supervision and pointed out some of the more notable inmates of this remarkable animal and bird world. He put his hands through the bars and stroked the sleek sides of the lions and the tigers, a mark of friendly recognition which it is said Mr. Selig shares with him. In the main house are one hundred carnivorous or meat-eating animals. There are thirty-two lions and lionesses. Of Bengal tigers there are eighteen, the largest collection of similar beasts in the world, and as authority for this statement Superintendent Robinson quotes the younger Hagenbeck. Among fourteen leopards there is one of the black variety, very rare, and certainly of untamed aspect. There are also two clouded leopards, probably the only pair in the country. There are fourteen panthers, also known as pumas and mountain lions.

Of the herbivora there are seven bears of different species and five Asiatic elephants, including a mother with a nursing baby. The pair of giraffes are now fourteen feet in height, having grown six feet in the last year. They are three years old. There are but nine other giraffes in the country. There are six elk, ten sacred cows of India, including three calves born on the grounds; one zebra, three water or Philippine buffalo, one yak—have we heard somewhere of a Doc Yak?—and four kangaroo. There are ten deer, seven llama, and a pair of Russian wild boars. The hay-eating animals total seventy-seven. In the dog kennels are fourteen German boarhounds, which in their native country are used as police dogs. There are four Eskimo dogs, two St. Bernards, three wolves and an Alaskan husky, a wolf-dog. Of squirrels there are many varieties.

On the collection of representatives of the bird family quartered in the Selig Zoo a book might be written. For instance, of cranes there are a pair each of Kaffir crowned, companion, demoselle, Manchurian and Stanley. There are three golden eagles and one of the bald variety. There are many parrots, cockatoos and macaws. Of pheasants there is probably the largest collection in the United States. There are six Impeyan, imported from the Himalayan Mountains. There are four peacock, six Amherst, seven silver, six golden, eleven English, two white, two copper, five Reeves, two Kerfield and twelve versicolor. There are seventy-eight young pheasants of different species. The young pheasants are raised by Japanese silky hens; several of these are used for this sole purpose. In the duck preserve are fifty mallards, eight mandarin, fourteen teal, eight widgeon, two spoonbills and two muscoveys. There are wild geese from Canada and Australia. Of monkeys there are fifty.

Colonel Selig is reticent as to his future plans for picturemaking, other than as those plans may be revealed in his formal announcements. There is no question, however, that he contemplates big things. There is an evidence of this in the enormous stage he will erect on the zoo grounds, for the making of V-L-S-E features of well as subjects for his regular releases. With five directors working at the Zoo, three at Edendale, and with Tom Mix at Las Vegas, N. M., where it is expected he will go, independent of the facilities at the big Chicago home plant, it is extremely plain that the Selig Polyscope Company is an organization most splendidly equipped for picturemaking.

The Selig at Edendale.

The Edendale establishment of the Selig Polyscope Company is known as the mission studio. It is situated on Alessandro street and comprises several acres of ground. The land was bought in the latter part of 1909, or rather one-seventh of the present area was secured at that time; on it was a little green building which is still carefully preserved. In the yard is a space twenty feet square covered with cement. This bit, too, is carefully protected from the ruthless hand of progress, for it represents the first stage of the studio. The property is bounded on the two sides bordering on streets by a high mission wall built of solid concrete and set four and a half feet into the ground. The inner side of the wall is covered with ivy. At the base is a solid hedge of geraniums. The Alessandro street entrance is modeled from the famous bell tower of San Gabriel, with its four bells and two vacant spaces. The entrance on the side street is patterned after that of the mission at Santa Barbara.

Interior View, Selig Edendale Studio.

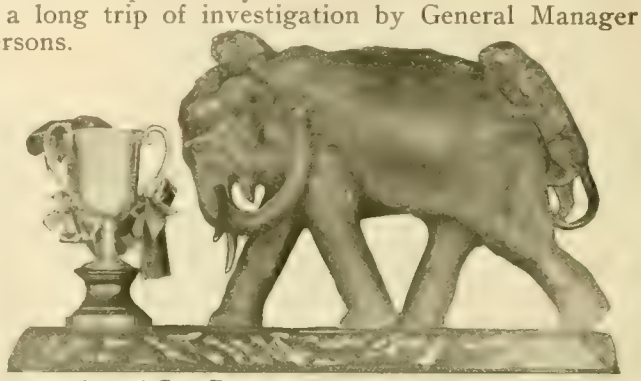
James L. McGee is manager of the studio and chief aid to Mr. Persons, general manager of Mr. Selig's coast interests. Mr. McGee is one of the two oldest employes of the Selig company—and Tom Santschi is the other. Both were members of the company that under Frank Boggs left Chicago in the early part of 1908, and they have been on the Pacific Coast ever since.

The executive offices are just inside the Alessandro street entrance and at the left of the reception room. Mr. McGee and Mr. Selig when in the city have offices to the right. In the center of the yard is the glass inclosed studio, with a stage 50 by 60. Between it and the administration building there is a large pool for water scenes. On the side street are the offices of the three directors—Colin Campbell, Jack Le Saint and Frank Beal. On the remaining side are the projection room, cutting room, garage and property room, which is 75 by 60. There is a mezzanine floor here filled with objects for use in pictures. The wardrobe adjoins. The carpenters' shop, which also contains the paint frames, is also 75 by 60 in size.

In the rear of the inclosed studio is the back stage, with an area of 60 by 60 feet. Adjoining it is a large property yard, where were seen many evidences of the magnitude of the coming production of "Mizpah." Work on this elaborate subject was to begin about July 1. In several respects it will be the most pretentious picture the Selig company has undertaken.

Viewed either from the interior of the yard or from without, the Edendale studio of the Selig company is one of the most picturesque in the country—and if there be any error in that statement it is on the side of conservatism.

There is a third Selig studio in Los Angeles, at Glendale, where Tom Mix, the man who takes long chances, has been directing western subjects. At the time of writing the probabilities were that Mr. Mix would be transferred to a studio at Los Vegas, which location has practically been decided on as the result of a long trip of investigation by General Manager Persons.



Souvenir and Cup Presented to Mr. Selig by His Staff.

Recently a "home coming" was enjoyed at the newly-opened Selig Jungle-Zoo, at Los Angeles, and more than six hundred employees, including directors, actors, together with their relatives and friends, were there to accord sincere testimonials of love and respect to the beloved president of the company. The Selig employees of the Mission Studio gave Colonel Selig a magnificent loving cup, suitably engraved as follows: "Hoping the Opening of the Gates Today Will Symbolize Future and Greater Success.—Edendale Studio."

Employees of the Jungle-Zoo gave Colonel Selig a massive bronze art work—an elephant attacked by two Bengal tigers. Photographs of the two gifts, which it is needless to say are highly prized by Colonel Selig, are shown above.

When one thinks of the Selig activities on the Coast and the great advances made during the last few years, the attractive personality of Kathlyn Williams naturally comes to mind. By winning the regard of the public wherever pictures are shown and helping to create the demand for Selig subjects, she surely has done her share towards making new and larger studios a profitable investment. A director has yet to propose a wild animal picture in which Miss Williams was afraid to appear, for she is as fearless an actress as ever posed before a camera, and any number of photoplays stand as a testimony to her versatility and her exceptional ability in dramatic roles. Her last and, no doubt, one of her most notable accomplishments, was her strongly emotional characterization of Vera Wilton in Edward E. Rose's "The Rosary."

Universal's Unique City.

A Town Built for the Production of Motion Pictures—Scenes In and About the Magic Village and Talks With the Men Who Made It.

WHEN at 11:30 in the forenoon of a rare Saturday in June inquiry at the Hill Street station of the local traction monopoly brought forth the information that the next car for Universal City would leave at 1 o'clock a counter-inquiry from a bystander elicited a suggestion that a Hollywood car would bring a traveler in touch with a jitney that would take him out to San Fernando valley in a jiffy—or something to that effect. The fare to Universal City on a round trip ticket is 50 cents and the single trip is 35 cents. By combination of trolley and bus 20 cents is saved on a single trip and the headway is reduced to five minutes, a fact which undoubtedly causes many employees of the Universal Film Company to look upon the despised jitneys as not necessarily altogether evil. It is one of those cases where necessity is served by the invention.

As we passed through the long hall of the administration building of this community of white structures at Universal City we saw the tall figure of P. A. Powers descending the stairs. "Come on, you're just in time," said the treasurer of the Universal, who but a week before had made a flying trip from New York; "have a bite with me." "P. A." was garbed in white trousers and shoes and silk shirt, sans coat and waistcoat. In the big restaurant he ignored the tables along the side of the room and above which was the emblem: "For directors and leads." He took a seat in the corner near the cigar stand. For the next half hour there was a stream of callers—officials, directors, players, cameramen, men who had something to sell him, men who wanted to take him out to dinner. There was an answer for all, and somehow at the same time the steak, apple pie and coffee were consumed. There was no question that the treasurer of the company had a grasp of details concerning the big plant.

After luncheon we made search for William Horsley, under whose supervising eye Universal City grew in less than a twelvemonth from a field of grain to its present stature. It took a half hour to locate him. "I thought you had gone back to the old country," was his salutation; which, being interpreted, means of course the east. Mr. Horsley talked of early Universal days in California, down to the breaking of ground for the present plant in May of 1914, and the beginning of actual construction on June 18 following. In a walk and drive over some of the 230 acres Mr. Horsley pointed out the hospital on Lankershim Boulevard, the highway that passes the city, the bungalow for the animal trainer, the barber's shop and manicure parlor, main restaurant, administration building, laboratory, theater, with two installations and space for a third; ice plant, purchasing department, costume building and dressing room for extras, electric studio, technical building, containing the carpenter shop and the paint shop; special property building; the main stage, 300 by 65 feet, the dressing room and property room in the rear, making the structure of a total dimension of 300 by 157.

At the rear end of the ranch there is a stage 50 by 200, fully equipped with dressing rooms, property rooms, carpenter shop and scene painting department. There is an arsenal recently completed for the storage of guns and ammunition; and there is a zoo and also an arena where animal pictures are made. Out by the river are the corrals for the horses, a blacksmith's shop and a harness shop. A cavalry barracks provides quarters for twenty men and a bunkhouse for twenty cowboys. A restaurant furnishes dining facilities for the employees of the rear ranch.

All over the big place are sets, elaborate, some temporary and some that may well be permanent, that have been erected from time to time for large productions, ranging from castle walls to city streets. These of course have much interest for the casual visitor—and there are four or five hundred of them who every day pay 25 cents admission to the grounds. But there is a side to this big establishment the casual visitor does not see—and that is the provision that has been made for water supply and for sanitation. Mr. Horsley explained that owing to the peculiar rock formation it had been deemed advisable to acquire a small piece of land across the river to insure an ample water supply for the future. It takes a lot of well capacity to supply the 150,000-gallon concrete reservoir on the side of one of the back hills and the half million-gallon concrete reservoir on the summit of the highest hill in the ranch. This gives a seventy-pound pressure.

Near the main entrance a pumphouse shelters three wells and a pump with a capacity of 300 gallons a minute. While at this point the water supply was insufficient, across the road a distance of a few hundred feet a drive of a hundred feet into the gravel brings a supply of 450 gallons every sixty seconds. A thirty-horsepower motor shoots this into the city through a six-inch main. On the back ranch there is another concrete pumphouse placed directly in the bed of the river. It rests on five concrete piers driven thirty-six feet into the sand and draws from two wells thrust 100 feet into the sand. A turbine pump, operated either by electricity or gas, has a capacity of 300 gallons a minute. This particular equipment is designed to take care of the water requirements of the back ranch and also to supply the fire system, which extends throughout the grounds.

Near the main stage there is a concrete pool 135 by 50 and 10 feet deep at the center. To supply the animals with drinking water pipes have been extended a half mile back in the hills to a big spring. There is an up-to-date sewage system. All of the miles of pipes and the plumbing connected with them are under the care of C. A. Kurfess, who lives in a bungalow on the ranch, that he may be at hand in case anything should go wrong in the night. The electrical supply, which comes into the main station over three wires in a volume of 15,000 volts, is transformed down to 220. Harry D. Brown, an electrician of skill and of an inventive turn, is in charge of the electrical equipment of the city.

The Universal is building an experimental roof over a ten-foot section of its stage. It is to be of steel frame and covered with galvanized steel, designed to roll back over the roof of the property rooms in the daytime. In the event of bad weather it may remain in position, and by the installation of lamps have the full effect of an inclosed studio. The roof is designed primarily to prevent the striking of sets with which a director may not be finished when at the end of the day atmospheric indications may be of rain—and of course the consequent great loss of time involved in reinstalling them the following morning. It is an experiment, but it looks good.

The list of directors of the Universal as of June 5 was Sidney Ayres, Al. E. Chrystie, Allen Curtis, Horace Davey, Joseph De Grasse, W. C. Dowlan, Francis Ford, Charles Giblyn, Jacques Jaccard, Burton King, Robert Leonard, Frank Lloyd, O. A. C. Lund, Murdock MacQuarrie, Henry McRae, Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, Otis Turner and William Worthington.

H. P. Caulfield is general manager of the big west coast studio. C. V. Henkel is manager of production. James Crosby is at the head of the laboratory and camera departments.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, who in June returned to the coast after a long visit here in March and April, was seen just before his departure for a short stay at the San Diego exposition. Mr. Laemmle's second trip had been in the company of the threescore winners of the beauty contests held in different parts of the country. The president was in a happy mood. "Everything here is in splendid shape," he said. "I want you to come out to Universal City and see a picture I saw to-day. It is 'Jewel,' a story from the pen of Clara Louise Burnham and produced by the Smalleys. I think it one of the greatest I have ever seen. It is in five reels and it is something different. If it doesn't get you, not once, but a half dozen times, then you are made of different clay than I am. Go see it. No, I can't say when I am going back to New York."

Home of L-KO.

Old Hollywood Plant of the Universal—Has Largest Outdoor Stage.

THE home of the L-KO Motion Picture Company contains one of the largest stages in the country. The flooring devoted to the production of pictures is over three hundred feet in length and about seventy in width. There is also another stage 50 by 100. The property, which is approximately 200 by 400 in size, is at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Gower street, Hollywood, and was the home of the Universal before the departure for the old Universal City, back of the San Fernando hills.

Front View of L-KO Studio.

Henry M. Lehrmann is at the head of the L-KO, personally directing Charles Winninger, leading comedian, and Gertrude Selby, the talented young woman from New York who has been so successful. Mr. Lehrmann, who is a believer in the value of drama in comedies, has been slightly handicapped in the carrying out of his ideas during the spring by attacks of illness. He has bravely stuck to his work, however. The chief producer is aided by David Kirkland, directing Harry Gribbin and Reggie Morris; Harry Edwards, directing Billie Ritchie and Louise Orth, and J. B. Blystone, directing Hank Mann. The L-KO forces, which began production July 14, 1914, are releasing an average of three reels weekly on the Universal program. Also working at the L-KO studio is Harry Matthews, who is making children's subjects for the Universal program.

Victor Hermann is manager of the studio and Abe Stern, a brother of Julius Stern, manager of the Universal's eastern studios, is business manager. Joe Morgan is head cameraman and Frank Crompton is head carpenter.

WILL WELCOME SELIG TOURISTS.

The Chamber of Commerce of San Jose, California, has notified the Selig Polyscope Company that a cordial reception awaits the tourists of the Selig Exposition Flyer when the trains arrive in that city the morning of July 14th. The visitors will be taken via the automobile route through the beautiful Santa Clara Valley, the home of the prune industry. There are eight thousand plum trees to be seen. The civic organizations of Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and San Diego have notified the Selig Company that special entertainments are to be accorded the guests when they arrive at the above-named cities.

New York Motion Picture Company

Some Interesting Facts About the Great Concern That Produced Ince and Sennet, and the Wonderful Dramas of the West—The Home of the Keystone Comedies Which Make the World Laugh—How It Is Done Is Told by Two Famous Directors

By George Blaisdell.

IT WAS hot in Los Angeles that Friday noon we started for Santa Monica on the way to the camp of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. The official temperature was recorded as 84, which in New York would not have been considered so "much." This mark, however, followed one of the day before of 95, which the Angelenos not only admitted, but insisted was unusual. As we stepped off the car at Santa Monica we suggested to the conductor that riding fifteen miles west to the sea brought about a greater drop in the temperature than might have been accomplished by a ride of a thousand miles to the north. The smile on the face of the young man reflected the pride of the suburbanite in his town. There followed a picturesque ride down the long hill into Santa Monica Canyon, along the ocean shore on a road carved from the gravel of the hills, in places washed by the waves to so narrow a point as to make difficult the passing of machines.

Inceville is situated in Santa Ynez Canyon, a rift in the Santa Monica hills running due east. If it be further away from the center of the city than are most of the other studios it has advantages—and one of these is the presence of breezes that temper the sun's rays. Like a majority of the Western studios, the establishment is made up of many buildings, small and large, each additional structure marking the expansion of the company's business. Along the road extend many shacks where the cowboys are quartered. The garage adjoins. A bit up the hill are the executive offices and the cutting rooms. Opposite is the restaurant. Below is a mission building, covering a plot of 10,000 square feet. Further up the hill, after passing many dressing rooms, we come to the main stage, also surrounded by dressing rooms, in dimensions 60 by 200 feet. Director Reginald Barker was at work on the day in question. His camera faced a setting eloquent of the status of present-day motion picture production. One large panel in itself must have represented an expenditure in time and material greater than that bestowed on some single reel subjects in older days. There was depth and there was magnificence. The subject was "The Conqueror." "You may see for yourself," said Mr. Barker, "that we are trying to do things right."

There is a new stage 120 by 120 and also a large stage, known as the Western, down below in the valley. Up on the hills there are two small stages. The scene docks and carpenter shops cover a plot approximately 240 by 40. The paint shop is 50 by 30. This construction department, under the direction of Stage Manager Thomas Brierly, is finely equipped and does the best of work—seemingly better than goes into the average dwelling; and all this care and attention to detail that the interiors may be just what they purport to be. When it was suggested to Mr. Brierly that perhaps when there were better lighting facilities and it would be possible to take interiors more often than at present right in occupied structures the work of his department would be lessened, he smiled. "Yes," he remarked, "it will put some of us fellows out of a job, won't it?"

There was under construction a street for a big German story. Kenneth O'Hara, publicity manager, who showed the visitor over the big plant, has his offices on the side of the hill. The wardrobe room has a great variety of Indian and military equipment, foreign uniforms as well as those of the United States. There are garments adorned in the aggregate with thousands of dollars worth of Indian bead work. In the saddlery are all kinds of equipment for the horse. A power house supplies the current for the camp's light. Off on the northern side of the canyon is a structure marked "Powder." It's the real thing, too, and not a stock "prop." It contains an assortment of gunpowder, nitro, dynamite, bombs, shrapnel, etc.

On the new stage we met Director Walter Edwards, putting on a comedy. At the camera was Otis M. Gove, veteran, one of the pioneers of his craft in the West. Truly Shattuck was one of the players. While at the camp we met Miss Bessie Barriscale, one of the New York's stars. We also saw Miss Rhea Mitchell, who formed one of the splendid corners in the triangle in "On the Night Stage," William S. Hart and Robert Edeson constituting the others. The scenario department, which is under the direction of Richard V. Spencer, assisted by J. Bruce, is temporarily situated at the Keystone plant in Los Angeles.

The property department constitutes one of the features of this big camp. There is a wide variety of valuable furniture in these, all of it protected by perfectly fitting covers. Back up in the canyon is the corral, where are kept the horses, cattle, pigs, fowl and other creatures that appear in New York productions or else help to carry on the work of the ranch. Here, too, are stored many kinds of vehicles, ranging from the stage coach to the automobile.

Inceville is a hive of industry. Thomas H. Ince has built up an organization out here in the wilds that does credit to his company and to himself.

Where Laughs Are Made

Something About the Home of the Famous Keystone Comedies.

THERE was a blank look on the face of a conductor of a street car when we asked him if his course lay anywhere near seventeen hundred Alessandro street. Naturally he would not admit it, but he did not have to acknowledge his inability to answer. "Well, do you go anywhere near the Keystone studio?" The broad grin that instantly spread over his features was more than an answer and an assurance. It was a perfect example of the power of suggestion—Keystone: Laugh.

The big mirth factory presided over by Mack Sennett is getting bigger. The establishment has reached across Alessandro street to the west side, and by the time this sees the light the extension will be in finished condition. The big new stage, 170 by 70 feet, has been in use since early in May. It is known as the feature studio; it is here that the more pretentious of the Keystone productions will be turned out.

There are two stages in the older section of the plant, on the east side of the street. These are 90 by 120 feet and 70 by 90 feet. In the latter there is a cement tank 18 by 35 feet in size and 8 feet 6 inches deep. On the day of the World man's visit masons were just completing the repairs made necessary by the use of too much dynamite in an explosion scene. The bottom had been blown out. Of dressing rooms there are many; there have to be to accommodate the big force of 102 persons, which is the number on the Keystone pay roll. Each cameraman has his individual loading room.

The executive offices are in the center of the block, adjoining the stages. On the other side of the driveway dividing the property are the developing and cutting rooms and the projection room. In the latter Studio Manager George W. Stout, who showed the older site. Cottages that stood on the grounds have been moved closed together and converted into dressing rooms. Standing near the entrance were two automobiles, seemingly serviceable, awaiting destruction in a day or two. The Keystone company has contributed its share toward solving the problem of "What shall we do with our old automobiles?"

By the side of the big stage carpenters were completing a scene dock and paint room of a size sufficient to accommodate simultaneously four movable paint frames. In the top of the scene dock there will be a skylight 5 by 50. Two additional stages are con-

World man over the big establishment, has just installed a Baird projector, with its big magazine capable of carrying from five to six thousand feet.

One of the chief points of interest in and around the studio is the breakaway shop. It is here that are produced the fragile articles which when smashed over more or less tender craniums are designed to do as little damage as possible. There are policemen's club's dishes, pitchers, flower pots, vases of many shapes, and a lot of other articles. At the northeast corner of the older property there is a bit of street that very likely is one of the best known thoroughfares in the world—and also very likely it bears no name. It has figured in numberless Keystone comedies, and to the eye of the picturegoer is as familiar as are two or three of the little Los Angeles lakes.

The newly acquired plot on the west side is 220 by 170 feet, approximately of the same dimensions as the templated, one daylight of the same size as the present one and an electrically lighted and glass inclosed one 60 by 100 feet in size. At the street end of the present stage there will be a two-story dressing room. The city authorities are putting in special hydrants that water facilities may be bettered and are planning to pave the street out front; in fact, they are showing a desire to do their share in furthering the interests of this representative of an industry which seems to be the city's greatest.

The diffusers are at a height of 18 feet. The floor of the new stage is of ballroom quality. It was filled with sets on the day of the visit. Mr. Sennett was busily engaged in directing a scene of a production in which Raymond Hitchcock is featured. The comedian was being initiated into the mysteries of the camera —he was being taught to walk backward that he might go forward. "Just a bit of trick work," explained Mr. Sennett. When Mr. Hitchcock was asked if he enjoyed his experiences before the camera he turned toward his director. "If I only knew just a part of what this man might tell me," he said, indicating Mr. Sennett. "He's all right," was the reassuring remark of the screen comedian; "only he is not yet accustomed to the click of the camera. He's doing finely." Mr. Hitchcock has seen projected some of the scenes in which he has appeared. Asked if he experienced any peculiar sensations on a first viewing of his own figure on the screen he replied that his chief thought seemed to be as to how silly he looked. "Really," he added, "I could not understand why they would pay me money to do it." Mr. Sennett smiled.

While there are a number of companies in and around Loss Angeles that average two reels of film each week and a thousand feet each six days is considered a conservative estimate as to the time requirements for careful work, the Keystone averages three weeks to the making of each two-reel subject. This unusual expense is accounted for in large degree by the requirements of comedy production, of the necessity for photographing several times the amount of film that appears in the final product.

Eight directors assist Mr. Sennett. These are F. R. Jones, W. L. Wright, Frank C. Griffin, Charles Avery and Syd Chaplin, Ford Sterling, Roscoe Arbuckle, Charles Parrott and Dell Henderson.

The Psychology of a Laugh.

As Viewed by Mack Sennett, Producer of Famous Keystone Comedies.

WHAT is the psychology of the laugh? That is the question we put to Mack Sennett, the keystone of the Keystone, the man who commands the producing forces of the largest comedy organization in the world, a man who talks little and works much. We were seated at dinner in a quiet corner of Mr. Sennett's Los Angeles club. It was a rare dinner, of the producer's selection and chosen with epicurean skill. When we put this question to Mr. Sennett he looked up and answered with the air of a man who had given much study to the subject and had opinions on it.

Mack Sennett.

"Something that rings the bell," he replied with emphasis. "Something that hits the bull's eye," he continued; "something that is genuine. If you fall down a flight of stairs, you must do so with some degree of naturalness," it was pointed out by Mr. Sennett, "even though it be uncomfortable. Action that shows anticipation is flat and unconvincing. Everything must appear impulsive. I consider initiative one of the very essential assets of a comedian—the ability of the actor to take full and instantaneous advantage of every glance and gesticulation of his associate players during the progress of a scene. Given the finest situation that may be conceived, if it be not psychologically reached and artfully cloaked with naturalness, done apparently on the impulse of the moment, the effort is valueless. An intent to make an audience laugh must be obscured, for should they suspect the comedian of the mechanical intent, they would fail to respond.

"The production of a story having once been conceived is largely a question of technique. Certain rules must be adhered to in the photographic construction. Such technique may be acquired by study."

"Then humor is an inherent gift," we suggested. Mr. Sennett's silence was construed as acquiescence.

Mack Sennett Directing a Keystone.

"You may explain to an actor how to bring into simultaneous play all the many and varied elements of a comedy climax," the producer went on, "but unless there happen to be in his system that indefinable something he will fail to concentrate on them all at the right moment. Any one may learn the technical part, but everyone cannot learn the creative part. One may have in his makeup everything but the faculty of discerning the exact moment when to 'pull' the big trick. He will lack the possession of the tempo, the speed; that you can't impart. It is psychological."

"What luck do you have," I inquired, "in obtaining scenarios from outside contributors?"

"I might better answer you by explaining that we maintain a staff of picked writers, who, on account of their close relations with our comedians, are better able to fill the requirements of their individual needs than the outside contributors, who do not seem able to comply with our wants, through lack of inside knowledge. This department is under the capable supervision of our managing editor, Hampton Del Ruth, who has adopted methods whereby all submitted matter is carefully filtered through his staff. This policy I have advocated in fairness to the outside writer who extends to us the courtesy of submitting his work for our approval. Our records show a purchase of exactly three scenarios within the last sixteen months' operation. These scenarios, as a whole, remain unproduced, but the vague idea which warranted their purchase in each particular case has been carefully defined and merged to advantage with our own scenarios which later reached production. In the making of a picture you little realize how hard it is to get a laugh. You may have to strive for hours, but when you get to the real point you just touch the situation as with a feather—make it appear to the audience as a casual incident—that is the secret. In a well constructed comedy there is running through it some little thing—apparently it is inconsequential, but when the big moment arrives it is that little thing that precipitates the laugh and brings about the climax."

Essanay Western Plant

Noted Players with the Producing Company at Niles, Cal.

THE western studio of the Essanay company at Niles, Cal., is distant from San Francisco an interesting ride of twenty-nine miles, four of which are by way of the Oakland ferry. The railroad runs near one of the two low ranges of hills that skirt San Francisco bay. The country is mostly given over to farming and fruit growing. Niles is a town of perhaps a thousand population. The studio was erected in this little place only after much wandering on the part of Gilbert M. Anderson, who has been at the head of the company's western forces from the beginning, seven or eight years ago. Four years ago the Essanay's western players made a halt at Niles as they had at other places; there was no intention of remaining a stated time. The first work was done in a barn, rented for the occasion.

The natural advantages, however, so appealed to the producer that he determined to settle in Niles, and the present big glass inclosed structure is the result. The property is situated within 200 yards of the railroad station. Six miles to the south is the bay. Just across the railroad track is the range of mountains running toward Stockton. The state highway parallels the track. In the hills there are canyons innumerable, wild, picturesque. They may plainly be seen from the studio. There are many ideal spots for runs and chases. The weather, too, is good for picture-making. Roy Clements, who directs the Snakeville and other comedies, pointed out that Niles received the benefit of the California sun without the disadvantage of the San Francisco fogs. He cited that where the big city by the Golden Gate might have three solid months of fog and Oakland just across the bay might be inflicted with ten or twelve days of this low-hanging vapor, the home of the Essanay forces was free of it.

Mr. Clements pointed out the many herd of cattle grazing on the green hills across from the studio. "You see," he said, "we can get those outfits in a few minutes' ride; over the hills there are a lot more. You can get anything necessary for western atmosphere right at hand."

The Niles studio has long been known as the home of the Broncho Billy series, in which Mr. Anderson has been featured and which he personally directs. His leading woman is Miss Margaret Clayton. Lee Willard is playing the heavy leads. Mr. Anderson is now alternating his western characterization with straight dramas of the parlor or society type.

Mr. Clements writes and produces the Snakeville series of comedies, which now have been running a year and a half. The original intention was to make but six or eight of these subjects, but their popularity with exhibitors was responsible for their continuance. In the company are Victor Potel, Harry Todd, who has been with Essanay nearly six years; Margaret Joslin, Ben Turpin and Robert MacKenzie.

Charles Chaplin came to the western studio of the company early in the year. In the middle of April he transferred the company under his immediate direction to Los Angeles. Mr. Chaplin's right hand man is J. J. Robbins, under whose supervision the Niles plant was constructed and who also has done considerable producing.

The studio, which is one of the largest glass-inclosed structures on the Pacific coast, stands on a plot of five acres. The building is in the form of a T, the front facing the railroad being 200 feet in length. At the left hand corner are the executive offices, reception room and the bookkeeper and cashier's department. Upstairs are the scenario rooms and the cameramen's room. So, too, on this as well as on the main floor are dressing rooms. The wardrobe department, which is well equipped, and the projection room are in the west of the stage. The stage is 125 by 60, and practically half the length is equipped with lamps, for evening work and for lighting effects. On the sides are the scene docks and dark room. In one of the property rooms, as one of the players pointed out, is a mass of stuff which might not sell for 30 cents, but which quite a number of thousand dollars would not duplicate—and all mighty useful at times. To the right of the stage are the cutting and dark rooms.

Passing out of the main building one sees the big stables, where are kept eighteen horses; the old stage coach that has been in a thousand picture runs and is still in excellent condition, and the garage and blacksmith shop. At the opposite side of the property are ten cottages occupied by the principal players and their families.

No story of the Niles plant of the Essanay company would be complete without reference to the Essanay Indians, the championship baseball team of the studio. There is a well-equipped park just to the east of the property whereon it is the usual thing for the Indians to vanquish all opponents. The club is a pet of Mr. Anderson. In it he takes great pride, and it also provides a vent for his enthusiasm for the national game.

The Essanay Chaplin Comedies

Studio at Los Angeles Where They Are Made and Roster of Company.

THE famous Essanay comedies of Charles Chaplin are produced in Fairview avenue, just outside the business center of Los Angeles. The studio is that known as the old Majestic studio, occupied during the spring and early summer by the Rolfe forces, which have returned to New York. The property is bounded on three sides by a deep embankment. Probably at no studio in the country is there maintained the same degree of secrecy as to the goings on inside. This situation has been forced on General Producing Manager Jesse J. Robbins by the great amount of curiosity to see Chaplin at work. The local force is an offshoot of the larger establishment 500 miles to the north, at Niles. Manager G. M. Anderson usually drops in at least once a fortnight, making the trip from the San Francisco suburb for the purpose.

Manager Robbins and his company left Niles on April 8 last with an entire studio and laboratory staff. In the first few weeks pictures were made at the plant at 147 North Hill street, but pressure for space forced removal to the present site in the middle of May. Two companies are now at work, both producing comedies. Mr. Chaplin, assisted by Manager Robbins, is directing his own company, and Hal Roach is guiding the work of the second. Supporting Mr. Chaplin are Bill Armstrong, an English player; Leo White and Edna Purviance, leads; Marta Golden, character, and Paddy McGuire, Ernest Van Pelt, Charles Inslee, one of the pioneer West Coast players; Carl Stockdale and Bud Jamieson. Under Mr. Roach are Harry Pollard, Jack Cherry, Margie Rieger and Tom Crizer.

M. A. Breslauer is publicity man and also secretary to Mr. Chaplin—and in the latter capacity, especially, he has more than a plenty of work. Mr. Breslauer, who has been with the Western Essanay for two years, showed the WORLD man the accumulated mail that had been received by the star comedian in the previous three weeks. There seemed to be hundreds of letters. William Gorham is cashier of the studio.

The visitor watched Mr. Chaplin putting on a couple of scenes. The famous walk was in evidence—when the camera was turning and perhaps for a few steps before. He is amusing in his work as he appears to be on the screen.

Lasky at Los Angeles

Where Classic Photoplays of This Popular Picture Company Are Made.

THE studio of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company is situated at Vine and Selma Streets, Hollywood. Diagonally opposite on Vine street is one of the most beautiful parks in the city. It's a private one, to be sure, as most of the parks in this city seem to be, but it furnishes a charming setting for a picturemaking establishment and likewise should provide inspiration for those who work with their heads as well as their hands.

The studio of the Lasky company was opened a year ago last Christmas. There was then a stage 40 by 40 feet in capacity, surrounded by a garage, a stable and a lemon orchard. Today there is a stage 185 by 60, of which an area 60 by 60 is under glass. The lot occupies practically a block in extent, and it is filled. Cecil B. De Mille has been the head of the studio from the beginning. Today he is aided in his producing staff by George Melford, James Neill and Frank Ricker. Wilfred Buckland, formerly technical director for Belasco, is art director. William C. De Mille is the chief of the scenario department. He is assisted by Miss Margaret Turnbull, who wrote "The Fighting Hope" for Belasco, and by Hector Turnbull, her brother, formerly on the New York Tribune.

One of the outstanding factors in the Lasky studio, and quite natural in Lasky productions, is the staging. Here are extensive carpenter shops, and in them many men. The writer saw one setting that is at least unusual. It was a five-room floor, consisting of kitchen, butler's pantry, dining room, living room and hall, besides a stairway and entrances to two rooms up one flight. The woodwork was all of hand-mitered construction. The whole setting, which had been used in the making of "Chimmie Fadden," the E. W. Townsend story, was finished in details, in the little things. It filled the glass inclosed stage, and some scheming was necessary to get it all in the space of 60 by 60 feet. In its making eight men were employed seven or eight days.

Kenneth McGaffey, who showed the World man over the big lot, asked his visitor if he cared to experience a sensation of real homesickness. We took a chance. There was a belief that Mr. McGaffney might show us something reminiscent of New York. He did. It was a representation of the corner of Forsyth and Houston Streets, a setting for "Chimmie Fadden." Of course, there was friend ginmill on the corner, and surely it did look the real thing. The interior of the saloon was fitted up as per regulation. The exterior was of three stories, with a two-story structure adjoining. The accompanying illustration shows with what fidelity the stage carpenter worked, and better than we can describe. Most striking of all to the visitor was the orthodox block pavement. It was of stone. A typical bit of New York it was—the New York of song and story, of romance, and sometimes of tragedy.

Still standing near by was the Arab street which figured in "The Arab," Edgar Selwyn's play. Also there was the castle used in "The Puppet Crown," W. C. De Mille's film version of Harold MacGrath's story. The players' dressing rooms are on each side of Lasky Lane, not a short thoroughfare by any means. There are many property rooms and scene docks. At the extreme rear of the lot quarters are being constructed for the scenario department. Near the stage carpenters were putting the finishing touches on a special dressing room for Geraldine Farrar. Special it really is. There is a bathrooms, and there is a piano, too, and sufficient room for the accommodation of two maids and a secretary. Something was said also about a private runway to the stage! Overhead are being prepared permanent quarters for Mr. Buckland. It's a big shop the Lasky forces have here, and a good one.

Cecil B. DeMille at Work.

Registers His Impressions of the Motion Picture Art With the World Man.

THE accompanying photograph shows Cecil B. De Mille as you find him at the big studio of the Lasky Company in Hollywood. Flannel shirt, khaki trousers and puttees constitute the chief factors of a working garb that may seem unconventional, but that does look mighty comfortable, yes, and really businesslike, too. Mr. De Mille has his workroom located near the entrance to the studio. We found the head of the Lasky producing forces busy—and he appears to be a man who is contented only when piled up with work. The sound of loud hammering by carpenters just outside disturbed him not in the least apparently. It was only when it became difficult to carry on a conversation that he suggested that we cross the yard where there would be quiet. Miss Jeanie MacPherson readily consented to grant us the use of her quarters, and she retired, taking with her the novel in the story of which she was soon to begin work. It was suggested to Mr. De Mille that he must have witnessed round about him interesting changes since he first came to Los Angeles.

Cecil B. DeMille.

"Yes, it has been fascinating watching this place grow under our hands like a garden," he said. "It was a garage and a stable eighteen months ago. No, I haven't been back East since the studio was opened. I haven't been downtown but four times except on business. You see, I write my own scenarios, and that keeps me going much of the night. I also cut my own pictures, of course. I cannot understand a director not cutting his own pictures. To me that is inconceivable. Why, I do 20 percent of my work in the cutting room. It means so much to be able to choose just where to place your climax and just where to cut it off—in other words, just where to ring down the curtain, where to change the scene. Sometimes in the cutting room, by taking advantage of the chances you see, you are enabled to build on your picture as to make it entirely different from the way it was when taken—and to vastly improve it.

"What I like about pictures, when comparing them with stage productions, is their bigness, their scope. For instance, where formerly in writing for the stage I would be compelled effectively to describe a thing, now I can show the thing itself. This is what is so fascinating; it gives you something to get your teeth into, you don't have to use words—you can put it before the eye. In 'The Warrens of Virginia' you remember the destruction of the supply train and what it meant to the story being able to show the train going to its doom. In the play you would hear the distant boom of the guns; in the picture through the cutback you are following the love scene and all the time the men are watching the clock, all the time you are getting the tremendous, enormous drama of the men mining the road—a situation you could not touch on the legitimate stage. That is why I like it—that is why my brother William, the author of the play, is here; and he likes the picture better than the play—you can link the drama so perfectly. Which reminds me that following the showing in New York of 'The Rose of the Rancho' Mr. Belasco wired me that he liked it better than the play."

Mr. De Mille is one of those who can think, and think fast, on his feet. During his talk he had been walking about the little dressing room and talking as he walked. We accompanied him back to his own den, picked up our coat, said good-bye and departed. The watch indicated that the interview and the unrecorded conversation had lasted less than twenty-five minutes. That statement may be in a measure revelatory of the speed with which this producer works.

Quality Pictures Corporation

New Metro Ally With Fred Balshofer at the Helm.

THE studios of the Quality Pictures Corporation are at Sunset Boulevard and Gower street, in Hollywood, known as the old Nestor plant. Fred J. Balshofer, the president of the company, is hard at work demolishing the old buildings and erecting new ones. He is also preparing for the opening of business by the F. B. Film Laboratories, a concern of which he is president as well, and which will do general commercial work.

Fred J. Balshofer.

Mr. Balshofer has had wide experience as a producer and manufacturer, having come to Los Angeles nearly a half dozen years ago at the head of the original Bison company. He plans to install up-to-date developing and printing and tinting and toning apparatus, and to make it all dust-proof and on a par with the best establishments in the East. The negative and positive departments will be separated. The negative drying room will be of cement flooring and the walls given a light coating of cement, so that the room may be flooded every morning and absolute cleanliness maintained. The property, which is 210 by 160, was bought by Mr. Balshofer, January 1, last.

The Quality Pictures Corporation, producing subjects in which Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow are featured, was organized March 1 of this year. The interiors of the initial picture, "The Second in Command," were photographed on the stage of the old Universal property across the street from the Quality's present site. In its new home the Quality will have a stage that has been enlarged to 200 feet in length, with a width of 100 feet in one part and 75 in another. The old dressing rooms will be razed and a double-decked structure erected in their place. Charles Abrams, a New York film man, favorably known throughout the country, is business manager of the Quality, and is giving his entire energy and time to its affairs.

Supporting Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow are William Clifford, who was with Mr. Balshofer in the old Bison organization and who for several years has been with the western Universal forces; Helen Dunbar, whose splendid work for years with the Essanay company has endeared her to picture followers, will be seen in characters; Lester Cuneo, a well known player; Evelyn Greely and Marcie Moore, ingenues, and Paul Byron. It is the intention of the company to put on big Broadway productions and screen versions of well known books. Following "The Second in Command" will be "The Silent Voice."

George Breck Reminiscent

Pioneer Motion Picture Supply Man Saw the Beginning of the Business on the Coast.

ONE of the pioneers in the motion picture business of San Francisco is George Breck, the supply man. It is Mr. Breck's recollection that it was in 1893 he set up in the Orpheum theater in San Francisco the second motion picture machine ever assembled in a theater in the country. Mr. Breck has been in the business ever since. An Edison Vitascope had been shown in one of the big New York theaters, and it was the second one which was brought to California by a man named Paine, who paid $2,500 for the California state rights. The machine weighed 700 pounds and no one could assemble it. Mr. Breck, who represented J. B. Colt & Co., was appealed to and did the job. Mr. Paine, who at the time had no knowledge of motion pictures, got $600 a week for his machine.

George Breck.

"The only film that could be obtained then was in fifty-foot lengths," said Mr. Breck. "These cost Mr. Paine $25 each. I think the very first picture thrown on the screen was 'The Ocean Wave,' and that the second was 'The May Irwin Kiss.' My connection with the picture business really began through my acquaintance with Charles L. Ackerman, a capitalist, and one of the most prominent attorneys and business men on the coast. When he started the Chutes I installed electrical appliances and got interested in the picture business. Ackerman employed a mechanic named Wright, who spent about eight or nine thousand dollars building a machine called the Animatoscope, which was simply a poor copy of the Vitascope. After a year or two it was put on the market and exhibited at the Chutes and on Market street and other places and made a great deal of money. The owners of the patents did not seem to be able to stop it. It was through Mr. Ackerman's connection with the Animatoscope that he became interested in theatrical matters, becoming vice-president of the Orpheum and later acquiring the Grand Opera House."

Mr. Breck told a story of one motion picture and of the furore it created. "It was at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war," said Mr. Breck, "that Mr. Wright completed a camera. The First California Volunteers was the first regiment to leave for Manila. Mr. Wright took a picture of the departure. It was probably the first motion picture ever taken in the West. As the troopship swung out from the wharf and gradually gathered headway it was simply swarming with soldiers. Everyone was waving handkerchiefs. On shore thousands were watching. The whole scene made a wonderfully interesting picture. It is worth noting that the camera work was very successful.

"Immediately after that the government established military camps for training troops at the Presidio. There were from twenty to forty thousand men in these. Mr. Ackerman issued orders that any soldier at night could enter the Chutes free. The men came by thousands. This picture of the departing troopship was shown for a year and a half consecutively. It never failed to bring down the most tremendous storm of enthusiasm—probably far greater than that created by any picture ever shown. You know everyone had the war fever.

"Before this picture was thrown on the screen we used to run a subject made in Cuba showing the funeral ceremonies over the bodies of the men who were lost in the Maine disaster. The orchestra always played Chopin's Funeral March. You may understand why the soldiers would be stirred when we followed this by the picture just previously described.

"'Pop' Furst was the first man to start a nickelodeon on Market street. He could only afford, however, to buy one or two pictures a month, which made the show so monotonous it was not successful. I asked him why he didn't send the films across the bay (and I think this demonstrated I had a glimmer of intelligence, a feeling as to the business thing to do). He said you wouldn't catch him letting any one have his films; he'd keep them three or four years and run them over again.

"After that I built a machine called the Picturescope. I sold a great many of them. I was threatened with litigation on infringements, but ultimately was given the Edison agency and discontinued the manufacture of the machine. For a machine for its day it was fair. I think it was 1903 or 1904 I took the agency for the Edison.

"The first exchange was started by Tony Lubelsky and a man named Hoffman. Leon Bories, present manager of the San Francisco office of the General Film Company, was with them. Roth & Springer bought out this firm and were known as the Novelty Moving Picture Company, one of the strongest exchanges right down to the day the General Film took it over. Mr. Bories has been with the General ever since.

"Earl Miles was a pioneer among the exchange men and he also took pictures, too. He was one of the first outside of Wright to do camera work. Then Turner & Dahnken came in. They had an exchange, and it, too, was taken over by the General."

It was about a year ago Mr. Breck went very strongly into carrying complete equipment for the motion picture theater. Nearly all of Mr. Breck's employes have been with him a long time. Frank Hammer, his foreman, has been with him nine years.

Morosco-Bosworth.

A Peep at the Studio Where Big Feature Subjects are Produced.

ONE of the well-equipped and up-to-date studios in this community of studios is that of the Morosco-Bosworth company, the plant of which is at Occidental Boulevard and Council Street, Los Angeles. It will be two years this coming August that the company, then known as Bosworth, Inc., began business with the production of "The Sea Wolf." It was an auspicious beginning. Today it is releasing at the rate of twenty subjects a year, the scripts for which are founded on both plays and books. Back of the company from the beginning have been the means of Frank J. Garbutt, of Los Angeles. More recently Mr. Garbutt has been joined by Oliver Morosco, a theatrical man, whose successes are no longer confined within the boundaries of this his adopted city. Mr. Morosco brings to the company not only his dramatic skill, but also his resources, and not the least of the latter is the large number of players connected with his local houses. Mr. Garbutt holds no official connection with the company; his young daughter, Miss Melodie Garbutt, is president of the concern, and it is said by her associates that in spite of her youth she possesses a business judgment fully equal to the demands of the position.

The buildings in which the Morosco-Bosworth company conducts its business were erected for the purpose, and they were designed with knowledge of their requirements. The studio itself is a case in point. The glass roof is open all around at the top, furnishing ventilation and avoiding a goodly measure of the intensified heat that marks this particular style of picture taking plant. This is an innovation that would not be possible in the east. The roof has a slant; where there is an open space of six feet at one end it is separated from the uprights, but three feet at the other. Each side has an open space of three feet. The south and west sides of the studio have no walls. The glass roof covers about two-thirds of the length of the stage, which totals 150 feet. The width is 60 feet. . The main building, which is of steel and reinforced concrete, is of two stories. The section devoted to administrative purposes is at the corner. On the lower floor is the accounting department. Mr. Garbutt has his office on the second floor, as do also Charles Eyton, general manager; Mrs. Julia Crawford Ivers, scenario editor, and Eddie Atkinson, oldtime picture man, whose duties are multifarious and reach all over. Back of the office and extending along the side street is the laboratory where are turned out 20,000 feet of finished film every day of eight hours. The Morosco-Bosworth does its own printing. Bell & Howell apparatus is used throughout. The laboratory bears evidence of skill in designing and efficiency in management. A neat little theater is equipped with a Simplex.

The property room fronts on the sidewalk. A large door enables a truck to back across the sidewalk so that articles may be rolled right in. A mezzanine floor provides additional space. Here were noted many garments of Alaska seal that figured in the making of "An Odyssey of the North." The dressing rooms are doubled decked and situated on the east side of the stage. Two scene docks and a large storeroom for the carpenters complete the equipment on the east side of the street.

Across the way the large carpenters' room indicates the attention paid by the Morosco-Bosworth to its sets. The inclosed quarters are 75 by 40. On the subsidiary stage, which is 60 by 120, were several sets for use in "Peer Gynt," in which Cyril Maude was working under the direction of Oscar C. Apfel. Lights are installed here in order that scenes may be taken at night if necessary.

Biograph Western Studios

Where the "A B" Aggregation of Picture Players Spend Part of Each Year.

THE Biograph Western studios cover a plot of two and a quarter acres at the corner of Girard and Georgia streets, Los Angeles. It is one of the most centrally situated of the picture-making plants, being well within ten minutes' ride by street car of the business center of the city. This location has many advantages, one of these being the accessibility of extra players. The Biograph Company was one of the first to recognize the advantages of Southern California for picture-making, the present season being the sixth that it has transported its players across the continent to take advantage of the long days of sunlight and at the same time avoiding the handicaps imposed upon producers by a New York winter. For six consecutive winters the Biograph players have celebrated New Year's Eve and Day on the train en route to California. The period for the return is also about an even six months later, the company being scheduled to arrive in New York City this year on July 5.

TWO VIEWS OF BIOGRAPH'S BIG STAGE

It will be recalled that the journey to the coast last January was made in a special train of twelve cars and that the party comprised 127 persons. The same equipment will be employed for the return. The departure from Los Angeles will be on June 28, by way of San Francisco, where a stop of two days will be made, to enable the players to visit the exposition.

One of the principal reasons behind the assumption of the considerable expense involved in the charges for transportation, the loss of two weeks' time and the cost of maintaining two establishments is the securing of variety in exteriors—the blending of the semi-tropical backgrounds of Southern California with its picturesque mountains and deserts and groves and gardens with the views of the metropolis and the rugged scenery of the Atlantic Coast.

There are three stages on the Biograph's Western plant—55 by 55 feet, 55 by 90 feet and 75 by 65 feet. On these seven sets may be simultaneously operated with comfort. No artificial lighting is used. "Mr. Electric Lamp cannot yet compete with the fellow who runs the sun," dryly remarked one of the officers of the company. "We can begin work here as early as 8:30 if we wish and can continue until late in the afternoon, affording us plenty of daylight. We get any light effects we desire."

While the company brought with it from the East four carloads of wardrobes and properties, no attempt is made to transport back and forth the major portion of these essentials. Each studio retains the bulk of its equipment. All of the scenery, to which the company gives a great deal of attention, remains the year around.

At each side of the main gate are the executive offices. On the right General Manager R. H. Hammer has well lighted quarters. In the same building with him are the correspondence and script departments. Chief Producer Lee Dougherty has his offices on the left of the entrance. There are two projection rooms. The laboratories provide for the making of a sample print of each subject, all the remaining manufacturing being done at the big and complete Bronx establishment at the other side of the continent.

Seven directors are now working at the Biograph plant. These are Travers Vale, J. Farrell McDonald, Edward Morrissey, Wray Physioc, George Morgan, George Reehms and Walter Coyle. The company is releasing five subjects a week, of which one is a re-issue, two are singles, one is a double and on alternate weeks a three-part picture. The first release of the latter will be "Under Two Flags," elaborately produced by Travers Vale with a large cast and to be issued this month.

Biograph Directors

ONE of the pioneers in the motion picture art is L. E. Dougherty, managing director of the Biograph studios. Mr. Dougherty became interested in motion pictures in 1896, when, as a makeshift to offset a poor season at the old Boston Museum, he installed a projection machine known as the Eideloscope, and, after watching its operation, was convinced that a new art had been born. Ever since that time he has taken a leading part in the development of the industry. As scenario writer and editor he was largely responsible for the development of motion picture stagecraft and the art of film cutting. An actor of the old school, thoroughly grounded in stage technique, he has encouraged and inspired many of the novices who today are established screen stars. Many a successful director pays tribute to the kindly aid of "Lee" Dougherty, whose wide experience and sympathetic interest are ever at the command of others. He has seen the Biograph program grow from a single weekly release to its present scope, including the five Biographs each week and a three-reel Biograph every other week. He is a firm believer in the mixed program of one and two-reel subjects, with an occasional three or four-reel release as a program headliner.

Travers Vale, director of the three-reel Biograph, is one of the best known stage managers in the country. For many years, prior to entering the motion picture field, he managed his own stock companies in several of the larger cities. Besides this long experience in stagecraft, he possesses a rare knowledge of the camera and its possibilities, having been one of the first photographers to realize that there were wide fields outside the studio. He made a remarkable record by his work in the Boer War, which he "covered" under the auspices of the British Government. His knowledge and experience are enhanced by unusual qualities of tact and patience, invaluable in stage work.

When Mr. Vale came to Biograph, he brought with him George Morgan, who had been his leading man for several seasons. George Morgan soon showed that he possessed rare qualifications as a dramatic actor for the screen, and won wide popularity in Biograph productions. Many expressions of regret were voiced when it was announced that Mr. Morgan had been promoted to directorship in the Biograph organization, for the screen lost thereby one of its most gifted players.

Another graduate of the Biograph players is Walter Coyle, who recently made his first picture as a Biograph director. Mr. Coyle was a successful character actor before entering the motion picture field, combining extraordinary dramatic power with unusual ability as a comedian. He has had much experience as a stage manager, also, and is reckoned a valuable addition to the Biograph producing forces.

J. Farrell Macdonald, director of "Lorna Doone" and other noted two-reel Biographs, was a member of the old Imp Company, most of whose members have achieved distinction. He has had several years' experience as a director of feature productions, and joined the Biograph organization last spring.

Although Wray Physioc is one of the youngest men entrusted with the responsibility of directing, he is one of the best known, partly because he comes of a family long associated with affairs theatrical, but chiefly for his enthusiasm and undoubted artistic gifts. Beginning as a scene painter, he early ventured into the production of pictures, forming his own company. His fondness for the picturesque and the dramatic serves him in good stead in the production of the Roy Norton stories recently acquired by Biograph.

Edward Morrissey was educated as an artist, but, perceiving a broader field in motion pictures, entered the Biograph studios as a novice. He was quickly recognized as a "comer," and was promoted to assist Jim Kirkwood, whom he later succeeded as director of Mutual productions. Returning to Biograph, he began to produce comedy dramas, a field in which he has achieved remarkable success.

George E. Reehms is a graduate of the Lubin studios, where he began as a player and rose, via assistant directorship, to recognition as an unusually successful producer of comedies. His inclination was rather in the direction of drama, however, and in this line of work he has found full expression for his talents with the Biograph organization.

With this force of directors of varied attainments and broad experience, there is no difficulty in finding a man in every way qualified to produce whatever type of picture may be desired, whether the subject be classic or modern, drama, comedy, or farce.

The Balboa Enterprise

What Has Been Accomplished by the Horkheimers at Long Beach.

EFFICIENCY is the one thing that more than another impresses a visitor to the studio of the Balboa Company at Long Beach, Cal. If we remember rightly, this big town by the Pacific—it has a population of forty thousand—is something over a score of miles out of Los Angeles. Perhaps this distance may be responsible for the complete equipment to be found at the Balboa plant—the necessity for independence of the city as regards properties, for one thing. Independence there is, however, and that is one of several noteworthy things observed by the writer in his visit to the studio. The company has been in business going on two years. It has grown rapidly from small beginnings. From a little stage on one side of Sixth street the establishment has extended across the way, where most of the interiors are now photographed. Here there is a stage of 8,000 square feet; five directors simultaneously may work in comfort.

The company is under the management of its founders —H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager, and E. D. Horkheimer, secretary-treasurer. Charles M. Peck is vice-president and assistant general manager and Norman Manning is business or studio manager. Both H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer devote much of their time to the active production of features.

Mr. Manning, whose service with the company dates from its inception, showed the writer through the carpenter and paint shops and through the splendidly equipped property rooms. Then there was the wardrobe —with a matter of something like 250 model gowns as an incident.

On the stage the diffusers are all of new canvas. Along the sides a shelf or short roof protects the cloth from the elements. These diffusers, by the way, are all numbered, as are the cleats where the controlling ropes are fastened. A director is enabled to give explicit direction as to the shading of any portion of his stage and get quick and accurate results. One of Mr. Manning's innovations that speaks for itself is a mirror, perhaps six feet in height by five in width, which is installed at the side of the stage. If a leading woman be in distress as to whether her hat is on straight there is no necessity for an excursion to a dressing room to verify her fears. The big weather-proofed glass is always convenient. A one and a half-inch fire main extends all over the plant, with fire plugs stationed at five different points. All the trucks that are rolled across the stage are on rubber wheels—with an accompanying absence of jar to the feelings of a director, temperamental or otherwise. A fully equipped machine shop takes care of all the plant's work.

Mr. Peck showed the visitor over the laboratory, situated on the site of the original plant. Here, too, is the great reference library of the scenario department, the largest we have seen in any picture establishment. Will M. Ritchey is at the head of the script division. The Balboa aims to so prepare its scripts that a director may accept it as authoritative and, so far as possible, without delay, proceed to record it on the film. The fittings of the dressing rooms indicate the care given by the company for the comfort of its employes.

In a chat with E. D. Horkheimer he said the Balboa will build another stage on the large plot across the street, one that will at least double the present picture-making space. Here also will be erected a large garage and a building providing for ample storage. In the acquisition of this third plot the company protects the light in its present studio. This latter, by the way, will be utilized for five-reel subjects after the completion of the projected addition. These will be original stories, designed for practical picture entertainment. The company has ceased the manufacture of one and two-reel subjects, confining its attention to threes and fives.

Four companies are now at work. These are under the direction of Harry Harvey, who is directing Ruth Roland and Henry King in the "Why Pays?" series; Bertram Bracken, producing the subjects in which Jackie Saunders is featured and which have proved popular; Sherwood McDonald and Jack Byrne. Charles Dudley also is directing occasionally. Upon the completion of the new studio two additional companies will be put at work.

Lubin West Coast Plant

Captain Wilbert Melville's "Liberty Bell" Layout at Los Angeles.

THE Lubin West Coast studio is pleasantly situated at 4550 Pasadena avenue, not a long ride from the business center of Los Angeles. Fronting on the highway is the residence of Captain Wilbert Melville, the managing director of the studio. The cottage sets behind two great palms; about the grounds there is a profusion of flowers. A driveway leads alongside back to the studio, which is at the rear of the 400-foot-deep plot. The executive offices are on the border line between the residential and business divisions of the property.

Capt. Wilbert Melville.

"It won't profit you much taking account of what you see here just now," said Captain Melville, when he observed the WORLD man with notebook in hand. "In a couple of weeks everything you see here is coming down. We are going to erect an up-to-date studio and a laboratory, plans for which are already drawn. There will be a steel and concrete studio building 60 by 120 feet in dimensions, which will rest on the site of the present structure. Of this space 60 by 60 will be under glass, which part of the structure will be equipped with lamps for use in case of necessity. On the second floor will be dressing rooms and the carpenter shop.

"Near this building will be a laboratory 60 by 80, which will be equipped for the making of the first print. You know all our positive printing is done at the home plant in Philadelphia. The new work here will be done by Ridley F. Taylor, who did the concrete work at Universal City and who is now building the studio at David Horsley's park. In the designing of the new structures we think we have accounted for the expansion of the next two years."

Captain Melville took his visitor through the carpenter shop and molding room. In the latter department there were in evidence several specimens of the skill of its chief. A set of six pieces of Gothic furniture, a throne chair, a clock and several articles of papier mache were some of these. The wardrobe and property rooms were filled to overflowing. There was a well stocked arsenal. Captain Melville said that while the present area devoted to the studio comprised a plot 200 by 250 feet an adjoining piece of property 150 by 200 had been secured and negotiations were under way for still more.

Directing Lubin productions in Los Angeles there are, besides Captain Melville, also Leon D. Kent and C. C. Miller. The subjects are mostly of a melodramatic and society description. In length they run one, two, three and six reels. The studio has its own scenario department.

Scene from "Red Virgin"; A Lubin Western Set.

Captain Melville has been in Los Angeles in charge of a Lubin force for two years. The company had left Philadelphia some time before that, but after taking pictures in various parts of the West and Southwest settled on the property adjoining his present location, about a year and a half ago moving to the present site.

The captain showed a picture of his new yacht, the Vergana, now on the way from New York to the Pacific by way of the Panama Canal. The Vergana, which at one time belonged to the late Governor Flower of New York State, is a steamer 185 feet long. It is an all-steel craft, with triple-expansion engines. It was purchased by the captain during his recent trip East. The title of captain signifies, by the way, that Captain Melville has an unlimited steamship license as master, which permits him to take any sized ship into any harbor in the world.

Vitagraph Western Players

Company Has Been on Coast Since 1911—Located at Santa Monica.

ONE of the most homelike little studios on the western coast is that of the Vitagraph, where two companies are busy turning out two and three-reel features. There are just enough workers here to make the place like a school room or a home; everyone knows everyone and no one is a stranger. Most of the members of the company own or rent bungalows, and live in style by the seashore. When not busy the players go swimming and enjoy the summer resort nearby.

Western Vitagraph Studio Front.

W. S. Smith is at the head of the plant, with Ulysses Davis and Dave Smith as directors. Miss Dorris Schroeder has charge of the scenario and executive offices, and Fred Wade has charge of the laboratory.

In the past few months Mr. Smith has improved the studio considerably, having added another lot to the ground space, which measures now about 200 by 150 feet. More improvements are in sight, and before many months pass the whole place will probably be changed.

Director Davis is making three-reel features, his present production being "The Golden Grain," in which is graphically shown a railroad wreck. Mr. Davis has made some of the best productions that were released by the Vitagraph in the two and three-reel division from the western plant.

Vitagraph Stage at Santa Monica.

Mr. Smith is busy on "The Barriers of Prejudice," by Dorris Schroeder, which is a worthy drama of the present time and real people. He is making all the two-reelers here, and has been successful. He is assisted by Philo Goodfriend, while Donald Clark aids Mr. Davis.

Besides overlooking the developing end of the studio, Mr. Wade is head cameraman, being with the Davis company, while Stephen Smith grinds for the other company. Clarence Henneckie is assistant cameraman. All developing is done here, and one positive made for projection, to be shipped with the negative.

The studio, which was built originally by Rollin S. Sturgeon, who came west in 1911 and established the Vitagraph branch, is quite compact and yet roomy enough for four companies to work with ease. The place is unpretentious; the front looks more like a storage warehouse than a lively moving picture studio. In this way privacy is maintained without the usual battle with the curious. The front entrance is but a high gate-door, and no one enters past the watchful eye of Lon Dinsmore, who looks after the employing end of the business.

This large building forms the property room, carpenter shop, scene dock, paint frame and storage spaces for various departments. Directly to the rear is the big stage, and behind that is the yard, with its old house fronts the garage, dressing rooms, and storage rooms. The offices and laboratory are on the side of the lot, taking up a fifty-foot strip.

Rollin S. Sturgeon was with the company until a few weeks ago. He produced some of the biggest Vitagraph master features, such as "Captain Alvarez," "The Chalice of Courage," "A Child of the North," and many others. He owns his own home at the beach, as do some of the other players. The stock company is composed, among others, of Anne Schaefer, Myrtle Gonzalez, Otto Lederer, George Stanley, William Duncan, George Holt and George Kunkle.

The company has a ranch up in the mountains near the studio which is used for big outdoor sets and western frontier scenes. It is wild and free from civilization, yet within a few miles of the plant.

The Simplex at the Exposition

THE exhibit of the Precision Machine Company at the big exposition at San Francisco is in the Educational Building. Fred A. Clark, sales representative of the Simplex machine, is in charge. Mr. Clark arrived in the bay city on February 21, and took control of Simplex affairs at the exposition grounds, where he has been engaged in arranging the display.

Fred A. Clark.

In the Educational Building there are two exhibition rooms equipped with the Simplex; these are known as Departmental Theaters No. 1 and No. 2.

The offiice of the Simplex is in the gallery over Theater No. 2. Here in a big plush-lined mahogany case are displayed all the parts entering into the construction of the Simplex. They are shown both in the rough and as they are when the last touch has been put on. Near by is a handsome example of the latest model Simplex in blue enamel.

In the theater on the main floor are two projectors and a dissolving stereopticon, all motor driven. It is a model operating room, brought up to the minute. The Simplex machines are equipped with the Arc Controller, manufactured by the Speed Controller Company, Inc., of New York City. The pictures are thrown on a Day and Night Screen. A Westinghouse A. C. to D. C. motor generator is employed. A large window at the rear of the booth enables the passer-by to follow the work of the operator—a rather unusual sight for the layman, by the way—but in this instance there really is not a great deal to see other than the operation of threading the machine, as the room pretty nearly runs itself.

Mr. Clark has had wide experience in the motion picture projection business. His acquaintance with exhibitors and knowledge of projection requirements should make the Precesion exhibit popular.

Miles Brothers, Pioneers

A Bit of History of the Firm Which Built the First Motion Picture Studio on the Coast

ONE of the pioneer renters of film not only on the Pacific Coast, but in the United States, was the firm of Miles Brothers, still in business in Mission street, San Francisco. With the firm from the beginning has been James A. Sciaroni. Mr. Sciaroni is blessed with a keen memory; what is more, he knows just where in the firm's headquarters to lay his hands on records of early film days that are of deep interest. Talking with a WORLD man recently Mr. Sciaroni said it was in the spring of 1903 the firm of Miles Brothers began renting film. The operations of the concern were not confined to the western states. In some instances film that had come from Europe was shipped back to Chicago. In 1903 Mr. Sciaroni said practically no film was being used in San Francisco except in the Orpheum and the Unique, vaudeville houses, and at the Chutes. Through his connection with the Edison company Peter Bacigalupi was supplying film to a very limited demand. He handled mostly Pathe and other French films. It is Mr. Sciaroni's belief that Mr. Bacigalupi was the first man to rent films in the western country. He did not long remain in the business. Miles Brothers were the next. "We were shipping film to every city west of the Mississippi," said Mr. Sciaroni, "and also supplying Canada.

"'Pop' Furst started the first moving picture and vaudeville show in San Francisco. It was before the 'quake that he opened a place on Market street, between Third and Fourth, the busiest place in town, and it is today, too. So far as I know he was the first man in the country to open a nickelodeon. My recollection is that it was before 1904. In spite of his excellent location the house was not successful. The fever had not struck the public. The next nickelodeon was started just after the 'quake in the back end of an arcade in Fillmore street. The next was the Theatorium, in Mission street, at Twenty-second, and it is still running."

Miles Brothers were taking pictures as far back as 1900. They did much work in Alaska and also considerable work for the Government in the northwest. Up to the time of the fire in 1906 Mr. Sciaroni said the firm probably had handled three or four hundred films. The total releases of all manufacturers at times might not exceed a half reel a week. The vaudeville houses would run a subject a straight week.

Mr. Sciaroni brought out an old loose-leafed account book. Here was the record of the early films, the title, the maker, length and the names of the houses where they were booked. Undoubtedly in days to come this old book will be worth more than its weight in the west's own gold. The first sheet has been lost. The record of the second combination of pictures handled by Miles Brothers is worth quoting. There were five subjects in this film of the year 1903, as follows: "Destruction of Chimney," Urban, 123 feet; "Strictly Fresh Eggs," Biograph, 78 feet; "The Enchanted Well," Melies, 225 feet; "How I Caught the Burglar," Biograph, 110 feet; "Bass Fishing," Biograph, 63 feet; total, 599 feet.

Here is also No. 3, and it will be noted how the film at this period averaged about 600 feet. It will be observed, too, that in this list there are seven subjects: "Happy Hooligan in a Trap," Biograph, 52 feet; "The Wise Elephant," Urban, 118 feet; "The Kidnapper," Biograph, 152 feet; "The Lily Dance," Biograph, 53 feet; "The Oracle of Delphi," Melies, 103 feet; "How Mike Got Soap in His Eyes," Biograph, 72 feet; "Down the Bamboo Slide," Biograph, 59 feet; total, 610 feet. No. 5 contained eight subjects, with a total length of 663 feet. No. 6 was Melies' "Fairyland," a noted film in its day. It is under date of October, 1903, that it appears on the books. Its length will be interesting to those who believe the day of the thousand-foot reel is comparatively recent—1,040 feet. No. 7 contained eight subjects, with a total length of 526 feet, and all but one were Biographs. It was in October, 1903, too, the record shows one of the early Pacific coast films, photographed by Miles Brothers—the parade of the Grand Army through Market street. In 1904 there was recorded Edison's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," 1,100 feet in length.

Under date of August 15, 1904, appears the entry of Biograph's "Count's Personal." Mr. Sciaroni says so far as he knows this is the first "chase" picture ever made. When it was received it was shown to buyers in the projection room; nobody cracked a trace of a smile. The film was sent to Oakland—no one in San Francisco wanted it. During the week it was being shown Mr. Sciaroni had occasion to visit the theater across the bay to make his collection. As he approached the doors he heard a great hubbub. He asked the proprietor if there was a riot inside. "No," he told him, "It is that picture. They are laughing their heads off in there; they are rolling off the seats."

"It made a big hit," said Mr. Sciaroni, "yet none of us had thought it worth while."

Miles Brothers ceased buying film in 1913. At the present store on Mission street the firm now has in storage about 5,000 reels of film. Down in the basement, too, there is a big camera that has done a lot of work. It would hardly be recognized as an instrument for taking motion pictures, yet it is in working order. Here, too, are an old-time printer and a projector.

The firm of Miles Brothers was founded by Harry J. Miles, deceased, and Herbert Miles, now in New York. The business at present, which is the manufacture of advertising, industrial and educational films, is conducted by Earl E. Miles. It may not now be generally known that just as the great disaster in 1906 overwhelmed San Francisco Miles Brothers were putting the finishing touches on what was then the largest and finest picture studio in the country. The fire destroyed the entire equipment; it was responsible for keeping San Francisco off the film manufacturing map for a number of years, perhaps even of depriving the coast city of eminence in the industry. The Miles laboratory was unique in many respects and possessed an equipment that has not yet been equalled. Harry Miles was of an inventive turn of mind and had designed a system of electric control that operated the entire factory and studio.

It should also be noted that, despite the wild excitement occasioned by the earthquake, Earl Miles and Mr. Sciaroni got busy with their camera and took over 16,000 feet of negative of the disaster. This picture was the only genuine motion picture of the San Francisco earthquake ever taken.

Reliance-Majestic.

Things That Are Doing In and About the Studios Where the Art of Griffith Flourishes.

SIXTY THOUSAND feet of negative are produced at the studio of the Reliance-Majestic companies every month; we don't mean taken. The figure named represents the finished article, as it is trimmed for the screen, or if you wish to be precise as its corresponding positive is trimmed for the screen. This means that while the lot out at 4500 Sunset Boulevard is a big one, there has to be a great deal of what may be described as intensive picture-making to provide space for the requirements of an average of fifteen producers. Pictures are made here at night as well as in the daytime.

Some of the studios in this town of studios are ever changing, ever growing. The Reliance-Majestic is one of these. Present always is the sound of the hammer; reference is not here made to the construction of sets which may be struck on the morrow, but to buildings designed for greater or less permanency, for dressing rooms, for laboratories, for stages. In the latter part of May the writer noted several structures that early in April did not exist. On the day of the later visit an extensive addition was being made to the women's dressing rooms; out on the boulevard side other structures were under way.

All of this preparation for more pictures means that the big organization under D. W. Griffith is forging ahead, in spite of wars and rumors of wars abroad and agitation for preparation for them at home. Some of the buildings comprising the establishment on the day a World man called were the executive, wherein Mr. Griffith has his offices; the scenario, in charge of Frank E. Woods, Mr. Griffith's chief of staff; rehearsal, where new stories are threshed out. Out front is the employment building, where new-comers make their bows. Then there are the shipping department, five factory buildings, two vaults, two stillrooms, a camera department presided over by William Bitzer, carpenter and paint shops and two projection rooms. Each of the stages has its own property room. Of dressing rooms there are many; there have to be to accommodate sixteen directors and their assistants and over a hundred members of the stock company. There are over 15,000 square feet of stage space.

The roll of directors on the day the world man was wandering over the place was Tod Browning, William Christy Cabanne, Edward Dillon, John Emerson, S. A. and C. M. Franklin, F. J. Grandon, Lloyd Ingraham, Fred A. Kelsey, Arthur Mackley, John B. O'Brien, Paul Powell, Francis Powers, George Siegmann, R. A. Walsh and Giles Warren. In the scenario department Chester B. Clapp is chief aid to Mr. Woods. Others in the department are Hettie Gray Baker, Mary H. O'Connor and Bernard McConville. Chester Withey writes comedy scripts for and plays with Director Dillon's company. Bennie Zeidman dispenses publicity.

A cameraman who had been assigned to the party kindly offered to photograph anything we might suggest. Well, there was the space out back where were taken the street scenes in "The Clansman." How different it looked! At the upper end were structures that will figure in a Mutual masterpiece, "Old Heidelberg." At the lower, between two rows of trees, was the half-dismantled structure that had served as a Coney Island concert hall. From a tree the branches of which touched those of a pine we pulled a green fig. That's California.

Out on No. 1 stage we met Mr. Cabanne producing "The Martyrs of the Alamo," and also A. D. Sears, in the garb of Davy Crockett, a fine type. Real Mexicans were all about. One party was being drilled all over the yard and the surrounding fields — and those composing it seemed to enjoy it. Mr. Cabanne intimated as much. "Don't tell me these men are indisposed to work," he said. "They will drill of their own volition." Eddie Dillon was putting on a suffrage comedy. Fay Tincher had replaced her strikingly striped stenographer's gown for a mannish outfit; the famous curl was not. "We meet quite often," suggested Elmer Booth, who behind him has good work and in front of him much time for a great deal more. "Yes," we replied, in true Japanese fashion, "in various places." Miss Tincher seemed to think that would hold her fellow-player for at least a moment.

Henry Walthall, who, with Mary Alden, is appearing in "The Pillars of Society," was for the moment putting over a close-up under the direction of Mr. Walsh. A little later we caught Mr. Walthall as we were about to snap a picture of one of the men's dressing rooms and dragged him out to the rail, together with Ralph Lewis, Charles Clary, Charles West and F. A. Turner. Being the third attempt to locate him, we found Arthur (Sheriff) Mackley and talked of Times Square and of the futile effort made on one occasion by a wire-tapping tout to put something over.

We walked over across the Boulevard to a field where the leveled grain was still stacked and the carpenters were busy building sets for the Alamo story. There will be a battle here soon and the tragedy of Crockett and Bowie will be re-enacted. Certainly it looked peaceful on the day in question, with the city away behind us and the mountains out in front.

Some of the larger subjects under way at the time other than those mentioned were "The Fox Woman," in which Lloyd Ingraham is directing Elmer Clifton and Signe Auen, and "Old Heidelberg," the leads in which are taken by Wallace Reid and Dorothy Gish under the direction of John Emerson.

Kalem Studios

Structures Used by this Company's Players Not an Adequate Index of the Work Produced

THE Kalem Company maintains two studios in the Los Angeles section, but these plants give no adequate idea of the character of work or the amount of it that is done by the players who work under the Kalem banner. The older of these plants is at Glendale, where there are two stages and where the company is about to erect an electric studio. It was at Glendale that the Kalem Company produced some of its most popular pictures—those in which Alice Joyce appeared and made her reputation. The company was established at Glendale by Kenean Buell who was succeeded later by George Melford. At present the studio is under the direction of James Horne.

It was at the Glendale studios that the very successful series, "The Hazards of Helen," were commenced under the direction of J. J. McGowan. Helen Holmes is featured in this series and the work is being continued under the direction of Director Davis, with Robert Adair playing the leads. James Horne has just finished one of the Kalem Broadway Favorite series in which Myrtle Tannehill is starred with Marin Sais and William West playing leads. "The Girl and the Angel" is the title. Following this subject Director Horne resumed work on the hotel detective series, for the making of which he has constructed one of the most elaborate hotel lobby scenes known to the screen. Among the features of this set is running elevators.

It is the intention of the Kalem Company to materially extend its equipment at Glendale.

At the Hollywood studio, which is situated at 1425 Fleming street, there is a stage 85 by 50 feet on a plot 320 by 180. The stage has been enlarged and a new diffusing system installed. One company is working here. Director "Rube" Miller is making day. Through them is depicted a wealth of native humor that is irresistible at times, but which is always wholesome. This series is one of the bect contributions to motion picture lore from the Kalem western forces.

The Old Kalem Studios at the Beach.

It may not be in use today, but for some years it was about the liveliest little plant on the Pacific circuit, and that is the old studio of the Kalem at Santa Monica. It is the place where Ruth Roland and Johnnie Brennan became famous, and where Marshal Neilan started to direct.

P. C. Hartigan made Kalem cemedies here for some time, and before that the old Bison (if we are not mistaken) made westerns when it first arrived. Since the Kalem closed the studios only one firm has used the place, the Pathe, under the management of John Brennan. The studio is one of the smallest here, and yet it has considerable room. The main building, which contained the office and dressing rooms, was in years gone by a railroad station, but with the march of progress and surface cars, the railroad closed down. The strip of land is about ten times as long as it is wide, and extends along the station right of way. In the front are the lawn and gardens, then the offiice, and in the rear are the dressing rooms, stage and technical buildings. At the present time the studio is unoccupied, but a new company is trying to get in to make comedies.

A Kalem Setting.

A story published in the "World" some time ago told of a special setting in course of construction at the Kalem Glendale studios. This setting represents the lobby of the Grand Hotel, and is here illustrated.

The lobby was designed by Arthur Siedle, technical director for the Metropolitan Opera Company and the official who controls all the settings used by that organization. As the foremost authority in his particular field, Mr. Siedle was well qualified to plan this Kalem set and, as will be seen, it approaches in magnificence anything of a similar nature.

To build the lobby in accordance with Mr. Siedle's plans necessitated an expenditure of more than $5,000.

California Motion Picture Corporation

One of the Golden Gate's Exclusive Contributions to the Motion Picture Industry.

IT IS an hour's ride from the Market street ferry in San Francisco to the plant of the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael, pronounced Ra-fel, with the accent on the last syllable. The distance is eighteen miles, the first third of which is across San Francisco Bay. On the water we swing in near forbidding Alcatraz Island, Uncle Sam's restraining place for military delinquents. Automatically there come to mind the Chateau d'If and the Count of Monte Cristo. Off to the left is Exposition Park, its two miles of semi-Oriental structures in their magical beauty forming a striking contrast with the workaday buildings to the south and east. Above and beyond is the Presidio, green and open, bordered by miles of barracks. To the west is the Golden Gate, and the grown American whose pulse does not quicken a bit as for the first time he looks on this strip of water is shy a string on his fiddle. To the right and back of us are Oakland and Berkeley, with the mountains behind them. Out in front is grim old Tamalpais, its three peaks obscured in a cloud.

The ride to San Rafael is an interesting one around the base of Tamalpais. The studio of the California company is a few minutes' ride from the station in a valley, the hills on three sides rising to a considerable height. The property comprises forty-five acres. In the main building are the offices, twenty-two dressing rooms, wardrobe and carpenter and paint shops. The stage is 60 by 60 feet, but will shortly be doubled in size. The factory is removed some distance from the main building. Here are found a testing room in which Louis Hutt, chief cameraman and head of the laboratory, works out his experiments; developing, drying, cutting, still photography, printing and projection rooms. There are two printing machines. There are three other buildings, a brick storage vault, a garage and a restaurant, or "cookhouse," as the members of the company describe it.

The California has a permanent camp at Boulder Creek, sixty miles from San Rafael. Here are twenty-two log cabins, complete ones, habitable. These were built to duplicate the primitive mining community that served as the inspiration for many of the romances flowing from the pen of Bret Harte. The camp was seen in "The Lily of Poverty Flat." It is located in the Big Basin country, in the Santa Cruz Mountains, a section known also as the redwood country. To enhance the mining camp atmosphere a creek has been dammed and sluices built.

Up to the time of writing, the company's productions have been "Salomy Jane," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Mignon," "The Lily of Poverty Flat" and "Phyllis of the Sierras." It was said that probably "Salvation Nell" would be the next subject.

In the making of pictures of early California life it is the aim of the officers of the company to depict the times as they were—to make the portrayals historically correct. "We keep away from the 'wild and woolly,'" said Earl Snell, secretary of the company. "We desire to show the true American atmosphere."

In the making of these stories of pioneer days in California the company has been fortunate in its leading woman, Beatriz Michelena, who has been featured in all of the subjects produced. "The parts in which she has been cast just seem to fit her," remarked one of the officers.

The executive offices of the company are in the new Call Building in San Francisco. Herbert Payne is president and his son, Archer Payne, is treasurer. It is the natural thing these men should be concerned as to the faithful portrayal of coast life in the days of the Forty-niners. The grandfather of the president was heavily interested in the Comstock Lode. Mr. Snell, the secretary, is the grandson of a man who worked in the mining camps as a Methodist missionary. Alex C. Beyfuss is vice-president and general manager of the California. George B. Middleton is producing manager. The contract output at present is ten subjects a year.

The California Motion Picture Corporation is most happily situated. At the foot of Mount Tamalpais. It is near to the city streets of San Francisco, it is practically on the Bay of San Francisco, and it is only a short ride from the shores of the Pacific. Above all, it is but a few hours' drive to mountains rich in legendary lore of one of the most fascinating and romantic periods of American history.

THE SUCCESS OF FRANK WOODS.

Among the careers of prominent motion picture men, there is none more significant than that of Frank Woods in illustrating the value of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the principles at the bottom of photoplay production and sticking to them consistently, without overlooking the possibilities for improvement which come with experience. In the old days—they seem old now—when "Spec" Woods started to give advice through the pages of the Dramatic Mirror, he won the confidence of the most important men in the industry by reason of the practical value of his suggestions and his fearless attacks on everything tending to lower the standard of pictures. His success as scenario editor for Mutual and right-hand man of D. W. Griffith is known to all who follow motion picture affairs.

Horsley's Animal Studios.

Novel Ideas Worked Out by David Horsley—Western Home of MinA Productions.

THE revolving animal arena and novel stage of the Horsley studios in Los Angeles are completed. They represent the latest ideas of David Horsley in studio building, and Mr. Horsley is a man of ideas. The two stages adjoin the semi-circular row of cages containing the animals that are known as the Bostock menagerie and which are now being trained by Captain Jack Bonavita for their appearance in animal pictures. The division of the park which will be devoted to the making of pictures is 350 by 300 feet.

The stage, which is 70 by 140 feet, faces to the south. At the north side, or back, are twelve dressing rooms for the more important members of the stock company and also the chief directors' office. The fronts of the dressing rooms are in bungalow style, no two alike. Each has a distinctive door, which is interchangeable, making a combination of 144 fronts. These dressing rooms are decorated and are equipped with hot and cold running water, and also, which in Los Angeles is more or less of a novelty but none the less at times an urgent necessity, with steam radiators. The director's office has a store front, with a wide window, and this easily may be altered to represent a store. West of the stage are finely equipped dressing rooms for both men and women. The south end of the women's dressing room is finished to represent a country store front.

The animal arena is on the east side of the studio plot, near the main street. The structure is 144 by 144 in size, divided into six sections radiating from a camera cage in the center each at an angle of 60 degrees. The outside walls are 20 feet in height. The cage of the cameramen and directors is in reinforced concrete. Surrounding it and coming flush to the wire screen is a moat 6 feet wide and 4 feet deep, intersected by the dividing fences. The moat is designed to provide a means for hasty exit for players in case they feel that departure from the inclosed arena may be beneficial to their health. Animals of the cat tribe have an abhorrence of wet feet. The screens between the cage and the arena are divided into horizontal sections and are operated by weights, so that it will be possible by "panoraming" to follow animals and players from one division to another. Each of the six sections will have individual settings. Gateways in each intersecting partition are of sufficient size to admit elephants or stage coaches. Over the runway for the entrance or exit of animals from their cages, and which circles the arena, there has been erected an observation platform for the convenience of visitors.

In the rear of the dressing rooms are the paint frames and carpenter shop. The scenic department is equipped with two frames of 40 feet each; the carpenter shop is outfitted with all modern woodworking machinery. At the southeastern corner of the plat is the laboratory and administration building, 34 by 95 feet in dimensions. Here Mr. Horsley will have his private office. There are two vaults, each 10 by 10 feet, for cameras and for film. These have combination vault doors, air spaced walls with reinforced concrete roof and floors, and are electrically lighted. The scenario office also will be in this building. The laboratory tanks are constructed of magnesite-chloride reinforced concrete. The floor of the structure is of magnesite composition reinforced with a mesh. A pergola will connect the offices with the entrance to the grounds, 250 feet away. This will be decorated with shrubbery. All open spaces will be converted into lawn.

Animal Arena and Stage—Horsley Plant.

In the menagerie available for work in pictures are twenty-seven lions, two elephants, eight pumas, five bears, eight leopards, two chimpanzees and seven polar bears. These are all trained. Monty, son of Baltimore, the lion who deprived Captain Bonavita of his arm, has been trained to the point where he will open doors and windows and at the sound of a firearm will drop as if dead. No longer will it be necessary to shoot a lion for picture purposes.

Mr. Horsley was a busy man during the days in early June. He had been called upon by the Chamber of Commerce to assist in the entertainment of the Congressional delegation stopping in the city on its return from its recent trip to Honolulu and the two expositions. As Mr. Horsley had the entree to all the studios he had been in great demand. The friendships that were formed in these tours resulted in innumerable social invitations, and, as Mr. Horsley explained it, "When you are invited out to luncheon by a man that Joe Cannon tells you is in all probability the next Republican candidate for President, you are pretty sure to drop even ordinarily urgent business and go, are you not?"

Mr. Horsley described how "Little Mary" had converted one United States Senator into a life admirer. This Senator, with a brother member, both of whom were accompanied by their families, visited the Famous Players studio and were most cordially welcomed by the little star. "You know," she remarked with most charming naivete to one of them, "I never receive any one that is less than a United States Senator." "I want to say to you," confided the Senator to Mr. Horsley as the party left the studio, "that unfortunately I have never seen Miss Pickford on the screen —I have not attended many picture shows—but you may take my word for it not another subject in which she appears has got a chance in the world to get by me!"

Speaking of business matters, Mr. Horsley said that the MinA releases would be continued and that he expected by the first of July two companies would be at work in his studio. Other companies would be added to his organization as fast as they could be got together in proper order. The head of the big plant at the Bostock park has many plans for the future, and in them his animals cut a large figure.

National Film Corporation.

Newest of the Motion Picture Producers on the Pacific Coast.

ONE of the newest concerns in the Los Angeles group of motion picture manufacturers is the National Film Corporation, which occupies the old Oz studio at the corner of Gower street and Santa Monica Boulevard. The company has just completed its fourth subject. William Parsons is president of the company, Dr. Dain L. Tasker, vice-president; Bruce Mitchell, managing director, and W. F. Woods, business manager. The scenario department is in charge of Anthony W. Coldewey. The subjects so far produced are "The Tale of the Night Before," a four-reel comedy; "The Baron's Millions," a three-reel comedy; "The Missing Heir," two-reel comedy, and "The Bachelor's Dream," a comedy in three parts.

"We have started on the policy that just the minute one of our players begins to act we will stop the camera," said Mr. Woods. "Everything must be true to life." At the time of writing several of the officers of the company were in New York looking into the business situation. Mr. Woods said that when they returned they would bring with them the leads for two additional companies, making four in all, which would give them at least one release a week. One of the returning leads is a man of wide reputation. The producing forces will be divided into three comedy companies and one dramatic company.

Associated with Mr. Mitchell on the producing staff is Fred Hornby, long time coast player and director. William Parsons is leading comedian, working under Mr. Mitchell; also in this company is Rena Rogers. Russ Powell, for a long time a legitimate player, is leading comedian in Mr. Hornby's company. Miss Constance Johnson is leading woman.

Norbig Film Manufacturing Co.

The Norbig Film Manufacturing Company is situated in Alessandro street in Edendale, between the Selig and Keystone studios. Frank E. Morton, the president of the company, has just taken the half interest formerly held by Frank V. Biggy and now owns all of the stock. Negotiations are pending between Mr. Morton and James Youngdeer to make western stuff, with the latter directing. The Norbig company built its entire plant, and has been doing business over two years. It has confined its attention to the laboratory end, leasing its stage. The company prides itself on the quality of its commercial product, and has received commendations from New York. Leroy C. Davidge is in charge of the dark room, and Mr. Morton gives personal supervision to the entire plant.

The company is also exclusive agent for Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico for Radium flares.

The American Studio.

Ornate Plant of the "Flying A" at Santa Barbara Done In Mission Style.

PICTURESQUELY situated indeed is the studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company in Santa Barbara, something over a hundred miles north of Los Angeles. The plant sets back from the sea a mile or so, between two walls of mountains. The residents of the town look with pride upon this institution established four years ago by S. S. Hutchinson, the president of the company. Manufacturing plants are taboo in the community; the studio is excluded from that category, as in Santa Barbara the laboratory work is limited to the making of a sample print, which is forwarded with the negative to the big establishment of the company in Chicago.

The property comprises a great plot of ground. It is surrounded by a high wall of cream colored concrete, banked with masses of flowers and shrubbery. The buildings are also of the same material as the wall, and of Mission type. Inside the grounds the landscape artist has combined with the architect to adorn the home of American pictures with garden and lawn, fountain and flower-bordered walks and curving driveways. Facing the entrance beyond a lawn is the glass studio. To the left are a row of dressing rooms and the greenroom, an attractive lounging place. On the right, behind a vine-covered pergola, are the main offices, the directors' quarters, projecting room and scenario department. Another group of dressing rooms is situated near the big open-air studio, which has a floor space sufficient to accommodate the aggregate companies.

Connecting with the big studio is the large two-story prop room, which, apart from the wardrobe room, is devoted equally to the storage of property and scenery. There is a well-equipped carpenter shop. The scenic department has all modern facilities, including a concrete storage basement. The developing department includes enlarging apparatus for the making of display photographs. There is a big garage. The stables shelter a fine outfit of riding and work horses.

Besides the two feature companies now at work on Mutual Master Pictures, the American has under production the ten-thousand-dollar contest novel, "The Diamond from the Sky." Among the men directing subjects at the studio are Thomas Ricketts, William D. Taylor, Henry Otto, Reaves Eason and Archer MacMackin. With Mr. Ricketts are Harold Lockwood and May Allison; under Mr. Otto are Winifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, John Steppling and George Field; three original members of the American forces are with Mr. Eason, Jack Richardson, Louise Lester and Vivian Rich, as well as Harry Von Meter and Joseph Galbraith, while playing under Mr. MacMackin are Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell. Jay Cairns, formerly with the Thanhouser Company, is now at Santa Barbara, in charge of publicity for "The Diamond from the Sky." Mr. Cairns always has been as successful in securing publicity for his company as he has been in eluding it for himself.

The aim of the American is the production of wholesome, vital stories, with strong, original plots and a balance on the better, brighter side of life. The workers in the studio have ideal surroundings in which to accomplish this result, and the management prides itself in the belief that nowhere in the west is there a more contented family of players. The policy of the company has always been to foster a spirit of co-operation and insist upon the fair treatment of every employe.

CHICKENS MUST BE DEAD

An amusing letter was received last week by the manager of a theater in the Bronx, New York, who has adopted the "country store" method of increasing patronage. Chickens are among the most valuable of his gifts and it so happened that a fat hen came into the possession of a little girl, who carried off her gift in the most approved manner, clutching the legs of the hen while its head barely missed the sidewalk. A kind-hearted lady stopped the little girl, advised her never again to show such disregard for the comfort of a fowl and then walked off with the prize, held carefully in her arms. The following day the manager received a letter warning him to discontinue the distribution of live hens under penalty of being reported to the S. P. C. A. The writer went on to suggest that patrons would be just as well satisfied with chickens that had been properly decapitated.

D. W. Griffith

By Frank E. Woods.

WHEN D. W. Griffith was making pictures in the old Biograph studio on 14th street, very few people, scarcely anyone in fact, foresaw the heights to which he was destined to attain. There were a few, and I have the satisfaction of numbering myself among them, who thought they recognized in his early work the marks of genius, and who counted him from the first the foremost leader in the development of motion picture drama; but nobody, least of all himself, dared to dream that he was to reach his present distinction.

I have read in some prints that he is one of three or five of the most talked of men in America, but this is an exaggeration although I can see no reason why he may not before long reach that eminence also, and when he does reach it he will hold it. In New York City, while the contest over the production of the "Birth of a Nation" was on, he was distinctly first in the public eye in that city. It was the same in Boston and in Los Angeles and San Francisco and more recently in Chicago. But these five cities constitute but a fraction of the United States, and it will not be until the "Birth of a Nation" has forced its tortuous way into all the other large cities of the country that the name of Griffith will have gained truly national importance. And even then the national fame of Griffith would be of only transitory character if his achievements were to consist only of what he has thus far accomplished and were to cease with this last effort, great as it undoubtedly is. Established fame is a thing of long growth. It does not come permanently in a day or a year or five years. Commonly it takes a life time, and not infrequently years after death, as in the case of Poe.

David Wark Griffith.

David Wark Griffith is approaching the first milestone and it will be up to him in the parlance of the day, to go the remainder of the route. Will he do it? Will he make other and greater productions than the one that is now gaining him fame? I have heard enthusiastic admirers say that the thing is impossible. "How can he ever produce another "Birth of a Nation"? Such a question as this reminds me of the old days when he was making one-reel Biographs. After a Pippa passes or a Ramola the critics were wont to declare: "Griffith will never make another one like that." And he didn't; he made something entirely different, yet better—a "Sands o' Dee," a "Mothering Heart," an "Enoch Arden," a "Judith." And so I believe it will be in the future. His productions will come less frequently, but unless I am greatly mistaken they will mark at intervals, distinct steps forward, so long as he remains in active life.

What peculiar qualities of mind have made Griffith great? Or rather, I should say, to be conservative, what is it that is making him great? We concede his greatness in his especial field, but I mean in this instance world greatness. People look at his pictures and say: "How wonderful!" They remark the infinite detail, the perfection of technique, the evidences of art, the spirit of poetry, the touches of homely human nature, the vastness of ensemble; and in some of these qualities, or all of them, they see as they think the key to the superiority of his work. And yet, they miss the one big element that, with the others, lifts him so far above his imitators that there can be no comparison. I mean the capacity to conceive or grasp big ideas, big purposes, big themes, and to present them in a big way that will command the respect of big minds. This Griffith has done and is doing. He showed early evidence of this capacity in "A Corner in Wheat" and others of his one-reel Biographs. It was strongly apparent in "The Escape," "Home Sweet Home," "The Avenging Conscience," "The Battle of the Sexes," and lastly, "The Birth of a Nation." Others may imitate his style and do fairly well in making pictures merely to amuse, but until one or any of them can combine with their artistry a quality of independent thought of sufficiently high purpose to arrest the attention of the thinkers of the world, Griffith will have no rivals in motion pictures.

We have only to ask ourselves what it is that made Fielding, Dickens, Thackery, Hugo, Howells and others, stand out above many of their fellows to understand why this young author who writes with the motion camera, and who uses his puppets of actors as if they were the keys of his typewriter, is finding himself invited to a seat with the mighty. When we look at the matter in this light, we have no difficulty in perceiving why Griffith alone, among the producers of motion pictures, is greeted as a distinguished compatriot by such men as Rupert Hughes, Rufus Steele, Richard Harding Davis, Booth Tarkington, and so many others of the first rank in the literature of the day.

Because of D. W. Griffith's natural dignity and reserve, the notion that he stands aloof from his fellow workers, that he lacks the common, human touch in daily intercourse, has been liberally circulated. In speaking of the master director as he knew him in the old Biograph studio, one of his early associates laughed at the idea of Griffith's aloofness. "Why, he is the friend of everybody from the property boy up. I never knew a more truly democratic man in my life," said this co-worker of former days.

Geraldine Farrar: Woman

Simplicity of Greatness the Characteristic of America's Prima Donna that Impresses the Moving Picture World Man.—Meeting the Famous Diva in Her Dressing Room at the Lasky Studio

THE greatest are the simplest. If simplicity be the supreme test then inded is Geraldine Farrar great. Out at the big Lasky studio in Hollywood, where Miss Farrar is working in front of the camera, there is not a man or a woman so far as is known who is not in love with the great opera singer—not because she has received the homage of the mighty of the capitals of Europe as well as of the powerful of the land of her birth; not because she is the recipient of remarkable incomes from operatic impresarios, from manufacturers of machines that reproduce the human voice, from publishers of magazines, who gladly pay large sums for articles with which her name may be associated. Not for any of these reasons do the men and women connected with the studio, whether they be stars or stage hands, kindle with enthusiasm when you mention the name of Geraldine Farrar. One hears it on all sides; it is because she is first of all and above all a woman—simple, cheery, sweet—and marvelously magnetic.

As you watch the prima donna's portrayal of a tragic scene you feel the responsive thrill that follows upon the work of the true artist. If later you have the privilege of talking with Miss Farrar or rather of listening to her—for somehow one feels if in her society he do any talking he is wasting moments that are rare—the thrill is intensified. You begin to understand that here indeed is a remarkable woman and to realize that in spite of the many in different lands to whom she is no stranger her light has been hid under a bushel. Hundreds of thousands she may have moved by her presence and her voice; millions she may have charmed and stirred through the influence of her wonderful notes mechanically reproduced; but the screen will be the medium that will reveal the woman herself to the great multitude which from the stage cannot be reached.

MISS FARRAR IN HER SPECIAL DRESSING ROOM

GERALDINE FARRAR, CECIL B. DE MILLE, WM. C. DE MILLE, JESSE L. LASKY.

GERALDINE FARRAR IN CHARACTER BE[illegible]E CAMERA

Before the camera Miss Farrar's portrayal will be unhampered by the restrictions arbitrarily placed upon it by the necessary requirements of musical composition. She will have full play for the expression of emotion. It will not be a question of bars; it is the simpler matter of feet. If a situation be a great one, and the interpretation of the artist be far stronger than the author—or composer— could have hoped, the screen will furnish the elasticity, the plasticity, the musical score denies. Miss Farrar had not been long in front of the camera before she discovered this salient fact—and she rejoiced because of it.

We had accepted an invitation of Mr. Lasky to join him in a stroll through the grounds, to see the big plant in full swing. On the inclosed stage we came upon Morris Gest, the personal representative and manager of Miss Farrar. Mr. Gest, for the time being, has forsaken his theatrical interests in New York City to come to California that he may more closely observe the working out of what the musical, the theatrical and the screen world believe a matter of moment to all concerned—the appearance of a prima donna before the camera.

In a Spanish setting Cecil De Mille was directing the work of four men. On the edge of the stage looking down into the dooryard of the cottage sat several women. All seemed interested; but neither in costume nor in the bearing of one toward another was there anything particularly striking. We walked on through the yard and in a few moments returned. The camera was in the same position as before, and was being turned. Its operator was the only spectator; even Mr. De Mille was absent. Between the lens and the doorway stood a woman in Spanish garb reading a letter. She was in deep distress. Her lips trembled, her throat throbbed, her nostrils dilated; the eyes—remarkable eyes; large coal black pupils set in a field of blue and fringed with black lashes—looked from side to side as they turned from the letter, but they saw not. How long the seconds seemed! The woman crumpled up. "Hold!" said the cameraman; the turning ceased.

"Miss Farrar is making a test of a scene she will do the day after tomorrow," said Mr. Lasky. "She is seeking to determine in advance if the screen will reveal the emotions she is striving to portray."

A few moments later Mr. Gest told us Miss Farrar would receive in her dressing room the representative of the Moving Picture World—and he added that the World was the first journal so to be honored, in spite of many applications from magazines and newspapers of all sorts, since the singer has been in Hollywood, and also the first motion picture magazine so to be honored at any time.

This "dressing room," by the way, is a cottage specially built for Miss Farrar. On the ground floor are two rooms, a reception or living room and the dressing room proper. It is most comfortably finished and furnished. There is a Steinway piano on which the prima donna practices in the morning before she goes to the stage—and she is at the studio long before the hour appointed for the company to assemble.

Miss Farrar was reclining on a couch in her dressing room. Her greeting to the World man was of simple cordiality. Mr. Gest placed by the side of the couch a chair for the visitor and retired. You cannot talk one minute with this famous singer without feeling that her greatness lies not alone in her voice; that there is brain power behind it. You note it in the marvelous facility of expression—eloquent, forceful, rapid, defying quotation without doing serious injustice.

The singer has experienced no nervousness before the camera. She has never rehearsed before a mirror, depending entirely upon feeling the full force of a given situation before attempting to portray it. She is a believer in the great value of the eyes as vehicles for conveying the thoughts that surge through the brain behind them. She comes to her new work with an open mind, without prejudices or ideas based upon long contemplation of motion picture work; she has seen few subjects, possibly as many in the days she has been at the studio as in the years that have gone before. Portrayal of emotion is a universal art, whether it be in opera, on the dramatic stage or before the camera. Miss Farrar is enthusiastic over her screen work. That from the first she has manifested a grasp of great essentials is attested by old-time screen players, who have missed no opportunity of following her when in action. They will tell you she is absolutely natural, without a trace of the exaggerated gesticulation that sometimes is associated with operatic interpretation.

As we passed out the yard Mr. De Mille was looking over some still pictures of the subject in which Miss Farrar is working. These of themselves tell several facts. There can be no question that the singer is a perfect photographic subject; and there is striking evidence in these, too, that Miss Farrar brings to the screen the fire of youth as well as a superb and a mature art.

"A Fiery Introduction" is the unusual title of one of Julius Furthman's stories which Charles Giblyn is this week staging at the Universal City studios. The story is one which compares favorably with the former work of Mr. Furthman and is an excellent vehicle for Mr. Giblyn's star lead. Cleo Madison, Hobart Henley, Agnes Vernon and Ray Hanford complete the cast.

Symphony Theater, Los Angeles

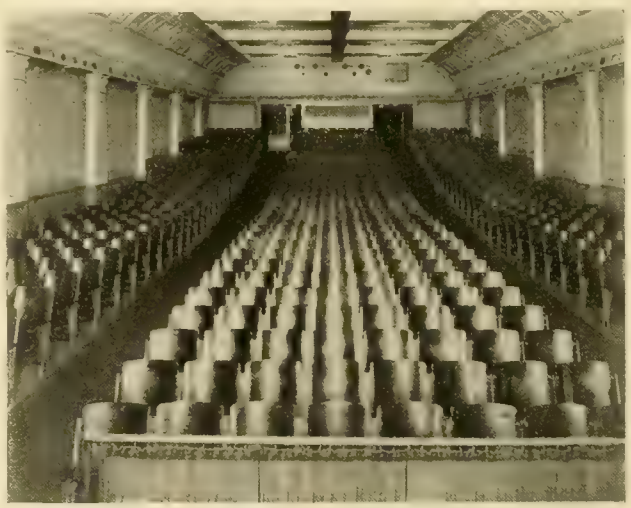
New House on the Coast That Is Making Good Records.

ALTHOUGH the Symphony Theater, at 614 South Broadway, Los Angeles, has been opened but a little over ten months it is successful. The house is owned chiefly by C. H. DuBois. A. M. Beamon, a Los Angeles banker, is secretary and treasurer. R. B. Seebeck is manager. For several months the Symphony has been showing first run Universal subjects, three changes each week. The show consists of five reels at prices of 5 and 10 cents in the afternoon and 10 and 15 cents in the evening. The hours are from 11 to 11 o'clock.

Charles H. DuBois, Proprietor.

R. B. Seebeck, Manager.

There are 750 seats, all on one well-pitched floor, making every chair a good one. The pictures are accompanied by a woman's orchestra of seven pieces. While the show is on the illumination is provided by sunken and dimmed lights which provide a faint greenish glow. The ushers are young women. There are rest rooms for women and for men.



Interior of the Symphony Theater at Los Angeles.

The Symphony has its own light generator, and Manager Seebeck called attention to the white pictures on the screen. In the projection room are two Power 6A machines, in charge of Thomas W. Armentrout and W. J. Maxson. There are also a Bausch & Lomb dissolver and a spotlight. The screen is 16 by 22 feet in dimensions. Out in front there is a $3,500 electric sign which contains 4,000 lamps.

The Symphony is a most comfortable house.

William S. Hart.

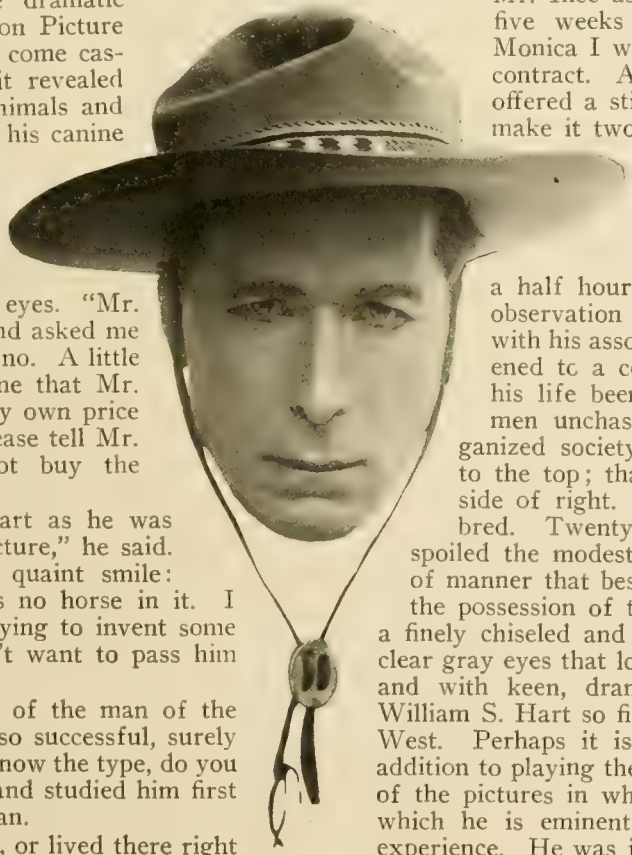
The Cowboy of Motion Pictures Tells Something of His Beginnings.

NO, WHILE I like hotel life, circumstances impel me to live in a house. You see, I have a dog, an English bull; he has been with me for ten years, ever since he was a puppy. He is totally blind. Two years ago, when I noted his eyesight was failing, I took him to the best specialist I could find in New York, but I was told nothing could be done. So I have a place up in the city where there is an inclosed yard at the back, and where during the day, when I am out here at work, my sister can let him out to wander over the lawn."

Wm. S. Hart.

The speaker was William S. Hart, the man who, by his virile Western character portrayals, has won so secure a place in the affections of followers of the screen. Mr. Hart was sitting in his spacious dressing room overlooking the northern slope of Santa Ynez Canyon, the picturesque home of the dramatic forces of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. The remark had come casually, but it was significant; it revealed the man, his love for dumb animals and the depth of his friendship for his canine pal.

"Five years ago in Madison Square Garden that dog made all the rich men's animals look like thirty cents," said Mr. Hart, with pride in his eyes. "Mr. Croker's handler came to me and asked me if he were for sale. I told him no. A little later he came back and told me that Mr. Croker had said I could put my own price on the dog. I asked him to please tell Mr. Croker that money could not buy the animal."



We had come upon Mr. Hart as he was studying a script. "A new picture," he said. And then he added with his quaint smile: "It's got me worried. There's no horse in it. I have been racking my brain trying to invent some way to work Fritz in. I don't want to pass him up for a month."

"Mr. Hart, in the portrayal of the man of the West in which you have been so successful, surely you are not guessing him; you know the type, do you not—you have lived with him and studied him first hand?" inquired the WORLD man.

"I was brought up in Dakota, or lived there right among the Sioux Indians until I was fifteen years old. I believe the events in the life of a child from the time of understanding until the age of fifteen are the ones that are not forgotten—that that is the impressionable age. You can pass up other years, other periods of your life, but the happenings of your childhood stick to you. As my childhood was passed in an atmosphere where a Colt was the court of last appeal I could not help being an impressed observer and, therefore, retaining an understanding of Western life."

Mr. Hart in the year he has been at Inceville has been featured in eighteen two-reel subjects and in three large productions—"The Bargain," "On the Night Stage" and "The Darkening Trail." He smiled when asked if he were through with the stage. "I don't allow myself to feel that I am divorced from it, because as long as a man can act he can always look forward to the stage. It is mighty agreeable to work here, because Tom Ince is not only my boss, but my friend. We both roughed it together and together underwent the privations of actors struggling for recognition and experience." The player paid a feeling tribute to his chief, to his qualities of heart and mind.

"Mr. Hart, I noticed recently a statement by one of the correspondents of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that your pictures were very popular in his city," said the interviewer.

"Well," the player replied, "I do seem to have had success from the start. I don't judge so much by what people say as from financial and other reasons. I came out here a year ago for 'The Bargain.' When that was finished Mr. Ince doubled my salary and kept me for 'On the Night Stage.' After that was done Mr. Ince wanted me to stay here, but I had been getting letters from Klaw & Erlanger, with whom I had been for many years, and I returned to New York.

"Every morning there would be a night letter from Mr. Ince asking me to come back. Well, five weeks from the time I left Santa Monica I was back at work under a year's contract. At the end of four weeks I was offered a still further increase in salary to make it two years, and I accepted. From all of which I think perhaps they like me in pictures."

We had sought out Mr. Hart because of admiration for his work. At the end of a half hour's talk, fortified by subsequent observation of the player in conversation with his associates, the feeling was strengthened to a conviction that had the lines of his life been cast in rough places, among men unchastened by the restraints of organized society, Mr. Hart would have come to the top; that he would have been on the side of right. He is of the West, born and bred. Twenty years on the stage have not spoiled the modesty of demeanor, the gentleness of manner that best indicates real strength. It is the possession of these attributes, combined with a finely chiseled and well preserved physique, with clear gray eyes that look out of a face of rare force, and with keen, dramatic intelligence that enables William S. Hart so finely to typify the Spirit of the West. Perhaps it is not generally known that in addition to playing the leads, Mr. Hart is co-director of the pictures in which he appears, a position for which he is eminently qualified by long dramatic experience. He was just nineteen when he appeared before the footlights for the first time, and Mr. Ince finds his knowledge of acting and dramatic effects, gained through many years of hard work, to be of great value.

Turner and Dahnken Circuit

Development of the Great Photoplay Exhibiting Enterprise of the Coast.

WHENEVER in California the motion picture industry is the topic of discussion, "T. & D." is a household expression, and it has become so in eight short years, during which time the largest projecting establishment on the Pacific Coast has sprung into existence. More than that, "T. & D." has become the emblem of superiority as far as the ever-increasing army of photoplay fans is concerned, for it is the trade-mark of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, which, from its offices at 942 Market street, San Franisco, operates almost a dozen motion picture theaters throughout the State, with half that many more to be opened before the end of the year.

Like the scenario of a photodramatic thriller reads the history of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, staged entirely in California, with the little town of Antioch, in Contra Costa County, as the opening scene. It was there that both Fred Dahnken, Jr., who heads the syndicate, and J. T. Turner, first vice-president and general manager, were born. Their early association consisted of making mud-cakes together on the banks of the San Joaquin; then they were schoolmates and finally became associated in several minor business ventures. This, perhaps, is one of the most significant reasons for the phenomenal success of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, for, aside from being partners, Messrs. Turner and Dahnken are "pals," and yet to have the first quarrel or business dispute to cloud their loyal friendship.

It was less than ten years ago that these two sons of Antioch were attracted by the motion picture industry and the vastness of its future. Having succeeded in previous undertakings, they came to San Francisco and bought their first theaters, the Lyric and Electric on Fillmore street, which were supplied with Turner and Dahnken independent film service, and the Elite and the Photoplay, which were later sold to Alexander Pantages and converted into the present Pantages Theater. The transfer of this lease netted the young organization $28,000 and this was the foundation from which Turner and Dahnken have builded their present big circuit.

Their next step was to start a licensed film exchange, leasing their films from the Associated Manufacturers, this being before the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company, and, as the leading licensed exchange on the Coast, business was thriving when they sold out to the General Film Company of America for $200,000. It was then that Turner and Dahnken decided to devote all of their attention to theatrical ownership and projecting.

With their capital doubled many times since they entered the field, Turner & Dahnken started the organization of a chain of theaters that now encircle the entire State. After leasing some of the principal legitimate theaters and turning them into exclusively photoplay houses, they started building theaters on such an elaborate scale as to cause old ones in the financial world to gasp in astonishment. One of their first moves was to take over the Tivoli Opera House in San Francisco, a massive structure erected with the intention of producing only grand opera. The business judgment of two young men who would dare take a $350,000 investment which was on the verge of failure as an opera house and convert it into a motion picture theater was more than once questioned when the deal was made known. That their keen insight into the new industry, however, reached further into the future than those who offered criticism has been proved by the fact that the Tivoli, as a photoplay theater, has been a moneymaker from the opening day.

Other theaters that are now operating on the Turner & Dahnken Circuit are the Oakland Photo Theater, the New Alameda Theater, the Richmond Theater, the T. & D. Theater De Luxe at San Jose, the T. & D. Theater at Sacramento, the T. & D. Theater at Berkeley and the new T. & D. Theater at Watsonville.

Work will be started shortly on another new theater in Oakland, which will be part of a half-million dollar building at Fourteenth and Franklin streets, and a score of other important deals are now pending which will almost double the number of photoplay houses operating on the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

With the rapid growth of the business there has been also a similar growth in the main offices, which occupy the entire fourth floor at 942 Market street. Here is maintained a plant that would do justice to many producing companies, being equipped with a developing and printing room for making films, a photographic department for copying and enlarging prints up to three-sheets in size, a coloring department where a number of artists are employed, stock rooms for supplying all theaters on the circuit, aside from the clerical department and executive chamber.

Turner & Dahnken soon realized after starting at the record gait which marked their debut into the industry that the business was outgrowing their executive facilities, so as the first adition to the firm they took in a young man of keen business judgment and a University of California graduate—Bruce Johnson—and made him secretary of the firm. Mr. Johnson, although young in years, is one of the oldest young men associated with the motion picture industry on the Pacific Coast. Equipped with an unusual fund of resources and pronounced ability and with a personality that always gets a hearing, he is a valuable member of the executive staff of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

But still, under the careful guidance of this able trio, the Turner & Dahnken Circuit grew and it was not many months later that it was again in need of executive ability. Here enters Claude L. Langley, another young man who has the courage of his convictions and is admirably blessed with a keen sense of business ability. He had also been drawn into the motion picture business by a realization of the great field that lay before it, and was conducting a little theater in Berkeley, which he had builded up from a continuous drain on the former owner's pocketbook. His work had been watched by Turner & Dahnken, and when the time came for a second addition to the firm a tempting proposition was submitted to him, with the result that he beame directing manager and treasurer of the circuit.

Since his association with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, Mr. Langley has striven sincerely and consistently to carry out the progressive policies for which this syndicate has become known, and the results of his sturdy labor are more apparent than his oldest claims would manifest. As directing manager, Mr. Langley has established an enviable and unusual record, to which the greatest contributing factor is confidence—the confidence of his associates in his statements and promises. The manner in which he divests a transaction of its cold commercial aspects, transforming it into a contract of friendship and cooperation, is in itself a beautiful example of truth and faith.

TURNER & DAHNKEN CIRCUIT, OFFICERS AND VIEWS OF TYPICAL HOUSES.

The wonderful success of this theatrical concern is due in a large measure to the early declared policy of the men at its head to exhibit only pictures of a high moral character, clearly portrayed and cleverly executed. By its faithful enforcement of this policy there has been a gradual decline of the sensational picture which formerly caused many to look with displeasure on the moving picture show.

Fred Dahnken, Jr., senior member of the firm, is a man of keen conception, and with an active mind always on the alert for the betterment and expansion of the business. He is a natural born financier and a wonderful judge of humanity, qualities necessary for such an intricate business as this. Turner is of that commanding type of man, steady to a degree of fineness, with a striking personality and master of his surroundings, cheerful, consistent and very evenly balanced—a person who when once met is hard to forget.

Summing up the qualifications of the two men, what one lacks will be found strongly developed in the other, and close attention to business has made possible the magnitude of their interests in the State of California.

As to both Fred Dahnken and J. T. Turner, their success and the high esteem in which they are held by those who have had business transactions with them is the highest tribute that could be paid to the heads of any commercial establishment. Thus the emblem "T. & D." has been made to set the standard in the motion picture industry of the Pacific Coast.

Clune's Broadway

One of the Popular Photoplay Houses of Los Angeles.

A POPULAR theater in Los Angeles is Clune's Broadway, in the heart of the business district, but receiving nevertheless a full share of evening patronage. It is a noteworthy fact that in this Southern California city there are many large picture theaters in the downtown section; and there seems to be no difficulty in bringing the native and the tourist to them.

The Broadway has 900 seats, all on one floor; of these, and situated at the extreme rear, 200 are loge seats, raised well above the remainder of the house. There are several points about the Broadway that will interest the Easterner. In the first place, these loges command the top price of admission in spite of the fact that they are the furthest from the screen —and that price is 20 cents. In the second place, the minimum admission, 10 cents, admits to the front fifteen rows. For the center section the price is 15 cents. In the loges are regular chairs, upholstered; and they are comfortable.

The Broadway has been doing business over four years. An excellent orchestra of ten pieces accompanies the pictures. At each side of the screen is a small balcony for a singer. One mid-May evening when a World man was in attendance the ending of one show was marked by the throwing on the screen of a picture in colors of an old mill, following an announcement that the orchestra would give "Poet and Peasant." Later, after one or two reels had been shown, a sweet-voiced young woman sang. The program of the evening in question was licensed—and it was a good one.

There is a spacious projection room in the Broadway. In size it is about 15 by 20, with a 17-foot ceiling. The throw is 112 feet. Two Power 6A machines and a double dissolver constitute the chief features of the equipment. A third projector is to be added. In the roof is a big skylight—it must be at least 5½ by 6 feet at the base—for ventilation in summer.

James W. Anderson is manager of the Broadway. Mr. Anderson has been associated with the Clune forces but a little over a year, but in that time he has traveled fast. He is just the type of man, given his deserts, who will do that exact thing. He came to Los Angeles after four years' experience in the picture business in St. Louis and secured employment at the Auditorium as assistant doorman. He passed rapidly through the grades of doorman and assistant manager of the Broadway, being promoted to his present position upon the resignation of the manager to accept a position in another field.

"RIALTO" A HAPPY THOUGHT

There seems to be no difference of opinion about Rialto being a suitable name for S. L. Rothapfel's new theater, which will replace Hammerstein's Victoria at Forty-second street and Broadway. One evening in the early spring the renowned managing director was dining with W. H. Rudolph and they were discussing the policy and prospects of the new venture. "Rudolph," he said, "did you ever hear of a theater called the Rialto?" Rudolph admitted that he had not. "Do you know of any better name for a Broadway theater?" Again Rudolph replied "No." "All right, that's what we'll rechristen the Victoria," said the director and he had no reason to alter his decision.

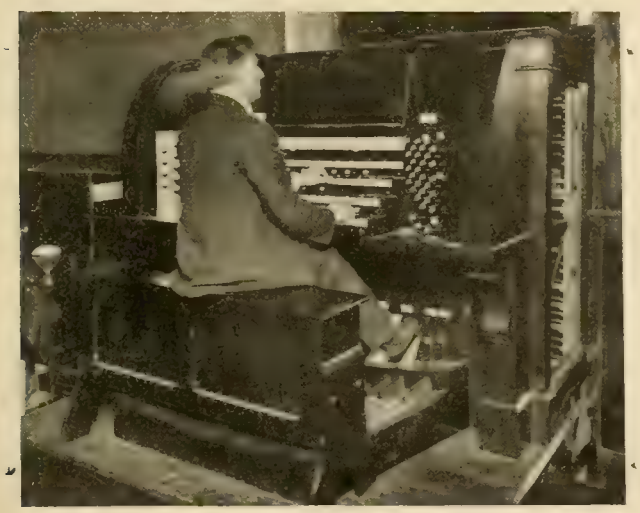
Tally's Feature House

A Leading Los Angeles Picture Theater That Possesses Distinction.

YOU don't talk with Thomas L. Tally, the owner of this fine picturehouse, one minute before you realize that it is in his magnificent organ that lies his chief pride. It is said of this instrument that it is the largest theater pipe organ in the world—and it was built in Los Angeles. Mr. Tally's instructions to the maker were that it should be the best money could buy. In size it is of four manuals. At the left of the stage and running back for many feet is the swell organ. Opposite it is the great organ. The choir organ is back of the stage. At the right of the entrance is the echo organ—this latter alone cost $7,000. Over the keyboard is a harp that cost a thousand dollars. Near it are chimes that cost a similar amount.

Thomas L. Tally.

The console is of mahogany and is 6 feet high, 6½ feet wide and 6 feet deep. By the pressing of a key the different organs may be linked together. At the instrument the day the World man visited Tally's was Percival Garrett. He was too much occupied in following "Fanchon" to do any talking; his work spoke for itself, however. Wonderful tone has this great organ over which he presides; to listen to it is a treat, entertainment separate and apart from that in search of which a picture follower goes to a theater. Complementary to the instrument is a nine-piece orchestra.



Console of Great Organ at Tally's.

Tally's uses the Paramount program, each subject running a full week. The house contains 900 seats. The prices of admission are 10, 20 and 30 cents. On the day of our visit Miss Pickford in "Fanchon the Cricket," was the feature, and the house was filled, with a line outside the door. Mr. Tally said this was a fair example of what happened at each of the nine shows given daily when Miss Pickford is the star, the theater being opened at 10:30 instead of 12, the usual hour.

The high ceiling of Tally's contains four large illuminated stained glass panels in the center. On the sides are sixteen Billikens in windows faintly illuminated in bluish green. Over the screen between the showing of pictures is a green plush curtain. At each side of the stage is a large window, with small panes, faintly illuminated and decorated with draped curtains. At each side of the house are four pendant lamps, hanging from the top of a low-roofed arch extending down each side. Additional light comes from twenty-eight indirect lamps set in the ceiling.

There are 100 loge chairs at the rear, all in wicker and comfortable. Seymour Tally, the son of the owner, is the house manager, and he is assisted by James S. Randall, advertising manager. Picture men visiting Los Angeles should not overlook Tally's.

Miller's Theater, Los Angeles.

HERE'S a motion picture theater that on four occasions recently has shown a feature for two consecutive weeks and that also "once in a while, when there is an extra good attraction, runs a midnight matinee," as Exhibitor Fred A. Miller explained. Usually Miller's puts on seven shows each day, from 11 to 11. The prices of admission are 10, 20 and 30 cents in the evening and 10 and 20 cents in the afternoon. At present there are 714 seats, but Mr. Miller will shortly extend his stage and install 186 additional chairs. The service of the house is Fox features, accompanied by a serial. For twenty weeks Mr. Miller used "The Exploits of Elaine," changing each week even where his feature was held for the second week. He says it is a fact that quite a number came back the second week of the larger subject in order to see the continuing episode, but Mr. Miller is not enthusiastic over the advisability of the policy. The house is showing the Vitagraph's big serial "The Goddess."

Fred A. Miller.

Mr. Miller is a believer in advertising. He spends on an average of two or three hundred dollars a week in newspaper advertising. With a stereopticon he throws on the side of a large and high building the announcements of his house. When the jitneys first began operations in Los Angeles Mr. Miller employed them to carry at their back an advertisement of his show. He does not depend on his own neighborhood for his patronage; he brings customers from all over the city, having a large automobile clientele.

Miller's has been built about a year and a half. The music is provided by a Fotoplyer. The pictures are shown on a Mirror screen, the only one in the city proper. The projection is on Power machines employing direct current. Mr. Miller uses neither rectifiers or economizers; and, as he truly says, he gets an excellent picture. Young women are employed as ushers, they are garbed alike. The proprietor says he has found them very satisfactory, and especially helpful in the event of a sudden illness on the part of one of the women patrons.

Miller's Theater—Interior View.

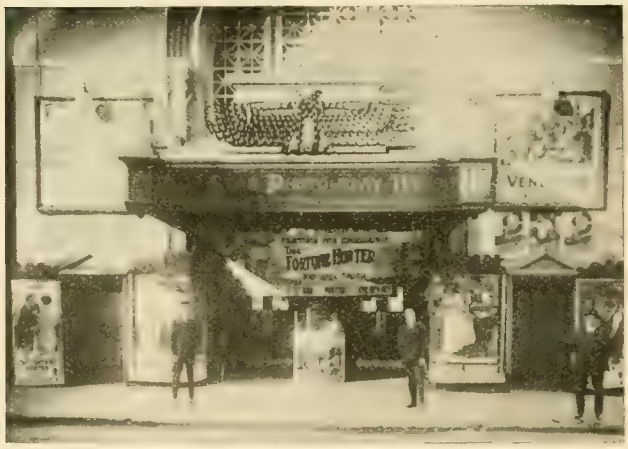
Indirect lighting is used. Two 24-inch exhaust fans aid in providing excellent ventilation. A lobby 100 feet long and 17 feet wide is attractively decorated with flowers. There are also a number of settees for the comfort of patrons. There is also a sanitary drinking fountain supplying ice water.

Kahn & Greenfield Circuit

Operators of Four Big San Francisco Picture Houses That Are Making Good.

THE Kahn & Greenfield Circuit, which operates four houses, is one of the leading concerns of its kind in San Francisco. Three of its houses are in what is known as the Fillmore street district, and all within a few blocks of one another, while the third is in the Mission district, another outlying business section. A fifth house was conducted for a time, but this has been disposed of.

Mr. L. L. Kahn is general manager of the circuit and has for many years been actively identified with the moving picture industry here. He is ably assisted by Robert Abraham, who attends to most of the booking of films for the four houses, and who has charge of the Idle Hour Theater in the Mission. The New Fillmore Theater, which is one of the finest moving picture houses in the city, is under the direct management of Joseph E. Levin, while Mr. Kahn and Louis Greenfield give personal attention to the Progress and All-Star Theaters.



All Star Photo-play House, San Francisco.

Each of these four houses is equipped with Powers Cameragraphs of the latest types, the New Fillmore having three, while each of the others have two. Music is furnished in each by American Photoplayers, manufactured in Berkeley. Each of the houses has a seating capacity of 1,000, except the Idle Hour, which is smaller. Steps are being taken, however, to add a balcony in this house, and when this is done it will be the largest in the circuit, with a capacity of 1,800.

The policy adopted for the New Fillmore Theater is to show the finest features procurable, such as have proven a success in the downtown houses. At the Progress Theater, which is located near the New Fillmore, a feature program is shown, with an occasional serial. At the All-Star Theater the Metro productions are being strongly featured, while Paramount pictures are used extensively at the Idle Hour. This concern has recently made arrangements for showing the V-L-S-E, Inc., releases at its various houses, and is ever on the lookout for big productions.

Sam Gordon Talks of Early Days

Manager of Lincoln Theater Dates Back From the Quake—When Picture Shows Were Officially Unknown.

ONE of the pioneer exhibitors of San Francisco is Sam Gordon, of the Lincoln Theater, at Sixth avenue and Clement, and the Broadway. The city was in ruins, following the fire, when in the early summer of 1906 Mr. Gordon and Harry Sack came into town from Chicago, with the intention of opening a picture show. A location was secured on Post street, between Fillmore and Steiner. Troubles multiplied when attempts were made to open, as there was no such business known as that of moving pictures. Even after the police department had given a permit to install paraphernalia the Board of Public Works withheld, for a time, permission to operarate. Mr. Gordon says it was in July when the house was opened. The National Theater, owned by D. J. Grauman, was situated on Standard street at the time. A vacant lot now marks the place where Gordon & Sack opened their first house, and which Mr. Gordon believes was the first straight picture show in San Francisco.

"Immediately after the opening of the Post street house, which contained about 300 seats, Alborn & Lea opened the Territorial, on Mission street," said Mr. Gordon. "This contained about 275 seats. It is in operation to this day, being now known as the Sherman. Then Mr. Lesser, the father of Sol Lesser, the exchange man of today, opened the Union, on Mission street. Turner & Dahnken, who, following the fire, had been operating a penny arcade in Fillmore street, installed a motion picture show instead. Then followed the Liograph and also the Scenograph, both on Post street. After these, with Maurice Stutz, I opened the Shell Nickelodeon, in Fillmore street. Then the picture shows came fast.

"We had trouble in getting permits for beginning business at the Shell. It was realized, without organization, the exhibitors were helpless. I think it was in October, 1906, there was formed the first organization of exhibitors, which was known as the Moving Picture Association, with Mr. Lesser as president. Among the members were Messrs. Sack, Stutz, Bennie Michaels, who was about to open a place at the time, and Wiseman, of the Scenograph, who now has a house in Oakland. Interest slackened in the association. Then it was Mr. Rothschild organized the San Francisco League, and was elected president. This was later affiliated with the national league. Mr. Rothschild also was the organizer of the state league, when California was the only state in the west to be organized.

"The first big picture theater in San Francisco was owned by Alborn & Lea. It was the Mission, built for the speaking stage, but had not been successful. Alborn & Lea changed the name to the Grand and ran pictures and vaudeville for 5 and 10 cents. The house had nearly a thousand seats. It was about 1907 when it was turned over.

"In 1906 we paid $40 a week for two changes of two reels each. The films were not over 700 feet long, and these sometimes comprised three subjects. Most of these were Pathe. Some of the pictures we had in the early days would make a hit today. Do you remember the 'Mr. and Mrs. Jones' series in which appeared Florence Lawrence and a man, whose name I forget. I think he died about two years ago. We used to pack the house every night, and we could do the same today. I don't think there's as much real stuff in the three, four and five reelers today as we used to get in the old Biograph singles—you remember the Arthur Johnson pictures. I may be wrong, but I am strong on some of those early pictures."

D. J. Grauman Dates Back

Recalls the Time When He Used Hundred-feet Lengths With His Vaudeville Program.

INTERESTING details of the early days of the motion picture in San Francisco were given by D. J. Grauman in his offices in the Empress Theater Building. Mr. Grauman was one of the first to open a star vaudeville show and in connection with his program to use motion pictures.

"In those early days," said Mr. Grauman, "we had to buy film outright. The subjects were imported mostly from London and Paris. A film measuring a hundred feet in length was considered a wonderfully big picture. The average was about forty to fifty feet and cost about thirty-five to forty-five cents a foot. We had some very good subjects. The French pictures in those days were all trick films. One, I remember distinctly, was 'A Trip to the Moon' (a Melies subject). It was very funny. If reproduced today the public would all be glad to see it. It would be a big drawing card. At the store I would run my four or five little films a week. The following week I would substitute some others, and then revert to those of the previous week.

"After a while other people came into the business and were glad to buy my films. Some came in from the country. I generally sold my old films, pretty well scratched up, at from fifteen to twenty cents a foot. There was, at that time, a firm in London turning out remarkably fine stuff. I don't recall the name of the concern. Eventually Edison began making pictures, but they were so very poor I quit using them. The Edison subjects were the first American make I remember.

"As time went on, of course, the length of subjects increased. I was very hungry to buy all the pictures that were produced. I was the only man in San Francisco that had the imported stuff, and I would buy unsight and unseen. The reels used to come in little tin cans about two inches in diameter; three inches would be large. I recall the letters were raised on the tin.

"The business up to date has been very great. There are good bright men among the producers and manufacturers, but they have yet a whole lot to learn, and they will learn it. A great deal of money is wasted in the production of pictures. Some men don't care how much of O. P. money they spend—yes, other people's money—you have got it right. There is needless extravagance where a great deal of money might be saved to the manufacturer.

"Here, only lately, I could have bought a third interest in a big subject while it was being made—it is known now out here as 'The Clansman'—for $30,000. I positively turned it down. My opinion now is that the picture will make a million dollars. At the Imperial I was the first man in San Francisco who took Famous Players subjects. The Imperial has been showing that brand now for nearly two years.

"I have been giving consideration to a plan for purchasing output, of going to New York to open offices. Say, for instance, a producer gets out a picture that costs him $40,000. My idea would be to buy him outright with a hundred per cent. profit so that with that subject he would have no further bother. My idea of the sum necessary to do this right would be five million dollars cash capital paid in—that's none too much to handle such a proposition. I have friends here, bankers and others, who want me to do this. Of course, if we go into it it will be on a liberal scale. When the stuff is shown we will say, 'What's your price?' We don't figure on dickering. We know the territory and we don't count on Europe. I wouldn't touch such a proposition for less than the sum named. The successful working out of the plan would create an inducement for the making of big pictures."

Mr. Grauman admits he has made money in the show business. At one time he owned seven vaudeville houses. "The exhibiting business is now overdone," continued Mr. Grauman. "There are too many men in it who came in with small means and who are satisfied with a small profit. In time to come, though, the big fellows are going to absorb everything. I have been one of those who always wants to keep prices up. I believe in getting 25 and 50 cents and $1, if you can, but when the competition gets so strong what are you going to do? The biggest money I ever got in the Imperial in one week was $7,800. That was with 'The Sea Wolf,' at 30 cents flat at night and 20 cents matinees. The expenses for the week were $2,280. If I hadn't been crazy I would have kept it for the second week and done the same amount of business."

Manager Partington

Hand that Guides the Imperial Is No Novice at the Exhibition of Motion Pictures.

ONE of the most glowing examples of the advancement made in the past few years in the art of presenting motion pictures is to be found in the Imperial Theater, one of San Francisco's most beautiful houses of entertainment, and one patronized by the most critical and exclusive theatergoers. This splendid house was opened three years ago, under the management of Mr. J. L. Partington, who still guides its destinies, and at this time several departures were made from the established custom of conducting moving picture theaters. Chief among these was that of presenting a program for an entire week, and one that was considered a hazardous undertaking. That the venture proved eminently successful is amply evidenced by the continued success of the Imperial, which has maintained this policy ever since, breaking away from it only on occasions when unusual success attends any particular presentation and a longer showing is made.

J. L. Partington.

Another revolutionary change made by Mr. Partington at that time was along the line of raising prices to meet the standard of the production offered. Most houses were showing pictures then at five cents, a few at ten cents, but none at higher rates, except on rare occasions. Prices of ten, twenty and thirty cents were inaugurated here and have been maintained ever since.

Mr. Partington realizes that the present day amusement seeker demands much in addition to a pleasing program, and has always made it a point to keep the house fully abreast of the times in point of equipment. Some marked changes in the environment of the Imperial have been made of late and one cannot enter the house without noticing the ear marks of distinction. A maid awaits lady patrons in an elegantly appointed ladies' parlor, fitted with rich furnishings, reclining chairs, dressing tables and the like. An emergency medical department is another feature found in but few theaters in this country. A large smoking room is also to be found for the convenience of gentlemen. One of the most pleasing and lately added innovations is a beautiful stage set, changed from time to time, which is a fitting frame for any picture.

Manager Partington has introduced so many ideas in the local exhibiting field that he has the honor of having many imitators in the manner of presenting programmes and the Imperial Theater is looked upon as a representative San Francisco institution. He gives the business the closest personal attention possible and is familiar with every detail. He is one of the youngest men on the Coast to fill a position of this importance, but the fact that he has made good is clearly shown by the manner in which he sticks to the manager's chair at the Imperial.

Harry Leonhardt

Old Time New York Vaudeville Man Guides the Destinies of Fox Films in the Far West.

IT IS all-around capacity Harry Leonhardt brings to his work as the general western representative of the Fox Film Corporation, with offices in Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles In the first place Mr. Leonhardt has had a showman's experience; that counts for more and more these days in the film busines. Not only does he know how to build up an exhibitor's business but he possesses the art of teaching another man how to do just that. He is a believer in the dignified, in the artistic, dressing of a lobby, for one thing. Likewise is he a strong advocate of advertising pictures in a community. He believes, too, that every exhibitor should have a comprehensive knowledge of what is being done by all manufacturers.

Harry Leonhardt.

"The public is picture-wise," said Mr. Leonhardt. "You will meet men and women who know more about pictures than do some exhibitors—that is, they see more pictures. It is becoming more difficult all the time for one to keep up with increasing production, but it is essential. That's what puts a man in touch with his public, and the one who does that is pretty sure to succeed."

Mr. Leonhardt was the first man called upon by F. F. Proctor to make a study of pictures. He it was who as a result of that study originated the tableaus vivants at the Fifth Avenue Theater in New York, which incidentally attracted the attention of the daily press. One of the first of the subjects to be so treated was "Hearts Adrift." Gene Sothern was garbed as had been Miss Pickford in the leading role. The scene selected for reproduction was that where the little mother jumps into the volcano with her babe. The attic scene in "A Good Little Devil" was another chosen for reproduction.

Mr. Leonhardt has been in his present position since the beginning of the year. He has been sucessful. He is at home in any company. He does not hesitate to adopt what he may believe to be the correct policy, even if temporarily it may prove to be unpopular. It has been his aim to gain the confidence of the exhibitor—of the smaller as well as the more powerful—and to stick to his agreements, whether these be with the weak or the strong.

The Fox ompany is preparing to do much entertaining during the exhibitors' convention in San Francisco on July 13. While Mr. Leonhardt by reason of his prominence as an Elk will be compelled to be in Los Angeles at the B. P. O. E. convention just prior to that of the exhibitors up north, he will be in the bay city in time to greet the visiting motion picture men—and those who know him best assert that he understands a lot about the art of entertaining.

The Photoplayer, Its Inventors and the Manufacturing Plant.

WHAT most impressed one layman in a visit to the factory of the American Photo Player Company at Berkeley, Cal., the home of the Fotoplayer, is the thoroughness with which the instrument is made—the attention of detail, the care bestowed on the cabinet work. It appears to make no difference whether the particular part is to be exposed to view or whether it is to be forever concealed from all but the man who may have occasion to get into the interior, the polish and the joining are always of piano quality. H. A. Van Valkenburg, the superintendent of the factory and the chief inventor of the Fotoplayer, who showed the visitor over the plant, seemed to consider this angle of the making of the instrument a matter to be taken for granted—that the company's claim on the attention of motion picture exhibitors rested on the musical qualities alone.

THE FOTOPLAYER

ASSEMBLING ROOM

VIEW OF PLANT

Mr. Van Valkenburg called particular attention to the exclusive double-tracker music changing device. By means of this the operator may change the upper roll while the lower is being played, or vice versa; or he may instantly transfer from one to the other, reverting to the first as the changing scenes on the screen may indicate. This scheme transfers the roll music as applied to pictures from the realm of automatic to that of appropriate and incidental, making it an accompaniment in fact as well as in name, and avoiding any break in the playing, of leaving the house without music. Another factor standing out is the use throughout the instrument of lead tubing in the connections, the idea being to give as great strength as possible, so that the Fotoplayer may withstand the strain of a twelve-hour run each day.

In the construction of the Fotoplayer three woods predominate—poplar, maple and oak. As the instruments are sent to all parts of the world great care is used in the curing or seasoning of the wood. In the mill on the main floor there are great piles of lumber, each with its date of entrance plainly marked. Before the wood is put into the construction each part is dipped five times in a weather-proofing solution, fortifying against climatic changes or influences.

The factory of the company contains about 30,000 square feet of space. On the ground floor are the mill, assembling room, drill room, shipping room and seasoning room. On the second floor are the offices, the pneumatic, finishing and stock rooms, another assembling room, and the machine shop. Since the fire of two years ago the company has installed the latest machinery. It is over four and a half years since the manufacture of the Fotoplayer was begun. The officers of the American Photo Player Company are H. J. Werner, president; M. J. Samuels, vice-president; P. G. Jacobus, secretary and treasurer.

In the assembling room at the time the visitor was present was a Style 40 instrument in course of assembling. (There are five styles—30, 35, 40, 45 and 50.) Mr. Van Valkenburg seated himself at the keys and gave a demonstration of the capabilities of the instrument, this particular style of which is 16 feet 6 inches long, 5 feet 8 inches in height and 4 feet 9 inches in width. The inventor called attention to the fact that the rolls were of the ordinary eighty-eight note player-piano music, procurable anywhere. He tried all the many effects, pointing out that the blower installed independently of the instrument and away from it avoided mechanical sounds; that in the cases proper there was no machinery, barring two wind motors. For vaudeville purposes the entire instrument may be played by hand; a special attachment permits the pianist to play base or snare drum and cymbals with the feet.

The Fotoplayer does the work of a six-piece orchestra, and does it well. Exhibitors who attended the National League convention in Chicago in 1912 will remember that the exhibit which compelled the greatest attention on the convention floor of the La Salle Hotel was one of the early instruments of the American Photoplayer Company. The ease with which this instrument could be operated was demonstrated by H. A. Van Valkenburg. As is known to most exhibitors, the instrument has since been greatly improved. It now ranks along with the other music for the picture devices and is an ornament as well as part of the entertainment of the modern picture house.

Exhibitors who attend the San Francisco convention will have an opportunity to visit the plant of the American Photoplay company, views of which are given herewith. There all the workings of the instrument will be shown and the construction fully explained. The company will also be represented on the floor of the Exposition Hall, where the various styles of Fotoplayer will be shown and demonstrated. Arrangements have been made by the company to accommodate all visitors who wish to visit the factory and all who take advantage of this opportunity will receive a hearty welcome. Both the Van Valkenbergs are good entertainers and visitors may be assured of having a pleasant time when in their company.

Photoplay Authors' League

Organization of Scenario Writers and Editors formed on the Coast in Flourishing Condition.

By William E. Wing, Editor of The Script.

PHOTOPLAY writing is the only new art, in connection with literature, which has appeared for a century or more. Today the molder of screen stories is practically, the only writer who is devising original material. And yet, until recently, the scenarist who occupies this unique position was a mere suppliant, humbly offering his wares to the film manufacturer. Without standing of any character, he was merely a bubble on the commercial river of dollars. To accord him scant attention was an honor duly conferred. Other writers and authors looked upon him with pity as this Ammonite sacrificed his "child" to Moloch. He was long suffering and he suffered much, both financially and mentally. Some of him exclaimed that the only relief was in the hereafter.

Then, with one accord, the photoplaywright assumed his rightful position, for the Photoplay Authors' League was formed, and the prodigal no longer was a homeless wanderer. Instead, he and his clan took on the dignity afforded by a great international organization.

In one short year the P. A. L., composed of professional scenario writers of the world, has forced the new art from absolute obscurity into high light; has dealt death blows to the majority of fake photoplay schools, the insidious institutes of evil which rob the poor and illiterate; has given impetus to the Willis bill for photoplay copyright; has made an insistent demand for payment from the magazines which calmly appropriate original film plots for fiction purposes; has afforded for the first time absolute protection for writers treated unjustly by purchasing concerns, and, through publication of The Script, has also given vital and and comfort to many PALS throughout the world.

Working always for the welfare and good name of the film business as a whole; acting in harmony with the leading manufacturers who have the wisdom to encourage able writers of screen plays, and setting itself to attack every evil which threatens the photoplay art or its friendly branches the Photoplay Authors' League and its official publication, The Script, seeking no worshippers for the past, insists upon "pointing with pride" to the future.

The P. A. L. is engaged in a loftier mission than that of a pilgrims' crusade to some ancient shrine. It represents the spirit of tomorrow in filmdom, for photoplay writing is the foundation of all film success, both as regards art and commercialism.

San Francisco Screen Club

Enthusiastic Organization of Motion Picture Men Is Deservedly Popular.

THE Screen Club of San Francisco is the only social organization of exchange men, exhibitors, producers, authors and screen artists in the Exposition City, and, being alone in its field, has been a wonderful success since its formation last Fall. It was brought into life largely as a result of the custom of local film men to meet at luncheon each Saturday at noon, and stands for those sound principles of good-fellowship that make the moving picture business distinctive.

The club was formed on the evening of October 19, when a meeting was held in the assembly hall of the Phelan Building, and temporary offices were opened in the Investors' Building. Officers were chosen at once and plans were made for a grand ball through which the organization hoped to attract attention and to secure funds for fitting up clubrooms. This event was widely advertised and was a success beyond the wildest dreams of club members, being attended by almost 10,000 persons. City and State officials were present, as well as leading moving picture stars, and while the expenses of the lavish entertainment were heavy, a neat sum was cleared.

The search for clubroms was unsuccessful until recently, when ideal quarters were secured in the Tivoli Theater Building on Eddy street, and here the club is now housed amid very pleasant surroundings. The rooms are furnished with elegant lounging chairs, settees, billiard tables, card tables, reading tables where the latest moving picture magazines are to be found, a buffet, player piano and graphophone.

The membership has grown rapidly since these quarters have been opened and steps have been taken toward reducing the monthly dues to attract still others. Many of the prominent players from nearby studios, notably from the Essanay plant at Niles, are members and when these gather in the clubrooms there are lively times.

Much of the success of the organization has doubtless been due to the selection of officers. Sid Grauman, the president, has for years managed the Empress Theater, one of the leading vaudeville and moving picture houses here, and is one of the most successful and best liked men in the business. He is known throughout the entire country and makes an ideal leader. Vice-president Charles Stillwell is well known here as an exhibitor, having for a time had charge of the Silver Palace Theater on Market street. He is now with the Nat. A. Magner Company, which conducts a large exchange in the Pacific Building, and is making as great a success as a distributor as he did as an exhibitor. Ralph L. Marks, who so ably fills the position of secretary, is not a new hand at work of this kind, having for a long time been secretary of the local Exhibitors' League. He is one of the proprietors of the Acme Theater on Stockton street and has long been active in organization work. Treasurer Joseph Huff is the manager of two big houses on Market street, the Unique and Odeon, and is regarded as being one of the best informed men in this line of business. Hard Work is his middle name and it was due in a large measure to his efforts that the grand ball was made such a success. His care of the finances of the organization has pleased all and the position of treasurer is his as long as he will accept it.

San Francisco Operators' Union

Expert "Crank Turners" Have a Prosperous and Influential Organization.

WHAT is claimed to be the oldest organization of operators in the United States is that of the Motion Picture Operators' Union of San Francisco, with offices at 68 Haight street. Its beginning was on June 23, 1904, a matter of eleven years ago—and that's a long while in the picture business. On the first of May last the union numbered 114 members. Of course, the opening of the Panama-Pacific Exposition has brought a measure of unusual prosperity to the organization, inasmuch as there are thirty-eight of the members at work within the fair grounds—which, by the way, is more than 90 per cent. of the total number so employed within the gates. These thirty-eight, as Business Agent L. G. Dolliver pointed out to a visitor at the union's headquarters, are all receiving the regular scale of $5 a day—none less and some more.

The working hours of the operators employed within the fair grounds average from about 1 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Some of the government exhibits are shown on the screen scarcely more than a half hour a day. Most of the foreign nations have an accumulation of film on the acquisition of which a small fortune has been expended. The numbers of reels range all the way from fifteen to thirty-five. As a rule, not over four of

San Francisco Board of Trade

How the Picture Men of the Gate City Solve Business Problems

ORGANIZED last November, the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco is continuing in its efforts to further the initial aims of the body—to place the exchange business of northern California on a more stable basis, to protect the men permanently engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures as opposed to the few who follow it more or less spasmodically and the still fewer who at times are not overscrupulous as to meeting their obligations.

The organization of the board is due to the initiative of Tom North, at the time the representative of George Kleine Attractions for three western states, ably backed by J. Wallen, then of the Warner Exchange, but now in charge of the Universal's Los Angeles office; Maurice L. Markowitz, of the California Film Exchange, and O. V. Traggardh, of the Union Film Exchange. Maurice L. Asher, a San Francisco attorney and a motion picture enthusiast, much interested in the doings of the film men, was invited to attend one of the preliminary meetings. His suggestion as to the advisability of the body becoming duly incorporated was acted upon. When the election of officers was reached Mr. Asher was chosen secretary and attorney. The other officers are: President, Mr. Markowitz; vice-president, J. R. Crone, of the Mutual; treasurer, Mr. Traggardh; manager, R. E. Stebbins.

The board has opened an office in Room 620 of the Merchants National Bank Building. The members of the organization are the George Kleine Attractions, All-Star Feature Distributors, Apex Features, Fox Film Corporation, California Film Exchange, Pathe Film Exchange, Globe Film Exchange, Golden Gate Film Exchange, Independent Film Exchange, Nat A. Magner Company, Mutual Film Corporation, Progressive Motion Picture Corporation, Union Film and Supply Company, United Film Service and Blinkhorn Photoplays Corporation.

"On account of the encroachments of the small feature men and other persons interested in the motion picture rental business and the great competition that had arisen, it was deemed necessary to form some sort of coalition or combination partly to educate new comers to the fact that all is not gold that glitters," said Manager Stebbins. "Naturally the older exchanges had had their bitter lessons and experiences. Of course, there had been considerable feeling between the strangers and the old-timers, and it became necessary first to eliminate this, after which logic could be brought to bear. At the meeting on November 1 it was agreed to send word to all exhibitors that beginning November 16 all bills would be payable on the Tuesday of the succeeding week after which service had been rendered. Any delinquent was to be put on a c. o. d. basis in the discretion of the exchange. This, however, was not adhered to, and in a majority of cases two weeks' credit were extended before making use of the c. o. d. privilege.

"During the months that have passed since the inauguration of this policy thousands of dollars have been lost to the affiliated exchanges through the courtesy and good will extended. At each monthly meeting of the board the discrepancies were discussed, with many suggestions as to remedial measures. It became necessary that some system be devised not inimical to the exhibitor, but at the same time of a protective nature as regards the exchangemen. At a meeting on April 20 it was decided to notify all exhibitors that after May 24 payment would be asked for film on its delivery. We believe this will work to the advantage of the exhibitor of standing and responsibility. We believe it will work to the disadvantage only of the few who at times are prone to evade their obligations."

Manager Stebbins' prognostications regarding the "cash on delivery" plan did not prove as practical or popular as he believed it would. On the contrary, it raised such a storm among the exhibitors that the Board decided to abandon the plan entirely. The business is being transacted upon an equitable and satisfactory basis now and everyone is happy.

these will be shown on any one day. A number of the private concerns intend at the close of the exposition to take their motion picture exhibits on tour, and in these instances the operators already are under engagement to accompany the show. The members of the local union welcome this prospect of added employment.

The San Francisco operators are working under an agreement with the exhibitors. The period of the contract is indefinite, continuing until such time as either party shall serve formal notice of intention to open it up or terminate it. While there may have been times when the exhibitors were without an organization the operators have observed the agreement and it has continued in full effect.

San Francisco is one of the very few cities where the operators get one day off in seven. "I know of no other city, where the theaters are open on Sunday, where this rule obtains," said Business Agent Dolliver. "Our scale, as I told you, is $5 a day, but we give our employers the service. When the day off was first broached the exhibitors were strongly opposed to it, being under the impression that an operator could not successfully conduct six different projection rooms. We have demonstrated, however, that it can be done. I think the exhibitors now are satisfied that the day off is the best thing for all concerned. Of course, the regular operator always works on Sunday. We have never had a lockout and we have never had a strike in our eleven years of existence."

The officers of the union are: President, A. F. Howell; vice-president, Charles Sweeney; recording secretary, A. L. Noriega; treasurer, C. E. Jones; financial secretary, Hugh Brawley; business agent, L. G. Dolliver.

President Beach

California Exhibitors Proud of Their New Leader.

THE rapid strides that have been made by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California since the last convention at San Francisco has been highly pleasing to all concerned and much of the credit for the organization work that has been carried on since that time is being justly given to President, H. L. Beach, of Berkeley. The membership of the League has been greatly increased since that time, and, encouraged by the excellent work that has been done, many exhibitors who never before were interested in the organization are forwarding their applications.

H. L. Beach.

President Beach is a member of the firm of Beach & Krahn, which conducts the Lorin Photo-play and Strand Theater at Berkeley. These are regarded as being model houses and illustrate what may be accomplished when careful attention is paid to details. Mr. Beach is a strong advocate of purity in entertainment and backs up his convictions by booking only those productions that reach a high standard of quality. He welcomes criticism of his programs and at the Strand Theater has been co-operating with the mothers' organizations to secure programs at regular intervals especially adapted for children. When unjust criticism of the moving picture industry is expressed, however, he is ready at once to devote both time and energy to correct wrong impressions, as numerous articles in the daily press bearing his name will testify.

The task of bringing the exhibitors of California together, which is being accomplished so satisfactorily by Mr. Beach, is one that presents many difficulties. In the first place the great size of the State makes it a much more difficult task than in the East, as California is larger than the States of New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, Ohio, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Delaware and Rhode Island combined, while the population is less than that of the city of New York alone. Then, too, there is a feeling of rivalry between certain sections that has been difficult to overcome and it has remained for a man of the qualifications of Mr. Beach to bring exhibitors together on a common footing and make them realize the value of co-operation.

The Static Club.

Enthusiastic Organization of Cameramen at Los Angeles Has Membership of One Hundred.

By Capt. "Jack" Poland, Editor of Static Flashes.

THE Static Club of America, Los Angeles, California, is the title of one of the most progressive young organizations of the Pacific Coast, identified with the motion picture industry. The membership to the club is limited exclusively to active cameramen showing clean and healthy records of efficiency with real producing film organizations. The objects of the club are to enjoy social and educational advantages through personal meetings of cinematographers with each other at the club, and to advance the cause of screen photography by a more intimate knowledge of the various details through lectures that will increase the practical efficiency of cameramen, the "men who make the movies," as their slogan mentions.

As the motion picture industry continues steadily to advance, cameramen of the efficiency class are becoming a necessity. The producing director who believes in himself and his art knows the necessity of having as his first aid a cameraman who can carry out the objects of the picture to be filmed. It is to his interests and those of his employers to secure the highest class of photographic results at the least possible expense and to create the picture of quality.

One of the first ideas instilled into the minds of cameramen applying for membership in The Static Club of America is that of efficiency, which is the motto of the club. Advancement and progress through personal ability is the watchword, and operating the club along such lines of development the cameramen members are doing much to build up their own interests.

Another important object hoped for and steadily being worked for by members of this club is to have the names of cameramen appear on the screen as the photographer, following the cast of characters of the picture. This credit has already been granted in a number of instances by the most notable directors producing pictures. The boys expect eventually to obtain this credit through the efficiency system. Believing that by studying how and by aiding in producing the most noteworthy effects in screen photography they become more valuable as associates of their directors and to the interests of their employers, the members of The Static Club of America are steadily and persistently forging ahead. They want only real cameramen recognized, and the aim of the club is to have only the real cinematographers as its members, so that when called on for efficiency experts in camera work they can unhesitatingly recommend reliable photographers.

Interior of Static Club.

The Static Club.

At the present time every member of The Static Club is employed by reliable producing companies, and the membership list of applications continues with the best class of photographers seeking admission to the club. The bonds of good-fellowship are further cemented by social events, dances, receptions at the clubhouse, an annual ball, and monthly banquets at leading cafes of Los Angeles, to which members of the motion picture industry, newspaper and publicity men and friends are invited. The prestige of The Static Club and the popularity of its members is attested by courtesies extended the organization by other clubs, a recent feature being a notable entertainment given The Static Club by The Press Club of Los Angeles, which was attended by many notables in film and press circles.

Officers of the Static Club.

The time has now come when manufacturers, exhibitors, directors and others realize the importance of the cameramen, the men of ability who can aid and offer suggestions in screen photography because of their efficiency. It is a well known fact that the most notable producing directors are usually ready to give their cameramen credit for artistic photographic effects.

The pictures showns here present an exterior view of the cosy bungalow retreat and clubhouse of The Static Club of America, overlooking the beautiful Echo Park, at 1839 Santa Cruz street, Los Angeles; the interior of the clubhouse showing the big living room with huge fireplace and comfortable lounging chairs, with the player piano in the background; immediately adjoining is the library and reading room. Here are found all the latest trade journals, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, daily papers and periodicals. Others rooms provide the secretary's office, "developing room," and billiard and pool room.

The club owns its furniture and equipment, is entirely out of debt, and is further kept before the trade public through the weekly publication of Static Flashes, a bright, interesting and original newspaper, which is issued under the auspices of the club.

Officers of The Static Club of America are E. G. Ullman, president; William J. Piltz, vice-president; William C. Foster, secretary; S. S. Norton, treasurer. The directors are H. C. Neumann, of the Selig Polyscope company; Homer A. Scott, of the Jesse Lasky Feature Films; William C. Foster, superintendent of laboratories Universal, a charter member and expert cameraman who retains his activities in the club; E. J. Vallejo, William J. Piltz, chief cameraman L-KO Motion Picture Company; S. S. Norton, E. G. Ullman, Anthony Nagy, of the Universal; J. D. Jennings, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and Allen M. Davey. The club has a membership of about one hundred.

Famous Players to Build.

Big Feature Company Will Erect New Studio in Los Angeles With All Modern Improvements.

WITH the departure of the Famous Players companies from Los Angeles and the sale of the studios of the Fiction Pictures, Inc., effected mutually by the Famous Players and Lasky Companies, the California activities of the Famous Players Film Co. are temporarily terminated. However, this must not be considered any more than a brief abandonment of the west as a producing ground for this concern. It is contemplated that next fall three companies will be sent to California by the Famous Players, where they will undoubtedly operate permanently. Adolph Zuckor, president of the Famous Players, is now in Los Angeles, where he has been for four or five weeks past, for the purpose of purchasing a large tract of favorable ground for the erection of three separate studios. The Famous Players Film Co. has maintained a studio on the Pacific Coast every winter and spring since its organization, and the satisfactory photographic and scenic results obtained by the western company have encouraged the Famous Players to expand their producing activities in Los Angeles next year.

Another factor that has actuated the Famous Players in the intention to perfect permanent studios on the Coast next fall and winter is the long duration of the present European war. Before the outbreak of the hostilities abroad, the Famous Players had concluded a policy of producing a number of elaborate feature subjects in the various countries of Europe each year. It is supposed that with the elimination of the possibility of producing pictures in Europe for some time to come, the Famous Players intend to culminate their plans for these massive productions in California. When the European film invasion was determined upon, a series of great spectacular subjects were secured, which it would now be difficult to produce in the East. These plays, however, will have ample productive opportunities, when the plans for the Famous Players' new Coast studios are matured.

ANDERSON RETURNS TO LASKY.

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces that Carl Anderson, formerly business manager of that concern who recently resigned to accept an important executive position elsewhere, will return to the Lasky Company today. Whitman Bennett, formerly press representative for the Lasky Company, has been assigned to the position formerly occupied by Mr. Anderson.

Mr. Anderson will be associated with the company in a new general administrative capacity based on his long association with the business.

Vitagraph Has Completed 3,000 Subjects.

And They Range from "The Life of Moses" to "The History of a Sardine Sandwich."

ACCORDING to a recent announcement, made by the Vitagraph Company of America, that company has completed three thousand subjects since it began business. These subjects, which have been one or more reels in length have touched on every conceivable subject and comedy, drama, tragedy and farce have all been portrayed.

It was stated by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, in making the announcement that the future plans of the company involved even more elaborate productions than those of the past.

"We plan," said the Commodore, "to touch fields that have as yet not been invaded by the camera. Take for instance our plan to visualize music. I feel that in producing this entirely new subject that we are opening the way for a new art, a combination of the highest in music with the finest in moving pictures."

In reviewing the work done by the company Commodore Blackton referred to the wide range of subjects.

"I find," he said, "in going over some of our earliest efforts that we have included about everything that possibly could be picturized. For instance I find that one of the films was entitled 'The History of a Sardine Sandwich,' while next to it is 'The Life of Moses' and 'Les Miserables.'

"While there is no disputing the fact that animated photography as an art, has improved wonderfully since its inception, a comparatively few years ago, every subject that we have completed could be placed on the screen tomorrow and would be in perfect shape for reproduction.

"During the coming years for the same length of time, according to our present plans we will turn out more than triple the amount of films that we have since the beginning of the company.

"At the present time we have eighteen companies working at our main studios in Brooklyn while our studios which are scattered about the country contain ten more. Each one of these companies completes a subject very rapidly and our yearly output has increased so tremendously that there is no real check to be placed on the coming productions.

"In placing a valuation on the films that we have turned out, I should say that it will amount to about $3,000,000 and this is a conservative estimate and does not include the cost of the production but is our valuation at market figures."

RIDGWELL A VITAGRAPH DIRECTOR.

George Ridgwell who has been an editor in the Scenario Department, last week joined the ranks of the directors of the Vitagraph Company, his first effort along this line being to produce "Old Good Fer Nothin," a one-reel rural comedy. Jay Dwiggins, Edwina Robbins, and Bobby Connelly had the leading parts in the play.

The advent of Ridgwell in the ranks of the directors follows a long career on the stage and in the moving picture field. For many years he was a noted singer in London where he is said to hold the record for continued appearances at the Palace Theater, where he had an engagement that lasted fourteen months.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

The Majestic Theater, Detroit, Mich.

Seats Rise in Tiers Resembling Ampitheater Style—Has Beautiful Promenade—2160 Seats in Auditorium.

SITUATED on Woodward avenue in the heart of Detroit is one of the greatest tributes to the stability of the motion picture art. It is the Majestic Theater. For 175 feet the new Majestic presents one of the most artistic fronts on Woodward avenue, and is a credit to the thoroughfare. The accompanying exterior picture gives a glimpse of the main entrance and the ornamental marquise, extending the full width of the sidewalk and affording protection to patrons who come with automobiles in inclement weather. In all the playhouse occupies a plot of ground 120 by 175 feet all of which has been used for the theater proper. The building is two stories in height and built of brick, steel and concrete, faced with glazed polychrome terra cotta treated in the modern architectural style. The main entrance, which is on Woodward avenue, has three stores on each side. The entrance is finished entirely with tile, marble and terra cotta in keeping with both the exterior and the interior of the building. The lobbies and the foyer, in addition to their beauty, are so spacious that the entire seating capacity of the theater can be accommodated in them. Also in addition to the foyer there is a recessed loggia or lounging room which is artistically furnished and which contains an open fireplace to add to its attractiveness and to provide a cozy atmosphere. On one side of the foyer are spacious retiring and rest rooms for women, with a maid in attendance, while on the other there is a large smoking room for men.

But it is in the theater itself that the greatest surprise awaits the picture patron. It is as though the ancient Roman amphitheater had been resurrected from dust covered ruins, transplanted bodily to Detroit, and reconstructed along modern lines. The theater proper is essentially a one-story house, but what would ordinarily be the balcony is not separated from the main floor; instead the seats start from the lower level and slope upward in unbroken tiers. It will thus be seen that this arrangement is itself novel, original and unique in the construction of picture theaters. In all there are 2,160 seats, every one of which has what is termed a perfect "sight line" on the stage, and is comfortable, being finished in leather, with soft but firm upholstering. There are boxes on both sides of the auditorium and across the center is a series of auto boxes, making a total of forty in all. The chairs in the boxes were designed especially for the Majestic and are made of reed, finished in old ivory. A modern stage, large enough to hold any of the mammoth road productions, fully equipped and with a beautiful setting takes the place of the Roman arena. On this stage is a 14 by 18 foot gold fibre screen which can be seen from every seat in the house and directly below the screen on the stage is seated the Majestic Symphony Orchestra.

From this part of the structure a good view can be obtained of the wonderful construction of the house as a whole, with its beautiful color schemes, of which ivory, gold and old rose are the basis of the interior decorations. Special features are the panels above the boxes, some magnificent tapestries and a frieze that completely encircles the auditorium. Sloping from the auto seats are the easy inclines by which entrance is gained to the theater. These and the well lighted passages which are used to gain access to the upper seats are carpeted in colors that match or blend with the surroundings. The lobby scheme harmonizes with that of the auditorium. Its mosaic and terrazzo flooring, marble, tile and wainscoting with marble trimmings, are magnificent specimens of the best workmanship. Beautiful hand colored portraits of film stars add another note of splendor. Harmonizing also with the complete theater are costly draperies, portieres, lambrequins, and an immense stage curtain. The same color effect has been carried out for the box office, lobby, foyers and throughout the theater, likewise the attire of the attendants in charge which blend with the surroundings. Another impressive feature is the system of lighting which is the semi-direct, self-suffusing light by which the house can be thrown into moonlight, sun, dawn, or gloom whenever the occasion and stage pictures require.

One thing which undoubtedly adds most to the comfort of theater patrons is clean, pure air. This has been solved in the Majestic in a manner worthy of note by the installation of a most complete air system. The cool air enters from beneath the seats and at the side of the boxes and the hot air is taken out through the openings above by exhaust fans so that a constant circulation of cool, invigorating breezes is assured. In the cold season the air is heated in a specially constructed chamber and then forced into the auditorium. In the summer the air is washed, then cooled in a large ice chamber and forced into the theater by powerful electric fans so that any temperature desired may be obtained. An attic ten feet in height between the ceiling of the theater and the roof also permits the proper cooling of this playhouse. The program is changed weekly, the house playing the V-L-S-E productions a full week. Matinees start at 2.30 P. M. and two evening performances start at 7 P. M. and 9 P. M. Sundays and holidays four performances are given. Another big drawing card of the Majestic is the musical program. Two large pipe organs are installed in the theater on each side of the auditorium. These organs are exceedingly large and comprehensive toned and conceded the best that could be purchased. The console placed in the center of the orchestra pit is connected electrically with the four great sections, great organ, small organ, pedal organ and mechanical organ and also constructed so that organ music, symphonic music and piano music can be readily played by the organist. During the early summer daily organ recitals will be held one-half an hour before the regular matinee show. Mr. Fruttchey, who is the theater organist, was formerly solo organist at Old Trinity Church, Broadway, at Wall street, New York City. In charge of the Majestic Symphony Orchestra of ten pieces is W. J. Hutton, for several years director of the Iowa State Band.

In charge of the projection is Alfred L. Pake. Pictures are projected by two Powers 6-A machines and the entire booth is equipped with every modern appliance known to scientific projection, including arc controllers, generators, etc. The Majestic Theater is a direct result of an ideal and the realization of its owners, A. Arthur Caille, president; Frank A. Wesbrook, vice-president; Henry J. Guthard, secretary-treasurer. All these gentlemen are well known in Detroit business circles. In addition to the Majestic theater Mr. Caille is also interested in the Maxine theater on Dix avenue which was completed a short time ago, and the new Addison Theater erected last fall on Woodward avenue. C. Howard Crane was the architect of the Majestic. The unique seating plan of the Majestic, embodying the old Roman idea, was Mr, Crane's suggestion.

On the managing staff of the theater is M. W. McGee, and his assistant, C. W. Graham, formerly of the Addison Theater, Detroit. Mr. McGee was chosen for this position because of his wide and varied experience in motion picture work. He has had twenty-four years' actual service in amusement work and entered the picture field years ago. In the early days he toured the country with Thomas A. Edison's first big venture, "The Life of an American Fireman," and later with "The Great Train Robbery." To his credit as a manager are several of the most flourishing houses in New York City and the East. This veteran amusement manager is also a member of the Screen Club in New York City.

AMERICAN THEATER, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

When Opened Two Years Ago It Had the Distinction of Being the Largest Theater in the Country Devoted to Motion Pictures—Has 3,000 Seats.

WITH a difference of but two days, the current issue of the Moving Picture World marks the second anniversary of the opening of the great American theater in Salt Lake City. The big motion picture house of the intermountain west threw open its doors to patrons for the first time on the evening of July 8, 1913. The Liberty Theater Company, builder of the American, did not overstate the case nor indulge in exaggeration merely for purposes of publicity when it openly stated that the American theater was at that time the largest theater in the country devoted exclusively to the exhibition of motion pictures. There is little doubt that the builders of the American were pioneers in the construction of permanent and elegant theaters of unusual size for the showing of motion pictures. The Liberty theater, which was opened about two years before the American was projected, stood for a long time as the finest theater in this region. It had a small pipe organ and a large orchestra, carpeted and tiled floors, stained glass windows, elaborate stucco front and all that sort of thing.

Of course, there was the usual tapping of foreheads when the promoters announced that they would build the American, making it the largest and most magnificent motion picture theater in the country, at that time, as mentioned above; but they went through with the project, and succeeded in spending upwards of $150,000 before the doors were opened. Three thousand persons pay admission to a picture house? Ridiculous! Such was the scoffing comment of the professional scoffing commentators hereabouts. Their shouts have long since died away; the jarring sounds have been drowned by the big symphony orchestra and grand concert organ under the direction of John J. McClellan, who, by the way, is the famous organist of the Mormon Tabernacle. A year or so ago, the management of the American theater passed from the hands of the Liberty Theater Company with the purchase of the interests of that concern by a group of Ogden capitalists and impresarios, including a veteran motion picture man, Harry A. Sims, who is at present managing director of the American. Under the management of Mr. Sims, the influence and popularity of the American continued to grow and thrive, until at present it is safe to state that it stands as one of the most prosperous houses in the country.

Improvements which at the time were considered innovations were installed in the American theater. Extraordinary provisions for lighting, heating and ventilating the immense auditorium were included in the architect's plans. These included the ventilating, refrigeration and air-washing plant, which occupies a large room beneath the stage and behind the orchestra shell; the big Kimball orchestral organ, played from a console in the center of the orchestra pit, which cost $8,000 and is the third largest organ in the city; the lighting system of concealed and inverted fixtures. The total seating capacity of the American is 3,000, divided into a grouping of 1,700 seats on the orchestra floor, 500 in the balcony, and 800 in the mezzanine boxes and main floor loges. The house is elaborately and tastefully decorated in stucco relief and staff and has many conveniences, such as drinking fountains, retiring rooms and parlors.

The Regent Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Rowland & Clark's New Picture House a Valuable Asset to Industry—Value of Property and Structure, $235,000.

THE REGENT THEATER, built by Messrs. Rowland & Clark, on Penn avenue, near Highland avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., is of absolutely fireproof construction, having a seating capacity of 1,000 and costing $85,000, erected on property valued at $150,000. The building has been erected with the object of providing all the latest ideas in moving picture theaters. The arrangement is unique.

Regent Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.

There are no balconies, but the full area of the auditorium is occupied by seats planned after the amphitheater style, the seats rising in tiers. The auditorium is entered through an entrance lobby 22 feet wide, from Penn avenue, which leads to a foyer under a tier of seats which are called "bleacher" seats. This foyer contains ample standing room, toilet rooms for women and men, manager's office, and storage room. Three entrances to the auditorium are secured from this foyer.

A beautiful fountain is located on the main axis of the center aisle of the auditorium. This fountain is built in a niche-like recess about 8 feet square and contains a bowl and basin, with running water, palms and live gold fish. The main figure is of bronze and was imported from Italy. Both the entrance lobby and foyer have marble wainscoting, and beautiful marble mosaic and terrazzo floors. Decorations of the entrance lobby are carried out in Italian Renaissance and the foyer is decorated in the Adams period. The auditorium is decorated in ivory and gold with the side wall panels in a tapestry imitation of ivory and lavender color tone. The style of embellishment for the main auditorium is Italian Renaissance.

The seats are of mahogany with leather upholstering. The aisles are carpeted. There has been installed in the main auditorium a beautiful rich tone organ at a cost of $10,000. The lighting for the entire building has been given close study, the auditorium being illuminated by means of indirect ceiling fixtures and sidewall brackets with silk shades, which diffuses the light. These sidewall brackets are kept constantly burning and provide sufficient light during the show, obviating the difficulty usually experienced in a poorly lighted auditorium in finding a seat. These lights have no effect upon projection. Together with side wall brackets, the ceiling globes in the rear portion of the auditorium are kept lighted, and with the double wiring system operated from the foyer, as well as from the operator's booth, all lights in the ceiling fixtures can be thrown on at one time. The heating and ventilating systems are of special importance in moving picture theater construction. It was the idea of the owners of the Regent to provide the best that was obtainable. The ventilation system installed is a double fan system, so arranged that the air can be changed every six minutes, fresh air being brought into the building and heated and forced through ducts into the auditorium without any draught. The foul air is taken from the auditorium by means of 500 openings in the floor, placed under the seats and drawn through a large chamber by an exhaust fan which forces the air through ducts running to the roof and depositing it on the outside. By this means a constant movement of air is had and the temperature is always comfortable.

Beautiful Foyer Under "Bleacher" Seats, Regent Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Every means for safety has been provided for both the patrons and the attendants as well. The operators have been provided with a fireproof operating room. This room is approached by means of iron stairways. Ample and large exits are provided on all sides of the building. Doors with automatic panic bolts are applied on all exit doors which swing out. The Penn avenue front of the building is made up of colored enameled terra cotta having electric light outlets placed in the cornice, around the windows, and display panels. The entrance lobby is attractive as well as serviceable. The walls, foyer and ceiling are entirely of special made tile, with each piece moulded for the particular place it occupies. The side-walls contain two beautiful panel pictures of faience tile of two scenes reproduced from photographs made in Italy. The ceiling tiles are of special design, containing electric lights. These tiles are modeled in relief and are made in colors of blue and ivory. The front of the building is surmounted by an attractive electric sign, which contains the name of the theater and an electrical motion fountain, operating in three different colors of electric lights. This sign stands 30 feet high.

THE STRAND THEATER, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Pretty Little Suburban Picture House Has All Up-to-Date Appointments—Uses Moller Organ.

THE Strand moving picture house, located at the corner of Oriental and Washington streets, at Indianapolis, Ind., is the largest theater devoted exclusively to that class of amusement in that city. The building is 47 feet wide by 116 feet deep and seats 701 persons. The seats are roomy and the rows are spaced so that they conform with the city ordinance. The theater has a 12 by 16-foot mirror screen which is the largest in the city. A large dressing room for women is another one of the commendable features of the house.

Before building the present Strand, H. T. Harrell, the proprietor, conducted a motion picture house in the room next door to his present location. That theater seated 400 persons, but after giving the public good service for three years the patronage became so large that it was necessary to build a larger house. Many persons were forced to wait on the sidewalk for the next show. Mr. Harrell often heard his patrons complain about the smallness of the house and he decided it was up to him to show his appreciation. He resolved to give his patrons a theater "that they would talk about." And he has carried out his intention.

Mr. Harrell is rightfully proud of the ventilating system in his new theater. He says it is his own idea. It would be hard to improve it, for when he starts the exhaust fans a delightful breeze of fresh air circulates through the room.

Strand Theater, Indianapolis, Ind.

In fact, it is so strong that the doors can be opened only a few inches. When he wants to start the ventilating system working he opens the doors in the front and rear of the house just a few inches and then turns on the two big exhaust fans which are located above the screen and near the ceiling. The breeze of fresh air is noticeable immediately. Fans are stationed along the walls, but they are never used, as Mr. Harrell does not consider them efficient.

Mr. Harrell has built several buildings in the last few years and after they were finished he has always been able to find improvements that could have been made. Even in his new theater he now sees where he could have bettered it. He has a $3,000 Moller organ which he, like many other moving picture house owners, installed under the stage. He now considers this a great mistake, as it smothers the tone. Mr. Harrell says that if he had it to do over again he would build the organ on the stage. He intends to add more pipes to his organ so as to get greater volume. Mr. Harrell employs a violinist and a pianist, as well as an organist. His musicians are the best he can afford to employ. Mr. Harrell learned from his experience in the smaller theater that it is not advisable to depend on one lighting system; so he has a large gas arc lamp ready for use should anything happen to the electric current.

Recently Mr. Harrell had the people in his end of the town (for his theater is really on the outskirts) wondering how he packed the house for each show of the first installment of a new serial. He says that going to see a moving picture serial is the same as reading a book: no one wants to start in the middle. Realizing this, he makes an effort to get his patrons to see the beginning of a new serial. Three nights of the week he runs his best pictures, for which he charges ten cents; the other four nights, five cents is the admission. When he intends running a new serial, he gives away on a previous night with each admission a ticket good for five cents. These free tickets are dated and are only good for the opening of the serial, which is a ten-cent show. In this way Mr. Harrell packs his house for the first showing of the first installment, and his patrons become interested from the start, which has a tendency to help keep them interested clear through the serial.

Mr. Harrell considers the good will of his patrons his greatest asset. When he first opened a moving picture house he charged five cents. He decided to raise the price on Sundays to ten cents. He was told by other exhibitors to let well enough alone. He raised the price anyhow and did more business than he did at five cents. Sometime in the future he intends to charge ten cents at all shows. He believes that what the people want is quality and not so much quantity. Mr. Harrell has been told by other exhibitors that he is foolish to pay so much for his service, as he has no competition within a mile or so. When he begins to charge ten cents admission for every show, he intends to pay still more for his service. Mr. Harrell has been very successful and he attributes it to his treatment of his patrons. He says they appreciate it, too. Mr. Harrell's theater is what might be called a suburban house, as it is located some distance from the center of the city. His patronage is not made up entirely from the neighborhood, for the reputation of the Strand has spread into other vicinities.

LIBERTY THEATER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

New 1600 Seating Capacity Picture House Is the Embodiment of All Things Beautiful in Modern Theatrical Architecture.

A DELIGHTFUL conception of all that is most modern and beautiful in theatrical architecture is blended in the new Liberty theater at Superior and East 105th street, Cleveland, Ohio, which was opened recently. Constructed along advanced lines, the new playhouse is one of the most up-to-date west of New York. Its policy is equally divided between motion picture productions and vaudeville with the former slightly overbalancing the latter.

The seating capacity of the Liberty is 1600 with about an equal division on the parquet and balcony floors. The color scheme throughout is old rose, silver grey and gold. Entering the lobby one is first impressed by a wonderful mosaic tile floor set off splendidly by faintly tinted walls and a sunburst ceiling of the Adam's period design. The foyer extends across the entire rear of the auditorium, the effect of linolyles being especially worthy of note. At each end of the foyer is a broad marble stairway leading to the balcony.

The width of the Liberty is slightly in excess of its depth, thus necessitating a stage opening of more than fifty feet. Everything possible for the safety and convenience of the audience has been provided by the owners. The theater is strictly fireproof and perfectly ventilated with a change of air throughout the entire auditorium every two minutes. One of the most beautiful features of the Liberty is the monster mural extending 72 feet across the proscenium arch depicting "Fine Arts," the work of John A. Servas of Rochester, N. Y., one of the foremost delineators of this work in the country. Three distinct groups compose the painting, there being twenty-one separate figures of life-sized proportions.

The scenery and effects for the Liberty theater are beautiful creations, also being the work of the Servas Scenic Studios. The Sunday setting alone is most elaborate and has been favorably commented upon by public and managers throughout Ohio. The Liberty theater is operated by the Liberty Amusement Company, of which S. M. Hexter is president. It is run in connection with the Gordon Square theater, located on the west side in Cleveland. Both houses are under the general management of Harry Durocher.

THE FOREST THEATER, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

An Excellent Example of the Evolution of the Motion Picture Theater—Music Furnished by Wurlitzer Organ.

THE FOREST THEATER, an almost new house located in Avondale, an aristocratic suburb of Cincinnati, Ohio, and representing an investment of approximately $50,000, is one of the best indications of the evolution of the motion picture theater. The Forest Auditorium Company, which built the house, headed by L. E. Ach, of one of the biggest millinery importing firms in this part of the country, was actuated not so much by hope of profit in constructing it as by a desire to do exactly what has been done: to furnish a first-class and good-sized house to Avondale. Having done this, however, the appreciation of the people has been so substantially evidenced that the venture has been an extremely profitable one, thus proving again the theatrical axiom that good art is frequently good business as well. The house stands back from a side street running into Reading Road, the principal thoroughfare, and measures a full hundred feet in width at the front, narrowing to 56 feet at the rear, with a length of 151 feet. The wide frontage gave opportunity for a dignified exterior. It is constructed of a grey pressed brick, with wide entrances supported by substantial columns, and a roomy lobby gives plenty of space for all purposes.

The rest of the building is constructed throughout of brick and concrete, the floors, the stairways and other structural parts, and, particularly, the operating-booth, being of the latter material. In fact, non-inflammable materials are used throughout, in combination with metal window frames and wire-glass, in such a manner that it is practically impossible for the building to burn. It has received high commendation from local fire and underwriting authorities for this reason, being rated as one of the safest structures in the city used for theatrical purposes. The interior slopes gently from front to rear, to give a good view of the screen from all parts of the house, which seats 650 persons. The seating capacity could easily have been brought up to 1,000, and this, perhaps, would have been done, by building the house further forward and making the lobby smaller, if the company had anticipated the extent of its success. Even now, however, President Ach declares that he hardly regrets the loss of space, as it has undoubtedly given so much to the theater's looks that from an aesthetic standpoint the gain is greater than the loss.

The interior decorative scheme is worthy of the handsome exterior. Quiet tones of tan and brown predominate, being worked out in tall panels, with the ceiling, columns and corners handsomely treated in wrought effects in plastic materials. Opera chairs of a good grade are used for seating, and the music is furnished by a large Wurlitzer organ, operated with high skill by Peter Lauderman. The lighting arrangements are especially noteworthy. The indirect system, now becoming common in well-designed structures, is used, the lamps being of great size and beauty. Current for lighting as well as other purposes is secured from a local company, and all switches center in the downstairs office. The operating room is unusually large, and, as stated, is of concrete, with a metal door. The two Powers 6-A machines used are both electrically operated by ⅛ horsepower motors, with the full consent of the fire department and the underwriting authorities, while another motor is used to steady the light, giving first-class pictures. The comfort and convenience of the public are served not only by the usual arrangements as to seating and the like, but by drinking fountains and fully equipped lavatories. Upstairs a private office is used for all of the business of the house, which is transacted in detail by Manager William P. Howard, President Ach looking after the general executive end. Mr. Howard, who is highly thought of by the company, has been in charge of the house every since it was opened.

Just now the Forest Airdome, located immediately adjoining the Forest itself, is nightly seating its capacity of one thousand, with the usual waiting crowds. It has the only gold fiber screen at present used by any airdome in the city, it is understood, which, it happens, is also one of the largest, measuring 18 by 22 feet. This unusual size, which gave some trouble in installation, was desired on account of the considerable size of the airdome, a "throw" from the two Powers machines of 130 feet being necessary. The airdome booth is of metal, as required by the local fire regulations. An additional measure of safety, called for only by the scrupulous "safety first" policy of the management, is that all of the numerous necessary electric wires are handled in metal pipes, making danger from them out of the question. Extraordinarily wide aisles on both sides and in the middle give a roomy impression which is distinctly unusual in airdomes, and the neat chairs and smooth footing underneath help to keep up the good work.

A row of handsome boulevard lights, extending from the front of the theater to the corner at Reading Road, overcomes whatever disadvantage may lie in being off the main thoroughfare, as it gives an inescapable leader to the location of the house. Altogether, the Forest is a first-rate example of the wisdom of doing the thing right. The company did not skimp in building it, in any respect, and it has not since skimped when it came to picking pictures or people. The results speak for themselves.

Facts and Comments

THE fire department of this city will not apply the ordinance against airdomes on roofs to existing places. The action of the Board of Aldermen in passing such an ordinance is in line with the general policy of safeguarding patrons of theaters and can scarcely be interpreted as a discrimination against motion picture theaters.

WE ARE indebted to a friend and reader in a city of the Middle West for a most excellent contribution to the arguments in favor of a liberal Sunday. Our contributor, Dwight B. Baker, of Ottumwa, Iowa, has compiled valuable arguments and data. His language is temperate and convincing, his treatment of the subject complete and exhaustive. We have thought so well of his plea that we have incorporated it into our literature in favor of a rational and liberal Sunday. We thank Mr. Baker on behalf of our readers and once more call attention to the fact that this literature, a veritable storehouse and encyclopedia on the subject, is at the disposal of any exhibitor who cares to write for it.

THIS is the last call for the National Convention at San Francisco. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be fully and capably represented and the report of the doings of the convention will be a record and a reference for the future. We wish the convention the greatest success possible and hope that its labors will be productive of great good not only to the exhibitors, but to the industry in general. A full attendance and a spirit of co-operation will, it appears, characterize the convention. We know that the industry at large takes a great interest in the convention and will watch its proceedings with sympathetic attention.

ONE of the evils of the press from which the motion picture screen has happily been free is the portrayal of contemporaneous crime. The "yellow streak" on the screen has been faint enough to be called indiscernible. Not a little of the credit for this gratifying state of affairs is due to the resolute attitude of the great representative motion picture journal, which means THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Its persistent refusal to open its advertising columns to this sort of vileness has always had the hearty commendation of its readers in all branches of the industry.

JUST one little word of advice to those who are about to enter the producing field: There is no royal road to success in this most difficult of all fields. Previous experience and success in literature or on the stage or in any other allied field counts for little or nothing. When you enter this field do not neglect the aid and the expert advice of the veterans. The screen is a most subtle instrument and a most delicate one. A crude touch or a lack of skill produces discords. Neither money nor even genius may be relied on as substitutes for experience.

ONE of the most pleasing signs of these latter days is a willingness on the part of producers and even directors to concede that they are not entirely infallible and not entirely above profiting by the advice of others. But recently several letters came to this office written by exhibitors and frankly criticising certain faults and certain films of some very prominent producers. The letters were submitted to the men who we thought ought to see them and everywhere they were given great attention and two of the suggestions contained in the letters were deemed good enough to be acted upon. We are still in a somewhat chaotic state when it comes to finding a safe landing place amid so many programs and so many features, but there is more of a toleration and more of a spirit of co-operation than we have ever seen before.

APROPOS of the plan to put the Lives of Famous Men upon the screen, it occurs to many friends of the motion picture that in the field of biography little has been done so far and this in spite of the fact that the screen is the greatest biographer ever known in the history of mankind. The field of kinematographic biography is capable of infinite development. The few efforts made in this direction have as far as we know always been successful even from the exhibitor's point of view. Of course the most important and authentic work in the biographical field will have to be done for historic purposes primarily, hence the delays and difficulties,

Keep Up the Good Work.

By W. Stephen Bush.

ALL the big men in the motion picture field have from the start appreciated the work of The Moving Picture World in seeking to embody the freedom of the screen in the organic law of this state. This work has now progressed as far as possible under the circumstances. The full import and significance of it is being recognized by every interest in the industry.

We cannot know what the Constitutional Convention at Albany is going to do. Three amendments dealing with the subject have been submitted. Different in form they all aim at the same thing, i. e., the permanent emancipation of the motion picture from official censorship in the state of New York.

The speakers before the Bill of Rights Committee, to which the whole question has been referred, urged no particular form, being contented to leave the phrasing of the amendment to the constructive statesmanship and the legal learning of the Committee and the Convention.

The aim of our agitation is not merely to insure the motion picture interests in this state against all kinds of censorship for a period of at least twenty years. Such aim is part of our purpose and if the agitation brought no result but this freedom for twenty years we feel that all our labor and the co-operation of the big men in the industry have been rapid in ample measure. However, our ultimate aim is much broader and much higher. Whether the amendment we advocate or some other amendment will be submitted to the people of this state at the next general election or whether it will not be submitted, we want the work before the Constitutional Convention to be the starting point of a general and persistent campaign of education. The object of this campaign is not only the defeat of censorship in the two or three states that have adopted this un-American system, but the complete discomfiture of the idea and the principle of censorship everywhere. By reason of what has been done at Albany our position has been advanced in the right direction. We have let the convention know that the motion picture interests are fully aware of their responsibilities, but that they are not less keenly aware of their rights and privileges.

We have begun to rouse the press to a realization of the danger that lurks behind all agitation for the censorship of motion pictures. North and South, East and West the press of the country is taking the alarm and is vigorously protesting against censorship as a grave menace to all free institutions. It would be an easy matter to fill page after page with excerpts from prominent newspapers condemning censorship whether applied to the printed page or to the motion picture.

Let us all unite in keeping up the fight. The exchangemen and the exhibitors outside of the censorship states cannot imagine the evils that follow in the wake of censorship by law. The producer, whose films are distributed throughout the country, has had a taste of censorship whether he resides in a censorship state or in a free state. Hence the willingness with which the producers have supported and are now supporting the war waged against censorship in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

In the coming year but twelve states have sessions of their legislatures, but it is a foregone conclusion that in most of these bodies censor bills will be introduced and will have to be fought. The fight must be conducted primarily by the exhibitors of these states. They and the exchangemen in the state must get together and the aid of the producer we hope will not be lacking. In all the states the campaign must be kept up until censorship is thoroughly beaten. The men who made themselves conspicuous by their championship of inquisition must be made to feel the power of the screen. Ohio must be freed from the reproach of having an exhibitors organization which favors and supports censorship. The exhibitors of this city of New York will be recreant to their plain duty if they do not oppose at the polls any candidate whose connection with censorship schemes has become notorious.

Most of all must we fight ignorance and prejudice in legislative committees. I have spoken before many such committees and the ignorance of the men entrusted with the paramount duty of legislation is simply appalling. The chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee of our State Constitutional Convention declared during the progress of the hearing on the new amendment that he had seen "but one motion picture in his life." We do not know whether he intended this as a boast or as a confession or as a bit of pleasantry. Another member of the committee made a similar avowal. Some years ago the remark, "I have never seen a motion picture," was heard frequently from the lips of men who thought themselves superior to the ordinary run of mankind. Today such remarks are hardly ever heard except from people who attempt to legislate for the motion picture interests or possibly from clergymen who proudly preface their denunciation of the motion picture with the assurance that they had never seen one and never would want to see one.

In a measure I am afraid we ourselves are responsible for this ignorance in so-called high places. We do not persevere in our work of propaganda. The Moving Picture World has sent out about 17,000 very handy and useful four-page folders that contain in brief and concise form all the history and the arguments in the anti-censorship campaign. We have also sent out good material for the newspapers showing the evils and follies of censorship. We have now sent copies of the paper and all the censorship literature to the members of the convention.

We ask our readers to help us distribute all these good materials and place them where they will do the most good. Exhibitors, this is your fight as well as the fight of the exchangemen and the producers. Films that have been cut to pieces by ignorant and narrow-minded "reformers" or grafting politicians make poor programs. The Moving Picture World will send you its censorship pamphlet upon request without any charge whatever. Make a note of this. If you do not need it today you may need it tomorrow. If you do need it today, do not wait but write at once. KEEP UP THE FIGHT.

We suggest to every exhibitor, whether he has a publicity man or whether he is his own press agent, to enlist the aid of his local papers in this fight against censorship. The screen and the press are allies in the great fight for liberty and in the eternal struggle against bigotry, oppression and ignorance. With the aid of the press we cannot help but win, but we must go after it and not sit by supinely.

Shifting Fancies and Celestial Lights

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHEN there came unhearalded into our midst a new art, that of visualizing movement and sensation, agitation of mind and soul, tendency of desires and passions, it was the second art to appear during the Christian Era, the first being that of producing printed matter by the composition and imposition of type during the Fifteenth Century. Both were undervalued at the outset, because scientific development had not overcome a certain crudity of early examples; both were aided during their evolution by collateral arts, and both grew in popular favor despite a lot of envious criticism from men who should have been first to welcome any means of advancing common progress through dissemination of truth.

Even now, among the privileged few who take themselves seriously, who have acquired an intellectual aloofness from what is easily comprehended by ordinary people, there are many who reach false conclusions about the production of moving pictures by the dangerous route of pure reason based on wrong premises. They regard the new art as purely reflective because it lacks precedent and tradition and is introduced apologetically, not yet having acquired a full dress of glossary. No single and all-embracing term such as "literature" or "drama" has yet been found to fit it. It is wearing altered clothes of its elder brothers, with "photo" and "moto" patches that add neither to the strength nor to the beauty of its vocabulary.

The new art has recently been accorded tolerant recognition by fiction makers whose stories of idiomatic cleverness have been circulated to the extent of a hundred thousand or less and used to enlighten long-suffering humanity with revivals of works which it seems almost a sacrilege to dig up from the dust of second-hand bookshelves. Then it has been discovered by the producers of Broadway plays gone lame from overwork and employed in a predatory attack upon the public purse, after that public has been partially stupefied by bombs of bill-poster chlorine gas.

Said Elizabeth Barrett Browning:

> The growing drama has outgrown such toys
> Of simulated stature, face and speech;
> It also peradventure may outgrow
> The simulation of the painted scene,
> Boards, actors, promoters, gaslight and costume,
> And take for a worthier stage the soul itself,
> In shifting fancies and celestial lights,
> With all its grand orchestral silences
> To keep the pauses of its rhythmis sounds.

In place of "sounds" she might have been completely prophetic had she used "motion." Edward Gordon Craig, much in evidence as a reformer of the drama, declares, "There is a thing which man has not learned to master, a thing which man dreamed not was waiting for him to approach with love; it was invisible and yet ever present with him. Superb in its attraction and swift to retreat, a thing but waiting for the approach of the right men, prepared to soar with them through all the circles beyond the earth—it is Movement. It is somehow a common belief that only by means of words can truths be revealed. Words explain the law of two and six, images delineate the relation of four and eight, but what of that infinite and beautiful thing dwelling in space called movement? And I like to suppose that this art which shall spring from movement shall be the first and final belief of the world."

The egotism of misinformation, more destructive than the egotism of simple ignorance, has caused men who should know better to depreciate the value of moving pictures. The new art is not strong in the hearts of people because it is democratic, nor because they have dominated it, for they have not. They have gone by millions to contemplate its work because of the direct nature of its appeal and because that appeal has been so strong that it has enabled them to forget a great deal that mars everyday existence. To the generous support of common people it owes its vitality, not to those cultivated individuals who have achieved intellectuality by long study of rare models in the older arts. Just as a highly-educated European visits America and reasons from the absence of century-honored monuments that our people lack artistic feeling, so many of our own intellectuals have reached a conclusion that the limitations of the new art are those of chance examples. Both start with false premises.

All the arts of expression have frontiers, but they are growing more neighborly, those frontiers are being crossed and recrossed, until artists of broad viewpoint are beginning to realize that separation of interest will be replaced by a community of interest, which will subordinate tradition and eliminate prejudice. If true creative genius has something to give the world and lacks skill in the older crafts, he may find his way through the new one now in a formative stage, even through others yet unborn. True genius will be less embarrassed by the art that has been and turn his face to the art that has never been, will draw popular approval by what is new, original and capable of infinite variety of expression rather than surrender the products of imagination to a clamor from the sordid and the unthinking. His medium will be of secondary importance to his message or to that most real of all real things in men of creative imagination, sentiment, but he will invoke the new art in vain if he is not sincere.

"All art," says Sheldon Cheney in his advocacy of a new movement in theatrical presentation, "is a matter of nature or life acted upon by man; a part taken out of the accidental surroundings and given artistic form." Go to the Sistine Chapel and spend days in that temple of art. Study the colossal figures painted by Michael Angelo. They are taken from life and given artistic form, and there is a meaning to be interpreted in every one, but how few can grasp that meaning. We feel that there is a soul tenanting those gigantic and extraordinary beings, that they are the offspring of an aspiration for the infinite, but they are sleeping. Dormant is the spirit of thought in such great paintings. We shall never see them as their creator saw them. We can only guess at the noble conceptions he imprisoned there. We feel like invoking the Spirit of Motion.

A lifeless landscape; a stretch of glossy sea; what a wonderous change comes when invisible forces stir them to action! We associate life with action, with the exercise of mind and body, and death with the absence of it. The Spirit of Motion has already raised the dead as if by enchantment and she holds out both hands to True Genius that he may stir millions with his inspirations, that his celestial light of truth may reach all humanity through this art that is without confusion of tongues. Says the immortal bard, who, in compassing little comprehended much:

> "The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
> Into his study of imagination,
> And every lovely organ of her life
> Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
> More moving—delicate and full of life,
> Into the eye and prospect of his soul,"

Motion Pictures on the Coast

AN ADEQUATE summary of the motion picture industry on the Pacific Coast of the United States is presented to the trade for the first time in this number of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. It is about six years since motion picture men discovered the rare atmospheric qualities of Southern California which mean so much to the photographer, but since that time there has been a steady movement in that direction, until today about all the big producers maintain companies of players in that region, while there are many other companies that have sprung up from the soil, as it were.

Owing to the fact that most of the companies producing pictures in California owned large plants in Eastern points, their Western equipments have been of a temporary character. Within the past year or so, though, there has been an attempt at permanency that is in itself remarkable. Note, for example, the Selig Zoo and studios, upon which the founder has spent several hundred thousand dollars.; This enterprise is designed to be a great public park and its perpetuation will be provided for by the builder, William N. Selig.

Another enterprise that is unique is that known as "Universal City"—the plant of the Universal Film Corporation—literally a town builded to meet the requirements of motion picture production and costing many thousands of dollars. This is also of a permanent character and will be maintained as long as motion pictures have a vogue.

Of motion picture studios of the usual form the Coast has its full share and others are to be built. Many temporary stages have been erected until that wonderfully suitable region seems to be completely pre-empted by the picture maker.

Concerning all this, to us, great human effort the reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD will find an intelligent story in this number. A representative of this publication has been on the Coast for several months and there is little worth while that has escaped him. It is presented in a readable manner and the writer has caught that delightfully human note, without which such descriptions would be dry as the desert sands. It has been the writer's effort to tell of things as they exist. While his story may not measure up to the extravagant claims of the local booster, we believe his facts and his conclusions are rosy enough to satisfy the most carping critic that the motion picture business in Southern California is a wonderful industry.

For the Cameraman

MANY times it happens that the intelligent reviewer of motion picture "masterpieces" has occasion to say: "The photographic quality is excellent and there has been expressed rare judgment in the selection of scenic backgrounds," or words to that effect, all of which indicates that an artist rather than a "crank turner" has been stationed at the camera. By the way, it not infrequently happens , too, that there is little more of praise to be said; and this indicates, in a general way, the importance of having a real camera artist on the job—he may save an otherwise weak-kneed subject.

We will not attempt to point out here how very important a camera man is, or to enumerate the various points whereat his knowledge, or lack of it, may make or mar a picture. What we desire to do is to direct the attention of all cameramen to a department, beginning in this issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, calculated to be of especial benefit to them. It will be conducted by Carl Louis Gregory, who is at present in the employ of the Thanhouser Company.

Claim is not made, either by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD or by Mr. Gregory himself, that he is the greatest of all cameramen, and therefore fitted to tell all other cameramen what to do. Mr. Gregory is a good cameraman, and, further than that, he is a painstaking student of the art and science of photography, and, still further, he is able to put the result of his investigations and his experiments into readable form It is because of all these reasons that he has been selected to conduct the cameraman's department of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. After those of our readers who are interested have followed him for a while we believe they will agree that the choice was a happy one. More is said about Mr. Gregory elsewhere.

As this is the first effort that has been made to give the cameraman suitable recognition in print, THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD would suggest that proper appreciation may be shown by giving Mr. Gregory such assistance as their experience and knowledge of motion picture photography will permit. Communications regarding the subjects of which he treats are solicited and may be addressed to Mr. Gregory in care of this publication.

RAILROADS BAR FILMS FROM PASSENGER TRAINS.

Official notice has been sent out by the General Superintendent of Transportation of the Erie Railroad Company, G. W. Kirtley, to this effect:

To Agents, Conductors, Baggagemen, Trainmen and Others Concerned:—Effective June 25th.

The transportation of moving picture films in that part of any car used for the transportation of passengers on the lines of these companies is prohibited. As their handling in baggage service is already forbidden in Section 10, Local Inter-Division and Joint Tariff of Baggage Rules and Regulations, moving picture films cannot therefore be handled on passenger trains except as express shipments.

MAY HAVE REWINDERS IN BOOTHS.

William Williams, Commissioner of the Water, Gas and Electricity Department of the City of New York, has issued the following letter regarding the rewinding of film in the booths of motion picture theaters in Greater New York:

"The prohibition hitherto in force against the rewinding of films in a moving picture booth while the machine is being operated is hereby withdrawn.

"I ask that you give as much publicity as practicable to this modification of the rules and regulations made pursuant to Chapter 252 Laws of 1911, which relates to license to operate moving picture apparatus."

DISCUSSING CENSORSHIP IN JERSEY.

At the first annual meeting of the Civic Federation of New Jersey, held at the Hotel Dennis, Atlantic City, N. J., on Saturday evening, June 26, there was a dicussion of the question of censorship of motion pictures. Among those who took part in the discussion were License Commissioner George H. Bell, of New York, and J. W. Binder, of the National Censorship Board.

Commissioner Bell told of the work being done by his department in the way of making New York's 951 picture theaters safe and sanitary and to insure the moral cleanliness of the entertainments. Mr. Binder explained the working of the National Board and stated that it was covering 98 per cent. of the pictures made.

DETROIT OFFICIAL ELECTED.

The Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors League has elected the following new officers for the ensuing year: President, Herman Speier; vice-president, Otto Seestedt; Arthur R. Kosel, secretary; J. C. Ritter, financial secretary; Fred R. Rumler, treasurer.

Everything is running smoothly with the Detroit exhibitors. There seems to be no "troubles in the air" outside of the ordinance recently introduced into the common council which would require minor theaters to install fire alarm boxes. Exhibitors say that such an ordinance is nothing more or less than a deliberate hold-up. If this ordinance is railroaded through, it will cost exhibitors (those owning houses seating 400 or less) $25 per year to maintain the necessary fire alarm boxes.

Motion Picture Photography*

Conducted by CARL LOUIS GREGORY

Introductory.

Breaking Ground for a Series of Instructive Articles on Motion Picture Photography

OF ALL the persons concerned in the production of motion pictures it is probable that there are few who have received less attention in the literature of cinematography than those who deal with that portion which is the foundation and concrete substance of the work; that is, the taking and finishing of pictures. It is a highly technical subject of which but very few are thoroughly acquainted, in fact even the specialist can only aspire to a thorough knowledge of the one branch wherein he is concerned and a good general knowledge of the remainder. The majority of persons now working in the production of pictures have drifted into it not through any course in technical education, nor through any aptitude for the subject, and not because they were in any way suited for the positions they hold, but because it presented an opportunity for higher wages.

Some may question the primary importance of the photographer and his co-workers; but no matter how great the director, no matter how good the story, no matter how fine the acting, unless perfectly recorded by clear and artistic photography, the genius of the director, the cleverness of the writer and the ability of the actor are no avail. Contrarywise, how often has been the case that a picture poorly directed, acted by incompetent players, has yet been a pleasure to the eye through the artistry of the photographer, whose excellent photography, picturesque backgrounds and beautiful light effects redeem the picture. This is not in any sense a decrying of the director, the scenario writer, the actor or any of the other important people who are factors in the production of screen drama. They are all necessary factors in picture production, and while at no time has the photographer stood in as high estimation as to-day, there is still much room for improvement for better things and for closer co-operation between the directing and technical staffs.

In many studios and by many directors a camera man is regarded as only a shade above the merest mechanic. An instance of this is a man who is in charge of one of the largest studios in the United States and a man who prides himself on his artistic judgment has many times reiterated this statement, "A camera man is only a mechanic!" God save the eyes of a long-suffering public from the pictures of the studio whose photographers are only mechanics. The best pictures are only produced by the intelligent and careful co-operation of the camera man and director, and the more one comprehends and understands of the other's work, just so much will it enhance the production of better pictures. The intention of this department is not only to assist the photographer and his co-workers in meeting the many problems which arise in their daily work, but also to bring these workers in closer and more sympathetic recognition from producers, studio managers and studio owners.

It is a trite expression to say that motion pictures are still in their infancy, nevertheless it is true although we must admit that the infant is a thriving and lusty one and demands and receives recognition among his elder brothers in big business. On account of this rapid growth it has produced enormous profits to men and companies who have flagrantly disregarded even the simplest axioms of business efficiency. These profits have been so great that wastes and losses which would have swamped any other manufacturing business, have passed unnoticed. There are today avoidable wastes in practically every department of every motion picture studio. Very few of the workers are properly trained for the positions they fill and in addition to the handicap of their own ignorance, are compelled to work with inefficient tools and improper appliances. Wastes of water, of chemicals, of film, of time that if they could be shown in their concrete aggregate to studio managers, would appal them. One studio which buys weekly approximately three hundred thousand feet of raw positive stock, turns out in finished product considerably less than two hundred and seventy thousand feet of finished film, that is more than ten per cent. or $1,000 of raw stock wasted every week and there are probably other studios where the percentage is still larger.

The motion picture business is entering a new era. Profits are smaller than they used to be. The cost of production is greater, competition is keener and the need for economical manufacturing and production is greater than ever before. A successful motion picture studio of today must pay its stockholders dividends on smaller margins of cost. The main cost items in the motion picture business are the same as that of any other manufacturing concern or factory and it will be the study and aim of this department to figure out new savings and produce better results in the manufacturing of motion pictures. It does not necessarily follow that in obtaining cheaper production that the salaries of the workers should be reduced, but in such systemization of work that the same force may produce better pictures in larger quantities. It is the modern tendency in all factories with up-to-date methods to obtain a speeding up of operations through time studies, better arrangement of processes and bonus wages to workers for increased output and efficiency systems generally. It has been the objection of many that motion pictures are beyond the scope of efficiency systems, such as have been developed in highly specialized shop industries. It is said that time studies and bonus wages may be applied to railroads, for instance, yet not be suited to the miscellaneous operations of the motion picture studio. To refute this argument one has only to visit a few of the many laboratories where motion pictures are turned out. In many of them will still be found the antiquated methods which were in vogue in the earliest days of the business. The working force is only half organized, half bossed, half taught and run at half or one-third its possible capacity. The employes of motion picture plants, like those of almost any other line of industry, have a reserve to draw on not merely of speed, but of intelligent co-operation and good-will. The good will of the employee is one of the largest assets of a business.

In a large studio where a new manager was recently installed, a system of salary cutting and fines for mistakes was instituted. A large number of the oldest employes were suddenly discharged. The entire atmosphere of the studio has been changed, instead of the old cheerful attitude and willingness to work overtime if necessary and meet emergencies with increased effort, a spirit of don't care and slipshod workmanship has invaded the place and while the salary list has been cut down a few dollars, the intangible loss of the former good will amounts to many times the small savings. In this same place where it was formerly possible to obtain appliances for better operation upon proper requisition, it now requires so much argument and explanation that the workers prefer to do with what they have rather than face the difficulties of obtaining what they need. This is a common condition in many studios which still lumber along handicapped in a hundred ways for want of proper facilities. Camera men are supposed to turn out perfect pictures with cameras which should have been in the junk heap months ago, joining room girls splice with inadequate tools, printers and perforators work with machinery that should be in the machine shop for repair, for want of enough projection machines testers run films at the highest rate of speed possible without tearing them to pieces; films come through the dark room poorly developed and improperly washed because more work is coming through the dark room than its capacity warrants and a hundred other things that might be mentioned and yet when called to the attention of the studio manager bring forth a contemptuous grunt and the question, "We have got along so far all right, haven't we? What more do you want?" True, there are many studios where every facility is afforded and everything possible is done for the best quality of work.

*Copyright, 1915, by Cholmen Publishing Co.

Yet there is vast room for improvement in every motion picture laboratory. There is not a camera on the market today but could be much improved; there should be much lighter and more rigid tripods with better panoraming and tilting devices; and the same room for improvement all down through the list of perforators, printers, rewinders, joining machines, splicing blocks, developing racks, cleaning machines, drying drums, tanks, film tubs, etc. It is safe to say that more than 90 per cent. of the workers in film factories sacrifice the greater part of their possible efficiency to the want of proper tools and intelligent systemization of their work.

Without taking into consideration the many amateurs who own motion picture cameras and many who from a sort of scientific curiosity, like to delve into the mysteries of making motion pictures, there are probably more than five thousand workers in America who earn their living in motion picture studios by working at some one or more of the many processes involved in the so-called factory department. Among these are the camera men, perforators, printers, winders on, developers, dark room workers, tinters, toners, inspectors, cleaners, testers, joiners, negative cutters, film editors, title makers, and many others, the majority of whom have never had any accessible avenue by which they could obtain further knowledge of their work.

It would be a paying investment to almost any studio to subscribe to some of the technical periodicals and place them at the disposal of their workers. Even a casual perusal of the Moving Picture World, for instance, each week by the employes of the film laboratory would help by raising the intelligence and interest of the employees to a vast extent. It was formerly the custom in a certain studio to empty the waste baskets in the furnace room in order to see that no correspondence from the office had been lost by being thrown into the waste basket. In this waste were many moving picture periodicals, old catalogues and trade pamphlets referring to the business. This became known among the employees and they were eagerly sorted out and carried away by the more ambitious employes. Every studio office has weekly a large accumulation of these periodicals which might be distributed to great advantage among the employes, instead of going into the furnace or to the waste heap.

It is for the assistance of all these film factory employees as well as any others who are interested in cinematography that this department is established. It is the intention of this department to take up in as logical order as possible the principles which underlie the making of motion pictures and to discuss them in their relations to cinematographic art, to describe the different processes and methods used in the manufacture and explain the best standard methods in all the various operations concerned in taking and making motion pictures. In addition to this there will be a space devoted to inquiries which will endeavor to answer questions of general interest and to discuss such questions as come within the province of this department. Processes and methods of work, new inventions, emergency devices, formulas, short cuts, new wrinkles and factory system will all come in for discussion and workers in the various branches are invited to ask questions and express their views. Although it is not probable that it will be possible to deal with this subject in the exact sequence in which it would occur in a complete text book on the subject, it is nevertheless the intention that the major portion of this department be devoted to a sort of serial text book on motion picture photography.

Since the practical value of a serial of this kind lies in its application to present work and conditions and more especially to those branches which are more perplexing to practical workers, no attention will be given at present to the history of the rise and growth of the art of cinematography. With this idea in view the question arises as to what subjects are of greatest immediate value to camera workers. To the beginner, of course, the first problem arising is that of the choice of a suitable outfit with which he may start to take pictures, but it is evident that unless he is measurably familiar with the elemental principles of photography he will not be able to understand for what reasons he should select this or that sort of apparatus which will best fulfill the special uses to which he may wish to put his instrument. The more advanced worker should not be impatient at details which may seem to his more mature judgment as puerile and too simple for consideration; he must remember that he himself was a beginner once and that many things which are commonplace to him are serious problems to the tyro. Nor should either beginner or experienced worker regard this text book system of treatment as a series of easy correspondence lessons on how to become a camera man. It is possible to learn how to thread a camera and to turn the crank in a few minutes, but that does not make one a photographer. The first-class photographer who understands the action of light upon the emulsion, the reasons and wherefores of the chemicals and processes involved in the taking, developing and printing, the effects obtained by the various lenses, pictorial effect and composition and the other multitude of details which go to make up the education of an artistic and efficient cinematographer has devoted months and years of hard study and practical work in addition to his natural aptitude and artistic perception.

It was with some misgivings at arousing a craft feeling among already established motion picture photographers that the author consented to undertake this present work. It was only the conviction that such a department would be of value to his fellow workers and that many of his confreres would stand ready to co-operate and assist in anything which stood for the advancement and improvement in cinematography that persuaded the author to undertake such an important task. The open-minded attitude that no one is ever able to learn all there is to know about any subject and that one may always learn something from even the most inexperienced beginner is the spirit that makes for fraternal feeling, co-operation, improvement through interchange of ideas and increased efficiency. It is one of the sad commentaries of human nature that there is among all crafts a certain amount of reluctance about imparting to apprentices and outsiders what are termed as the "secrets" of the craft. Happily such views find credence almost invariably with workers who are not themselves well grounded in their profession and are the natural sequence of jealousy that another worker should be able to attain knowledge with any less of a struggle or any abatement of travail which have been entailed in his own advancement and these views vehemently expressed by any craftsman of any pursuit may be taken as an almost infallible sign of a gnawing self-knowledge of incompetency. Such an attitude is always the incubator of misunderstanding and illwill, while that of free exchange of knowledge and experience tends to promote the growth of industry and fellowship.

No competent and conscientious worker in the technical field of cinematography today need go many days without a position at a salary equal if not greater than he would receive in a similar line of work at another profession. The field of cinematography is expanding at such a marvelous rate that it is a difficult matter to obtain a sufficient number of properly trained and equipped workers to fill the positions that are open. It is only fair that those who have the ambition and capacity for advancement should have every assistance afforded them that it is possible to extend.

Better pictures is the slogan of this page and every increase in the better understanding of his task is a contributory mite from even the humblest worker.

VETERANS BEFORE VITAGRAPH CAMERA.

OVER FIVE hundred veterans of the G. A. R. headed by Admiral Sigsbee and Admiral Marix, who investigated the sinking of the Maine, and several other prominent men appeared before the camera last week at the Vitagraph studio in connection with a picture to arouse patriotic enthusiasm.

Admiral Sigsbee is shown in the picture addressing the assembled veterans on the subject of the navy while Admiral Marix explained the work that he did in determining how the Maine had been blown up using models to illustrate his words.

At the conclusion of the addresses the veterans marched before the camera showing the maneuvers that they used during the Civil War and showing the depletion in their ranks fifty-one years after the war.

It is planned by Commodore Blackton to have the picture exhibited in every part of the country and it is very likely that it will appear at the Panama Pacific Exposition during the summer.

PATHE HAS GREAT CAST IN "VIA WIRELESS."

George Fitzmaurice, who is to produce the Broadway success, "Via Wireless," for Pathe, has just announced his cast. Gail Kane will be the leading woman. She will be remembered as starring in "The Miracle Man" and "The Hyphen," two well known theatrical successes. Bruce McRae, another famous player from the "legit," will be the leading man. Paul McAllister will have the character part.

Mr. Fitzmaurice started work on his picture June 21.

Carl Louis Gregory.

An Appreciation by John William Kellette.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD takes pleasure in introducing to the camera fraternity Carl Louis Gregory, who will create and become editor of a department in this periodical dealing with the camera.

Mr. Gregory became interested in the art of photography at the age of 11, and has been developing and testing the possibilities of the camera ever since. It was through the medium of his well known camera that he was enabled to pay his way through the Ohio State University from which he was graduated in 1904 with a bachelor degree, having completed the requisite course in chemistry.

Carl L. Gregory.

Finding laboratory work too confining, he opened photograph studios successively in Monterey, Mexico; San Antonio, Texas; Colorado Springs, Colorado, and Cleveland, Ohio. His work at this time attracted the attention of Government officials, and this resulted in his employment as official photographer for the United States Government. In this capacity he was an acknowledged expert, and Burr McIntosh, recognizing his ability, made him a flattering offer and secured Mr. Gregory to stage his lectures, and in connection with this duty he also made lantern slides and took pictures of "Our Navy," "Our Country," "Our Island Possessions," which Mr. McIntosh used in his lectures.

In 1909 he entered the employ of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., in the capacity of cameraman for that concern, running off films for educational, scenic and scientific value. His skill with the motion picture camera is proverbial and whenever any trick work, double exposure, or anything new and untried is wanted, Gregory, the wizard, is called upon and always delivers the goods.

When the Thanhouser Company started at New Rochelle, it secured his services, and he has been connected continuously with it since 1910. When the late Charles Jackson Hite, President of the Thanhouser Company, wished to start a new studio in California, Mr. Gregory was sent to the coast, where he located the studio site for the New Majestic. Upon his return he was sent to Cape May, N. J., where, in conjunction with his studio work in New Rochelle, he produced a series of seaside pictures. He achieved his work so well in the triple capacity of author-director-cameraman, that he had a new distinction conferred upon him by being placed in charge of the Princess Brand, as producing director. Falstaff has since taken the place of Princess on the Thanhouser program.

Because of the excellent results obtained by Mr. Gregory in every enterprise and the thorough knowledge of camera possibilities, he was selected, after exhaustive search, to be the first man in the world to take motion pictures under water at the bottom of the sea. The submarine pictures now on the Universal program is the product of Gregory's camera. Such a thing as undersea pictures was impossible until last year, when the Williamsons of Norfolk, Va., perfected their steel operating chamber and flexible tube for that purpose. The pictures which he brought back from the clear waters about Nassau, Bahama Islands, were taken at depths varying from 50 to 60 feet and are considered the most wonderful achievement ever made in both the scientific and picture world, and have received the highest endorsement at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D. C., where they were shown before a large body of scientists.

Shortly after returning from the Bahamas with these marvelous films, he was sent with a company of Thanhouser Players to Yellowstone Park where he produced several scripts this time in the triple capacity of author-director-cameraman, a distinction achieved by him alone, so far as it is known. There are a few who combine direction with camera work, but the writer knows of no other man who confesses to the triple alliance.

It might be remarked, in passing, that Mr. Gregory also had the honor to be the first man to produce photodramas in the Yellowstone Park, having obtained permission of Franklyn K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. These pictures went far to advertise that wonder spot of the world, enhanced as they are by the delightful romances woven about the scenes.

He belongs to the American Chemical Society, which is the highest of its kind in the country, and is also a member of the National Geographical Society. The Cinema Camera Clubs of New York and Los Angeles; the Ed-Au and Inquest Clubs of New York City; the Screen Club of New York City and the Photoplayers' Club of Los Angeles also carry his name on their records, and because of his wonderful work with the Pathe the Royal Society of Photographers of Great Britain conferred upon Mr. Gregory the superb honor of being the first American photographer to be elected an honorary member, and in informing Mr. Gregory, the secretary intimated that the society was at that time considering the possibility of electing him to a fellowship.

That is the type of expert that The Moving Picture World has secured to head its department for its cameramen-readers, and in a later issue an article from Mr. Gregory's pen will outline the scope of the work, and take you completely into his confidence.

George Ovey.

Twenty winters ago an urchin in knickerbockers ran up and down the stairways of a theater gallery in Kansas City, exchanging "peanuts, popcorn, candy or chewing-gum" for a coin.

He was as sharp as the proverbial tack, quick to grasp a situation, effective in gallery repartee and with a power of humorous expression that earned him the name of "Zip."

George Ovey.

The boy did not pass badinage with the gallery gods for many weeks before he was promoted to an usher's position. From then on his rise, while gradual, made him successively head usher, assistant treasurer and treasurer.

But the duties of the "front of the house" did not appeal particularly to the rising young man (four years had passed since his gallery service), so he decided to step into work behind the footlights—a direction in which he believed he possessed particular adaptability.

Kansas City is quite a distance from the big producing centers, so the young man remained in the Hill City awaiting his chance. It came when a company rolled into town one Sunday morning for a week's engagement without their comedian who had refused to travel further. To the theater, when the manager explained his plight, the young man was called. He accepted eagerly the offer to substitute for the recalcitrant comedian, studied carefully the part given him, and when overture was called he was letter-perfect. His first performance even under these trying conditions was excellent, and he remained with the company for the remainder of the tour.

Thus began the stage career of George Ovey now leading comedian with the new MinA Films.

Following this season Ovey was with Beach & Bowers Minstrels, "1492," "A Texas Steer," "A Knight for a Day," "45 Minutes from Broadway," "Coming Thru the Rye," "The Gingerbread Man," "The Runaways," and "The Time, the Place and the Girl." He has also had a varied stock experience and has been in pictures for two years.

Mr. Ovey belongs to the zestful type of comedians. He is quick of speech, brimful of life, and does not resort to buffoonery. He is still a diminutive fellow and if he were to walk down the street with Jess Willard the couple would look like one and a half.

Pleas for Freedom of Screen

Bill of Rights Committee of Constitutional Convention Listens To Film Men Who Favor a Constitutional Amendment Putting Press and Picture on the Same Plane.

THE moving picture interests after some delays and disappointments finally succeeded on Wednesday, June 23, in coming before the Constitutional Convention in Albany. They were heard by the committee on The Bill of Rights of which Louis Marshall is the chairman.

The idea of having the freedom of the screen embodied in the fundamental law of the state and thus secure immunity from attacks on the motion picture for at least twenty years originated with The Moving Picture World which pleaded for the political enfranchisement of the picture years ago. The appeal of The Moving Picture World to the film interests to rouse themselves and make a fight before the Albany convention resulted in a meeting of all the prominent producers and film men in the East and when Walter W. Irwin the general manager of the "Big Four" went to Albany he bore with him the commission of practically every important branch of the producing interests. Mr. Irwin had repeatedly paid eloquent tribute to the activities of The Moving Picture World in the anti-censorship campaign and he went on record as having found the material supplied to him by this paper of the utmost value. The other members of the committee appointed by the producers meeting to go to Albany were: Paul Cromelin of the Cosmofotofilm Company, W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World, Jacob W. Binder of the National Board and Samuel L. Rothapfel.

There also appeared before the committee Mark Eisner, a delegate to the convention from New York and the introducer of the amendment in favor of granting the constitutional guarantee of freedom of expression to the motion picture. Mr. Eisner spoke in favor of the amendment saying that all possible abuses by motion picture producers can be dealt with in the same way in which abuses by publishers are treated. Mr. Eisner after his speech in support of the amendment introduced the speakers to the committee. A man who it was said belonged to the Board of Aldermen of New York appeared in the assembly parlor where the hearing was held saying that he had a commission from the Fox interests to speak against the submission of the amendment, but he was not heard before the committee.

Irwin's Speech.

Mr. Irwin in opening his remarks pointed to the liberty of the press which he declared nobody today thought of curtailing. He was interrupted by the chairman who said that he differed from Mr. Irwin and that he thought restrictions on the press might be a good thing. The chairman also read a letter from a Jewish Society protesting against ridiculing the Jew upon the screen. He endeavored to build up an argument for drastic control of the motion picture on the premises of the letter. Mr. Irwin's remarks were substantially as follows:

I would not attempt to enlighten this committee upon questions of constitutional law; the reverse would be more appropriate. I am here to perform a duty which the industry owes, not only to itself, but to the public at large. That duty is to see to it that the American public does not unthinkingly step back into the tyranny of the Middle Ages and the resulting darkness. The mediums of thought expression are by word of mouth, writing, printing, painting, drawing, sculpture, song and the moving picture. The moving picture has become the most effective medium for transmission of thought so far known to the world. In fact there seems to be a spirit to restrict it and to punish it because of its very effectiveness. It is a medium of powerful educational enlightenment, not to mention mental pleasure, and because of its effectiveness it is gathering unto itself thousands of adherents each day.

At the present time the motion picture is either censored or is threatened with censorship by a small group of people animated by ignorance, prejudice, malice or jealousy of success, with results that are or will be destructive of the industry and contrary to the principles of our freedom. We therefore present this amendment, knowing that if the Empire State, the leader in broad-mindedness, the leader in safeguarding and sustaining the principles upon which this country is founded, adopts it, that such action will be followed by her sister states.

If the press is free to advocate the principles of a party and the election of its candidate, why should not this stronger vehicle of thought transmission be equally free? To illustrate the dangers to which thought suppression is submitted by censorship, permit me to give a few examples:

In Ohio, one of the greatest religious pictures that has ever been made, a picture which has been shown broadcast all over the country, a picture of the life of Christ, was practically destroyed by one of three censors eliminating the Crucifixion.

In Chicago, a comedy in which a country constable was thrown into a lake was rejected upon the ground that it had held the police force of Chicago, the guardians of the law, up to ridicule.

In 1909 the fathers of the business—such men as Thomas A. Edison, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Albert E. Smith, Mr. Lubin, Mr. Selig, Mr. Spoor and others of their standing went to the People's Institute and asked that a committee be appointed before whom they could voluntarily submit their pictures for criticism, agreeing at the same time that they would abide by any alterations, amendments or rejections made by that committee. The result was that a committee of 140 high-minded, public-spirited citizens was appointed to serve without pay, and were not interested in the industry directly or indirectly. This committee was divided into sub-committees of 5 or 6, each of whom met on a specific afternoon or morning and passed upon the pictures submitted. The rulings of these committees were sent out broadcast to over 450 special committees all over the country, with the result that any picture which was not submitted was immediately condemned elsewhere or was looked at with a prejudiced eye. Consequently to-day over 97½ per cent. of the pictures manufactured are submitted to this national board for approval or rejection.

But, gentlemen, this is voluntary regulation carried out with good faith. It is conducted by people of education and public spirit who at times upon pictures of great importance call in representatives of the public, consisting of preachers, priests, rabbis, lawyers, doctor and business men to aid them in their decision and to properly determine the consensus of public opinion upon a picture involving a moral question or other questions which might be injurious to the public.

An Appeal to Constructive Statesmanship.

The next speaker, W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World, told the committee that a great new industry closely allied to a fine and useful art was asking the committee to exercise its sound and constructive statesmanship to give it "a legal habitation and a name."

"If I write a book," continued Mr. Bush, "you do not ask me to submit the proofs to state censorship. If I hire an artist to provide the book with pictures you will not claim that I must submit the pictures to any restraint in advance of publication. If I make sixteen pictures to a second on a strip of film and then exhibit this film publicly am I without the protection of the constitution? If the motion picture is in point of law different from the printed page or from the still picture, where, when and how does this difference begin? When, where and how does the right of the state arise to deal with the motion picture on any other basis than it deals with print and with the still pictures? Does the picture become a lawful object for censoring the moment it begins to move or because it stimulates motion? The editor uses paper for his raw material, the film publisher user strips of celluloid, the editor uses ink and type, the publisher of films uses the processes of photography. How in the name of law and of common sense can you as lawyers and statesmen make fish of one and flesh of the other? We have been too patient under abuse and attack. The spirit of the old British law still hovers over our legal institutions; we have come here to ask you to define our legal status in this state at least. Are we publishers of films just as other men are publishers of books, or are we 'common showmen' in the sense of the medieval law of the British Isles with no legal rights whatever and just tolerated by the authorities, who have the right of life and death over all of us? In Britain they still have censorship of the stage, but our country from the very beginning abhorred censorship, and it never took root in American soil. Your chairman spoke of ridiculing the Jew on the screen. Why, I was present at a meeting of producers or their representatives who came in response to an invitation of Mr. Simmons, the attorney for the society whose letter has just been read. It was acknowledged at the meeting that indiscretions might have been committed and there was a unanimous desire to rectify such mistakes. This ridiculing of Jews or of Irishmen or of Germans or of Yankees is, of course, in the worst possible taste, and I for one am in favor of stopping it, but I do not blind myself to the fact that these indiscretions do not necessarily proceed from malice or ill-will."

Mr. Marshall agreed with the speaker on this point. Mr. Bush gave the committee such information as to facts and figures showing the nature of the invention and its progress as they needed to consider the question before them intelligently. Mr. Binder, Mr. Cromelin and Mr. Rothapfel also spoke.

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN RETURNS FROM COAST.

Following the return of Mary Pickford and her company from the Los Angeles studios of the Famous Players Film Co., Albert A. Kaufman, who has acted as Western Manager of the Famous Players since the resumption of activities in California by this concern, returned last Monday to New York, having had to remain in Los Angeles after the departure of Miss Pickford's company, in order to terminate temporarily the affairs of the Famous Players on the Coast.

Mr. Kaufman will take part in the studio management of the Famous Players in New York until the erection of the three new studios now being planned in California is completed, when he will return to the Coast in charge of the three companies who will undoubtedly thereafter operate permanently in California.

ROBERT CUMMINGS ENGAGED FOR "THE IMPOSTER."

Robert Cummings, who has just finished as the heavy in the William A. Brady-World Film picture, "The Cub," has been engaged to appear in the newest William A. Brady photoplay, "The Imposter," which will be produced at the World Film studios.

Illinois Censor Bill Hearing

Prominent Motion Picture Men Protest Before Governor Dunne at Springfield—No Decision.

STRONG arguments in favor of vetoing the Olson motion picture censorship bill were made before Governor Dunne on Monday, June 28, by motion picture manufacturers and exhibitors and by the city authorities of Chicago. Secretary of State Lewis G. Stevenson, who will have the power to appoint the board if the act becomes a law, one of his clerks and the legal adviser of the state senate were the only defenders of the bill. They made a sorry showing. All of the logic was on the side of the opponents of the measure.

Ex-Congressman James M. Graham, of Springfield, as the attorney for the Illinois branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, made a strong speech against the creation of a state censorship board: "When you open the door to motion picture censorship, you prepare the way for newspaper censorship," he declared. "The line between the censoring of motion pictures and the censoring of pictures in the papers is extremely hard to draw. Another thing: censors don't know everything, although they are supposed to. A board of censors in Chicago has ruled out films which have appeared in nearly every other city.

"I think the motion picture show is one of the pleasantest things in our national life. It is one of the greatest pleasures of the poor. It ought to be commended and encouraged. If we want censors, we have the national board of censors, and we have the police power of cities. That should be sufficient. There are no three men in the state of Illinois as capable of judging what is moral and proper as the people themselves."

He denounced the bill as legislation which would make three men to be appointed by the secretary of state the judge of morals for the entire state. He said that the provision of the bill that films which had been passed by other state censorship boards could be passed by this board merely by the payment of the fee of $1 per thousand feet, was conferring the powers of government on a board in some other state and was, therefore, unconstitutional.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Reker of Chicago opposed the bill because it would take away from the Chicago city board of censors the authority it now has, except insofar as the state law conserves this authority. The state law gives the censors power to pass only on the question of the morality of the film, and leaves out the question of race hatred, religious prejudice, etc. This is the most important feature of the Chicago board's work, he declared. "We've got the power to censor pictures now," he said. "Every city in the state, by its police powers, can determine what kind of pictures shall be shown, and that is the way it should be. What is a perfectly proper picture for Cairo possibly would not do in Chicago, and what would do in Chicago might not do in Cairo."

He complained also that the bill does not give sufficient leeway. Under its provisions all pictures must be judged as to whether they are moral or obscene from the standpoint of the child. What is improper for a child to see may be proper for the adult. Yet there is no provision for a division of films into the two classes.

"Under this law 'The Scarlet Letter' would be ruled out," he said. "Another thing, if the city censorship board makes a wrong ruling, it is possible for the exhibitor to get quick action in court. Under the state act, producers could not afford to come to Sangamon county and begin a long court proceeding, the nature of which is not very clear. The bill places all the power in the hands of the secretary of state. He can appoint the board and remove it at will."

Here Secretary of State Stevenson sprang to his feet: "No he can't remove them at will," he shouted, "only for cause."

"Yes, but he can always find a cause. If they don't rule to suit him he can remove them," Reker answered.

Reker declared that the $1 a reel of 1,000 feet would not pay the expenses of the board and that it would be a burden on the state. He called on Major Funkhouser of Chicago, head of the Chicago censorship board, to explain how the Chicago board has been losing money.

Major Funkhouser said that the Chicago board charged fifty cents a film and is running about $7,000 to $9,000 behind a year. He expressed the belief that $1 a reel would not nearly meet the expenses the state would have to meet in operating a censorship board. He also went into detail regarding the work of the Chicago board, showing how it is made to fit the needs of the community. When religious films are shown representatives of the religions involved are called in to judge them. The same is true of race questions.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, complained that the state censorship bill would work a great hardship on companies producing the Weeklies. He cited the automobile races in Chicago as an example. "If this law were in effect we should have to have the film passed by the state board and by that time it would be ancient history," he explained. "We are like the newspapers, we must present these films while they are new. This bill would make us recorders of history instead of news."

"Don't you know that we could have a Chicago office of the board to judge the films there?" bristled Secretary Stevenson.

"The bill doesn't say that," Berst replied; "I only know what the act provides."

L. L. Lewis, secretary of the Anti-Defamation League of America, urged the vetoing of the bill because it makes no provision regarding films inciting race hatred, etc.

The further point was made in a general discussion, that there are 25,000 films in circulation in the state and that it would take three men a year to pass on these themselves. It was declared that there would be congestion and great injury to the motion picture business.

James H. Long, a clerk in Secretary Stevenson's office, made the principal argument for the bill. He uttered a lot of generalities, urging the need of censorship in general. He showed the "cut-outs" printed in Chicago papers and said that these cutouts were all in the films which were shown down state.

"The fact that Chicago has a board and wants to keep it shows that censorship is a good thing," he said. "If it is a good thing for Chicago why is it not a good thing for the state."

"I should like to ask," broke in Mr. Reker, "who besides the secretary of state wants this bill?"

"I'll answer that," said Secretary Stevenson, springing to his feet. "Senator Olson introduced this bill without consulting me. I did not know anything about it until it was introduced. A majority of the legislature wanted it."

"Yes, but who wanted it besides the politicians?" broke in a spectator.

"I'll ask Mr. Meyer J. Stein, legal adviser of the state senate, to discuss that further," said the secretary.

Mr. Stein made a speech which was largely devoted to criticising Chicago's home rule theories.

Besides those who spoke, several motion picture men were present at the hearing. These included J. E. Willis of the General Film Company, Chicago, and Victor Eubank of the Essanay Company, besides several exhibitors from Springfield and other Illinois cities.

A letter signed by all of the picture houses in Springfield, urging the governor to veto the bill, was presented to him by the local exhibitors, in the name of the Illinois branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. They urged that the bill be vetoed on the ground:

"That there is already a national board of censors which will pass upon all films, as all of said films are of an interstate character.

"That every municipality has the power to regulate or prohibit the exhibition of improper films.

"That there is no necessity for a state board for said purpose.

"That the burden and expense of maintaining said board would inevitably fall upon and be borne by the individual exhibitors, who are already carrying as heavy a load as they are able to carry.

"That such a law is un-American, unnecessary and oppressive, and would very seriously interfere with one of the largest—the fifth largest industry in the United States, and with cheap and innocent amusement of the common people."

FRANK H. MADISON.

HORSLEY ENTERTAINS SENATOR SMOOT.

Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, and Mrs. Smoot visited the new Horsely studios in Los Angeles last week as the guests of David Horsley. Senator Smoot was surprised at the wealth the big motion picture enterprises in California represented, and expressed his deep interest. He was particularly interested, however, in the new Horsley plant with its skillfully devised arena for taking animal pictures, and the outdoor stages, convertible in a minute's time to an indoor studio, should inclement weather make such a change necessary. Mr. Horsley was warmly congratulated for his enterprise by Senator Smoot.

Tribute to Rothapfel.

Many Leading Film Men Meet in the College Room of the Hotel Astor and Tell the Young Man What They Think of Him—Roster of Hosts Reads Like "Who's Who" in Filmdom.

THE "social event" of the season in motion picture circles was the banquet tendered to Samuel L. Rothapfel by admiring friends in the College Room of the Hotel Astor on the night of Thursday, June 24th. It was likewise the most sociable event in many seasons. Film men, it must be admitted, rarely find points of merit in other film men and when any considerable number of them get together to hand bouquets to one of their own species the occasion at once becomes sensational and memorable.

It is, therefore, highly gratifying to record the tribute paid to the Prometheus of Exhibition, Samuel L. Rothapfel. The writer's idea to honor Rothapfel for the things he has done for the advancement of the motion picture found a ready response from all the big interests of the industry.

When the hosts of Rothapfel sat down to the banquet there were thirty-one of them. The names speak for themselves: Daniel Frohman, Edwin Thanhouser, Jules E. Brulatour, William Fox, Charles O. Baumann, Briton N. Busch, Paul Cromelin, Adam Kessel, Charles Kessel, Samuel Goldfish, Walter W. Irwin, Frederick Thompson, Abraham Carlos, Felix Kahn, Crawford Livingston, Carl Pierce, Lewis J. Selznik, W. R. Sheehan, James D. Williams, George Kann, Carl Anderson, Frank D. Sniffin, J. W. Binder, Jacob Wilk, Tarleton Winchester. The motion picture press was represented by William A. Johnston, Robert E. Welsh and John W. Semler. Two foreign hosts were Harry Musgrove of Australia and Arthur Northam of England. Regrets were read from Siegmund Lubin, Marion S. Pearce, J. J. Kennedy, William L. Sherry and William A. Brady.

Each of the hosts found on his plate a beautiful souvenir commemorative of the occasion. The artistic cover was printed from photogravure plate and tied with silk ribbon. The menu was worthy of the occasion.

The dinner was enjoyed very thoroughly and before long the atmosphere of the elaborate dining hall, which was tastefully and profusely decorated with flowers, became impregnated with a spirit of good fellowship. All who were present had obeyed the same creditable impulse—the impulse to bestow merit where merit called for praise and generous recognition. When the dinner had been finished the toastmaster arose and told Mr. Rothapfel that every one present had come to honor him and to give public and emphatic evidence of the appreciation he felt for Rothapfel's work. The speaker dwelt with pleasure on the fact that there was such an unanimous desire to recognize the services of the guest of the evening.

"We have been," he continued, "exceedingly willing to admit the faults and the deficiencies of the other fellow. Outsiders have often wondered at the lack of harmony in our ranks. Within recent times there has come a change for the better and I hope we have started on an era of good feeling. We cannot signalize the new departure better than by gathering around our guest this evening. This is a splendid way of showing the solidarity of our fine and useful art. The man whom we seek to honor tonight has created a new form of entertainment. When recently I spoke from the stage of The Strand, gazing into a sea of faces marked with intelligence and culture, when I saw before me an audience such as might well have graced grand opera, I realized to the fullest what work Mr. Rothapfel had accomplished. You are here tonight because you feel that this man has opened the doors to the temple of quality. He has encouraged the producer with high ambitious and corresponding ability. He has set an example; yes, he has founded a school of exhibition which will stimulate high-class productions. We cannot at this time have the full perspective of the man and his work; that is reserved to a later generation; but we have seen enough of the practical fruits of his work to feel impelled to honor him for what he has done. He has served the whole industry as no man has ever served it before. It is my pleasant and honorable duty to present him tonight with a token of our regard, which we hope will please him and be a lasting record of our honest admiration."

With these words the toastmaster brought forth from under the table a very pretty mahogany case and touching a spring revealed to the gaze of the astonished guest what looked like an album with the silver-embossed initials S. L. R. As the album was opened it turned out to be a biography dedicated to Samuel L. Rothapfel printed in old Gothic style on vellum and illuminated after the manner of the old monks who had made an art out of the handling of ancient script.

For a moment or two the guest seemed to be embarrassed and mentally groping for words with which to meet the emergency. He who knows so well how to play upon emotion could scarcely master his own. When he finally rallied he appeared to be in his best form. After expressing his profound gratitude he spoke of his early efforts, saying with a touch of pathos that caught all his hosts:

"All that I am today, all that I may have achieved until now I owe to the motion picture. But a few years ago the names of the men seated about this table appeared to me like the names of demi-gods and little did I think that I would ever sit in their midst and still less did I ever dream that I would be thus honored by them. I need not assure you that I propose to dedicate my life to the motion picture. I have attained the height of my ambition in being permitted to obey my own impulses and to create my own entertainment without let or hindrance. If I fail I have no excuses to offer; the fault will be all my own. I earnestly hope that I will succeed. I earnestly hope that I will surpass what I have done heretofore. I earnestly hope that 'The Rialto' will become a veritable temple of the motion picture; a light set on a hill whence all may draw hope and inspiration. I want to say too that 'The Rialto' will be absolutely free in the selection of its programs and it will know no other test and no other affiliation than merit and quality. I want the producers of the world to know that 'The Rialto' will welcome their best productions and that the only criterion will be that of quality."

Mr. Rothapfel's remarks were received with vigorous applause. In the course of the night the toastmaster called upon all the representatives of the big interests in the industry and all responded in their best manner, mingling jest with solid matter, and freely criticising themselves and seeking as it were absolution for the past. Daniel Frohman was the first speaker and he wound a very pretty wreath in the garland of praise with which Rothapfel soon found himself bedecked. What he said of the relative merit of the screen and the speaking stage was very happily put and showed the able veteran's grasp of the art of amusement and the art of expression. Mr. Brulatour made a hit with his story of the American who toasted the queen in most informal fashion; Mr. Fox said very little about himself and his company and a good deal about the splendid work of the guest of the evening; Samuel Goldfish told the story of how he captured a prima donna for the screen; Edwin Thanhouser spoke in his own entertaining and compelling way about the days of the pioneers; Frederick Thompson defended the thesis that the motion picture is the result of a new art; Mr. Sniffin of the Paramount told of the regret of his prinicipal not to be able to participate; Mr. Lewis J. Selznik made a witty speech full of meat and humor, uproariously delighting his audience; James D. Williams characterized the guest of the evening as the man "who made poor pictures good and good pictures better;" William A. Johnston spoke of the progress of the press and its responsibility; Jacob W. Binder bestowed the benediction of the National Board of Censors and also recorded his personal approval of every item on the bill of fare; Paul Cromelin threw interesting sidelights on the past, the present and the future; Crawford Livingston said it seemed to him that the crazier a man is in this business the better he seems to succeed, looking in a significant way at the guest of honor, and there was a lot more of the flow of reason very largely interspersed with comedy relief.

Everybody agreed that the Rothapfel dinner had been in every conceivable meaning of the word a most distinct success, leaving behind it pleasant memories and sweet auguries of the future.

Creighton Hale, the Pathe Actor

CREIGHTON HALE, the Pathe actor who appears as "Jameson" in "The Exploits of Elaine," tells how he first happened to go into pictures.

He was playing in "Indian Summer," then a Broadway attraction, under the management of the late Charles Frohman, and his work was noticed and liked by a Pathe director. An attractive proposition was made to him by the director which was accepted, and since then he has appeared continuously in Pathe pictures.

Creighton Hale.

Mr. Hale comes by his dramatic ability naturally, since his ancestors for generations have been identified with the English stage. His father for years was a favorite with London playgoers, and the young Mr. Hale embarked upon the same career at a very early age. He came to America as a member of Lady Forbes Robertson's "The Dawn of Tomorrow" company, and liked the country so well that he stayed here ever since. Under the direction of the Whartons, the Pathe producers, he has become widely known to the moving picture public.

Funeral of Elmer Booth

D. W. Griffith Makes Feeling Address at the Grave of the Reliance Actor Killed in Automobile Accident.

THE FUNERAL services over the body of Elmer Booth, the actor who was killed in a automobile accident on the morning of Wednesday, June 16, in Los Angeles, were held on the afternoon of Friday, June 18. There was a large attendance of fellow-players of Mr. Booth, practically all of the Reliance-Majestic studio staff being present. The large number of floral pieces attested the popularity of Mr. Booth. At the grave the players, through Thomas Wilson, who had charge of the arrangements, asked David W. Griffith to make an address. Mr. Griffith responded, eulogizing the player and the man. He spoke with much feeling. Twenty-eight automobiles were necessary to convey the party to the cemetery. Mr. Booth left a mother, a brother and a sister, with whom he lived at 110 West Seventeenth street.

Elmer Booth was born in Los Angeles thirty years ago. He was educated at and was graduated from St. Vincent's College. He had won medals in oratory and in athletics. In a Los Angeles physical culture contest he won a diamond center medal over 1,500 contestants. Mr. Booth's first appearance on the stage was at the Burbank in "The Prisoner of Zenda." A stock engagement in San Francisco followed which lasted eight years. He then came east and played with Arnold Daly in "The Boys of Company B," in "The Love Route," and in "The Cad," and "A Gentleman of Leisure" with Douglas Fairbanks. It was of his work in the latter that a foremost critic said of him: "Elmer Booth is the best stage burglar Broadway has seen to date—he lives his part instead of acting it." He played in "A Thief for a Night" and created the name part in "Stop Thief." His last appearance on the stage was in "Me and Grant."

On the screen Mr. Booth has been seen much in Biograph productions under Mr. Griffith. He had recently joined the Reliance-Majestic forces and was working under Eddie Dillon as leading man opposite Fay Tincher.

Gotham Film Co. Increase Capitalization

Will Increase Production From Monthly to Weekly Release.

THE INCREASE in the business of The Gotham Film Co., Inc. has caused the Board of Directors to authorize the increase of the capital stock to $1,000,000.00.

This increase in capitalization will give the company elasticity to permit of expansion in a number of directions.

The company was primarily formed to release one picture a month, but its first release has made such a hit that it has been decided to gradually increase the output of the company until by October 1st they will be releasing one picture a week, and negotiations are already under way for a plant which will be big enough to handle them.

To keep up the quality of the productions, negotiations are now pending with several prominent Broadway stars to appear in Gotham features and also for a number of successful books and plays to serve as vehicles for them.

In the company's last picture "A Trade Secret," Mr. Frederic de Belleville and Miss Betty Marshall appeared as the principals and Miss Marshall was so successful in the picture that her services have been retained for all future Gotham productions.

The company has already entered into contracts with a number of leading exchange men to handle their productions and with the increased capitalization they will be able to open exchanges in all the principal territories in the United States.

The selling plan of the Gotham Film Co. is decidedly unique. The exchange man is allowed to deposit a very small sum as a guarantee and pay the balance to the company as the picture earns it so that the producer, the exchange man and the exhibitor can each participate in the earning power of the production.

ENTER FRESH AIR PICTURES.

The White City, Chicago, has inaugurated a new picture play policy to take the place of big band organizations as the leading free attraction feature of the park. The operating booth and picture screen are out in the open Parisian Gardens, which have accommodations for ten thousand people. The Essanay, six part production, "Indian Wars Refought by U. S. Army," distributed exclusively through the Central States by The W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation, Chicago, marked the opening of the new idea advertised extensively as "Fresh Air 'Movies'." The initial ten days' engagement was declared a decided success.

Lincoln Impersonator In Films

Benjamin Chapin Will Give the Public a Cycle of Lincoln Plays, Every One of Which Will Be a Feature in Itself.—"Old Abe" Title of First Release.

BENJAMIN CHAPIN, the famous impersonator of Abraham Lincoln, after a preparation of about two years, is coming before the motion picture public with what he calls "A Cycle of Lincoln Plays." Mr. Chapin has organized "The Charter Features Company," and for about a year or so has maintained offices in the World's Tower Building, 110 W. 42d Street, New York.

Mr. Chapin whose resemblance to the martyred President is the wonder of all who see him, believes that the motion picture far more than any other known medium, is capable of preserving the Lincoln history and the Lincoln traditions and presenting them to all the people. Indeed Mr. Chapin inclines to the belief that Lincoln, were he alive to-day, would be found on the side of the friends of the picture because the screen is the great theater of the "plain people."

"This is my lifework," he responded to a question. "Ever since I was able to think and read about Abraham Lincoln a vision of him has led me on, to spread the beauty of his adventurous life and by the sheer romance of his rise from poverty to President, inspire the youth of America.

"The methods I have followed have taken expression in lyceum work, in vaudeville and on the legitimate stage. On the lyceum circuit I received the highest fees ever paid any performer, and in vaudeville I played two years at a thousand a week.

"I have had much success and the helpfulness of Lincoln's surviving friends, while the body politic of America has bent every assistance to me in getting me before all the people.

"Ever since the first motion picture was shown on a sheet I have felt that this was the way I could best bring my patron saint before the millions. And, therefore, when some three years ago, the gentlemen who are responsible for the origin of the Charter Features Corporation, ventured the suggestion that I engineer such a production I gave up everything for that end, and I have devoted every moment since to the work. The Charter Features Corporation wanted to make a Lincoln series first and they told me that I was free to make it right. And I have done it."

"The point is this," continued Mr. Chapin with a deep, far away expression in the eyes under the bushy eyebrows, "Lincoln's life was a great adventure. Just think. Born in a hut in the woods, uneducated, ugly, awkward, unknown, he rose to the highest position in all the world. No melodrama could dare take such liberties with human possibilities. No Diamond Dick or paper novel could equal Lincoln's romance. Horatio Alger's novels are tame compared to Lincoln's life. Therefore we couldn't help make the pictures entertaining. If they seem to educate as well we are happy."

Asked why the word "cycle" had been chosen in giving the generic name to his productions, Mr. Chapin said:

"No other word could cover the situation. Series or serial would not do. Here we have a most comprehensive and far-reaching analysis of Lincoln's career, from the days of his grandfather to the assassination. We have tried to find in all literature an equivalent, but there is none. This is the biggest dramatic attempt ever made. It is historical, monumental, beyond compare. We recalled the Passion Play at Oberammergau that takes up the life of Jesus and lasts a week, but this extends for three years! Each individual production is a complete play, independent and sufficient in itself yet fitting into the progression of the cycle in point of time and unity.

"From the exhibitors' standpoint here is the finest business holder and creater yet devised. Cycle is a word that will be copied and imitated, I warrant, for it will take on a gigantic meaning as the Lincoln Plays spread over the country." Benjamin Chapin here rose and extended that long forefinger of his. "As a matter of fact 'Lincoln cycle' is a misnomer. It almost should be called 'The Spirit of America,' for Lincoln is the embodiment of America—its personification. He illustrated with every year of his life the rise of our nation and the way it has met the problems.

"He typifies liberty, justice and the equality of all men, and the ability of any to rise to the heights. That is America and this cycle will be in reality 'The Life of Our Nation.'

"Every child in tenements, woods or farm is led on by Lincoln's calling to a better faith in America."

The first release of the Charter Features Company is called "Old Abe" and deals in the main with the life and adventures of the grandfather of the President, whose name also was Abraham Lincoln. This grandfather emigrated from Virginia into Kentucky, or what was then known as the frontier land of the new born republic. It was said that he was a friend of Daniel Boone. The pictures show the adventures and the family life of the grandather in great detail. President Lincoln on a drive through the country meets a blind old man who was to be dispossessed pursuant to an order of Secretary Stanton, who wanted all rebel property confiscated. The President's indignation is stirred at the thought of putting a blind old man out of his home and he sends off a messenger to Stanton protesting against his action. In the mean time the President talks with the old Southerner, who not knowing his visitor invokes the curse of heaven upon Lincoln, "who would rob the Southerners he could not kill." In the course of the talk with the old man it develops that he is a descendant of Daniel Boone. Lincoln tells him that Boone was a great friend of his grandfather and the story shifts to the pioneer days showing Indian fights and all the hardships of the early settlers. Thomas Lincoln, the father of the President, and Mordecai, the uncle, are shown in the happy little circle sheltered in the old log cabin. Of course the old man's home is saved for him by the intervention of the President. The old man is speechless when he discovers the identity of his visitor and friend.

Chapin as Lincoln.

The work of Mr. Chapin in this feature is beyond all praise. He takes the part of the President's grandfather and of the President himself. In both parts he gives a finished impersonation. As to the rest of the picture Mr. Chapin deserves great credit for having done so well considering the handicaps he had to contend with and the difficulties which always confront a newcomer in the field of motion pictures.

LEAH BAIRD AND MAURICE COSTELLO REUNITED.

In rearranging the personnel of their companies, so as to obtain the greatest maximum of efficiency, the Vitagraph Company has assigned Leah Baird to play leads opposite Maurice Costello. When Miss Baird first joined the Vitagraph Company, about four years ago, she appeared with Mr. Costello in a one-part dramatic story entitled "The Old Silver Watch," produced under the direction of Van Dyke Brooke. This famous three are again united in the production of a two-part feature entitled "The Dawn of Understanding," in which Miss Baird portrays an emotional lead.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Fears That Olson Bill Will be Signed by Governor Dunne.

THE hearing on the Olson bill before Governor Dunne, when reasons why that measure should not receive the Executive's signature were advanced by those who opposed it, was made in Springfield, Ill., Monday afternoon, June 28, in the Governor's reception room. The meeting was public.

Ex-Congressman James M. Graham, of Springfield, and Second Deputy Funkhouser and Assistant Corporation Counsel George L. Reker, of Chicago, appeared to give reasons why the bill should be vetoed. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope, was also present in the interests of that company and the trade to show why the bill should not become law.

Mr. Reker in presenting his view of the state censorship board asked the question:

"Outside of Secretary of State Stevenson, who would appoint the state board, who is here for this bill—what cities, what constituencies? Whence the demand for this legislation?"

Meyer J. Stein, law clerk of the Senate, who was introduced by Secretary of State Stevenson, replied, but failed to throw any light on the question of the demand for such legislation.

Outside of the Secretary of State, W. L. Long, attorney for the Secretary of State's department, and the Senate law clerk, not a voice was heard in favor of the bill.

In the course of his remarks against the bill, ex-Congressman Graham, who represented many moving picture exhibitors, said:

"Between the people who produce pictures on screens and men who draw cartoons for newspapers the line is most finely drawn. If censorship is to begin with one where is it to stop with the other? The proposition eventually would reach the consorship of the press itself.

"The idea of censorship is repugnant to the American people.

"Moving pictures to-day are one of the pleasantest things we have in life. They have brought more wholesome amusement to the poor, to the working classes, than any modern device.

"There are no three men in the State of Illinois—and I will not even except you, honored Governor—capable of composing a censorship board to establish a moral standard. The people themselves constitute the only possible board.

"The bill provides that the state board shall sit in censorship 'congresses' with other states and that the findings of that 'congress' shall be binding on the board of Illinois. Under such a scheme Illinois might be outvoted in a 'congress' of state boards, and the verdict of that board would be imposed upon Illinois, according to this bill. That is absurd. It is delegating the power of this board to citizens and boards not of this state."

Mr. Reker pointed out that cities have now established their power in the courts to regulate moving pictures in their own communities, and that the Olson bill would take away home rule from all Illinois cities. He also showed that an injustice done by the Chicago board of censors could be corrected through appeal to the courts, the Mayor or the Council; but that in the proposed bill the Secretary of State was the czar, and that appeal could be had only through the Sangamon County courts.

Major Funkhouser showed that the state board would be a costly investment for the taxpayers. He said that the Chicago board cost $25,000 per annum, between $7,000 and $8,000 short of the revenue they created.

J. A. Berst showed how pictures like the Hearst-Selig Weekly and similar productions would be affected by the bill. "The Selig Polyscope Co. is releasing in Chicago to-day pictures taken of the great automobile race Saturday," he said. "What would have happened had we been obliged to come to a board in Springfield? This bill would have made of us historians instead of news film producers.

"Moreover, there are in Illinois to-day 35,000 films on 25,000 different subjects. If this bill is signed it would take eleven months to pass on all these films. Are the picture people to close up in the meantime?"

The proponents of the bill hold that, if the Governor vetoes it, fully 1,100 cities and villages down state will be left at the mercy of unscrupulous film distributors in St. Louis, Evansville, Indianapolis, Des Moines and Dubuque, with no opportunity offered for censorship of any description, and without even the chance for assistance from the municipal censorship of the Chicago ordinance provisions.

Secretary of State Stevenson explained that the state board would have an office in Chicago, and that there was no reason why that board could not be as expeditious in censoring films as the Chicago board.

W. L. Long showed that many of the cutouts ordered by the Chicago municipal board are exhibited down state, and that there is no way to reach this condition.

Ex-Congressman Graham held that this could be governed entirely by the police powers, under the cities and villages act, and that if a community needed regulation, the sentiment of the community would be the first to assert itself.

At the time of writing (Tuesday morning, June 29) it is feared that Governor Dunne will sign the bill.

CHICAGO FILM BREVITIES.

Wm. N. Selig returned from Los Angeles Sunday, June 27, after an absence of nearly nine weeks.

Mary Pickford, accompanied by her mother, passed through the city Wednesday, June 23, on her way to New York from Los Angeles. Kitty Kelly, moving picture critic of the Chicago Tribune, arranged it so that Mary had one of the surprises of her life, as the platforms of the station at which she arrived were fairly blocked by a big crowd of Chicago moving picture fans all eager to catch a glimpse of the popular little star.

After playing in feature productions for nearly a year, Miss Kathlyn Williams will vary her work by appearing in a three-reel animal story written by herself, which will bear the title, "The Mark of a Lioness." William Robert Daly, who was recently added to the Selig forces and who has had long experience, will be director. Miss Williams, it is said, has redemonstrated her ability as a photoplaywright. The story is said to be original and far out of the beaten path.

Miss Fritzi Brunnette, who has played leads in several well known companies, has joined the Selig forces at the Edendale studio. She will be seen shortly in leading roles, in both single and multiple reels.

* * *

Tom Mix has left Los Angeles for Las Vegas, N. M., where he will produce several big out-door Western photoplays. Tom will furnish the stories as well as doing his own directing.

White City, Chicago, has made a novel departure by using spectacular feature films in place of large band organizations as the leading free attraction features of that resort. The operating booth and picture screen are out in the open, in the Parisian Gardens, which will accommodate 10,000 people. The throw is 180 feet, a powerful lens being used. These pictures are seen in daylight as well as at night to advantage by means of an ingeniously boxed screen, installed under the direction of Frank L. Hough, manager of the Kleine Optical Co. The big six-reel feature, "Indian Wars Refought by U. S. Army," was the first picture used by the management to demonstrate the practicability of daylight pictures in the open air. It was extensively advertised and its engagement of ten days was a big success. The W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation of Chicago handles this picture exclusively in the central states.

W. O. Stevens, proprietor and manager of the Eagle theater, Princeton, Ill., called at the office last Monday. Mr. Stevens was anxious to know if there was any insurance company in existence that would take risks on reels of films in transit from the exchange to the exhibitor. At the present time a tax of 10 cents is placed upon each reel of a thousand feet by the express companies, a valuation of $100 being placed on each reel. Mr. Stevens believes that such a company could be formed and profitably conducted at a saving to the exhibitor. I do not know of any insurance company that would taks such risks, but it seems to me that moving picture organizations should take the matter up. Mr. Stevens stated that the condition of the trade in Princeton is fair. The Eagle seats 300 people and Licensed service is being used, an admission of 10 cents being charged for a program of five reels.

Alfred Hamburger has decided to add another house to his chain of moving picture theaters in Chicago. Ground will soon be broken on Sheridan Road, near Wilson avenue, for a three-story theater and office building on a site 100 by 140 feet. When completed the theater will have a seating capacity for 1,000 people. The new house will be called the Beverly Bayne in honor of Miss Beverly Bayne, one of Essanay's popular stars. "Miss Bayne is a Chicago girl and as such is entitled to the loyal support of all the Chicago picture theater-goers," said Mr. Hamburger. "I discovered during the recent run of 'Graustark,' at the Ziegfeld, that she had a great following among the fans, and I decided then to call my next theater Beverly Bayne." Miss Bayne, naturally, appreciates the honor highly, and when she was informed of Mr. Hamburger's intention she said: "I am especially pleased to have a theater located in my own neighborhood bearing my name. Mr. Hamburger tells me that the request that he should name this theater after me comes from the moving picture fans, and, needless to say, this fills me with joy. Living in Chicago, as I do, I should feel badly if the Chicago people did not like me."

"Little Pal," a Paramount feature, with Mary Pickford in the leading role, is chief of the moving picture attractions at Orchestra Hall for the current week. "Rip Van Winkle" was the special weekly attraction for children at this house Saturday morning, June 26. These children's exhibitions are growing very popular.

"The Spendthrift," George Kleine's six-reel feature photodrama, took so well at the Ziegfeld last week that it has been retained for another week.

"The White Sister," Essanay's fine six-reel photodrama, adapted from F. Marion Crawford's play of that name, entered upon an indefinite run at the Fine Arts theater on Saturday, June 26. Viola Allen has captured the moving picture fans in this, her first, effort in photodramatic work.

"Prohibition," which received its opening presentation at the Studebaker on Thursday, June 24, is drawing well.

The Colonial theater is running "The Sins of the Mothers" for the first part of the week, beginning Monday, June 28. This, it will be remembered, is the $1,000 prize photodrama written by Elaine Sterne, the judges being John Bunny, Maurice Costello, Don Marquis, Errol Bart and Edward M. La Roche.

"The Birth of a Nation" entered the fourth week of its run at the Illinois theater Saturday, June 26. The house is crowded daily, both at matinees and evenings.

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, who has been suffering from nervous prostration for some time past, owing to the shocking news of the drowning of her only sister, Mrs. R. Delno Shymer on the Lusitania, is slowly regaining her health at the home of her mother in New York. The body of Mrs. Shymer was recovered and shipped to New York, but all the others were lost. It has developed that Mrs. Shymer got into a life boat just as the Lusitania turned over and sank, and the boat was drawn down into the vortex. A few moments before she had been assured by an officer that there was no danger. Miss Heikes Justice is contemplating a journey far into the North, in the near future, where she will remain until the fall, when she hopes to resume her work.

The Selig publicity department is to be complimented on the handsome and artistically printed booklet which gives the story of "The Rosary." This will be a valuable aid to exhibitors, as it has "class" of a distinctive type.

The Photoplay Releasing Company is now selling territorial rights for the Auto-Derby at the Chicago Speedway Park. Two thousand feet showing all the exciting and thrilling passages in the great race are offered. The pictures were taken by the Advance Motion Picture Co., and they show fine photography throughout.

H. C. Luedtke, former owner of the Star theater, Waukegan, Ill., purchased the Columbia theater in Kenosha, Wis., about a month ago from Charles Staehle. The Columbia seats 550 people and charges 5 and 10 cents admission for programs of four and six reels of Mutual service. Mr. Luedtke stated that he is running "The Diamond from the Sky" to very good business. "The Christian" was shown recently for 10 cents to capacity houses. Mr. Luedtke is figuring on installing a balcony in the Columbia, to seat about 200 people. Business in Kenosha is very good. Mr. Luedtke was a caller at our office Tuesday, June 29.

Six Months of Metro

New Feature Exchange Reveals Marked Success—Has Many Noted Stars.

JULY 4 marks the sixth month of the Metro Pictures Corporation and the first year in existence of B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays and The Popular Plays and Players, and when Richard A. Rowland, President and General Manager of the Metro concern announced that the corporation is now on a paying basis and that it had accomplished within twenty-three weeks what the most sanguine Metroite anticipated doing in a year, an excellent idea of the rapidity with which Metro has assumed national importance, can be gained.

Metro and its producing allies now control the efforts of forty-four stage stars. Among those who work permanently and exclusively for Metro are:

William Faversham, Francis X. Bushman, Mme. Petrova, Emily Stevens, Edmund Breese, Orrin Johnson, Valli Valli, Florence Reed, Mary Miles Minter, Olive Wyndham and Ethel Barrymore.

Emmy Wehlen.

The stage personages engaged for just one picture, or more, are Emmy Wehlen, the Vienese actress recently seen at the Casino, Howard Estabrook, Edward Connelly who will be seen shortly in Geo. Ade's "Marse Covington," Gail Kane who will appear in the Popular Plays and Players production of "Her Great Match;" Ralph Herz, last seen in "A Pair of Sixes," at the Longacre Theater, will co-star with Lois Meredith in Sidney Rosenfeld's "The Purple Lady." Hamilton Revelle, one of the foremost leading men on the American stage, will appear co-jointly with Emily Stevens in a production of an original scenario, "The Liars," while Ann Murdock, seen in "A Celebrated Case" at the Empire, will begin work this week at the Dyreda Studio on Frohman's "A Royal Family."

Mme. Petrova will appear in five more pictures before January 1, 1916. Her forthcoming two productions will be "Vampire," a virile dramatic document, and "My Madonna" from the poem by the same name from Robert W. Service's collection of Arctic classics.

Edmund Breese will appear in four other plays. "The Spell of the Yukon," "Gold" and other adaptations from Service's works.

Ethel Barrymore will begin work shortly on a production of her most recent stage success, "The Shadow," and will perhaps appear in another Rolfe-Metro play.

Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow, working under the Quality Pictures banner, will be seen in six productions within the next eight months. "The Second in Command" from the play, will be their first. A filmization of "Richard Carvel" will follow and then Otis Skinner's former vehicle, "The Silent Voice" will come on the regular Metro program.

At the San Francisco convention the Metro representatives will argue for longer runs and less pictures. Withstanding all requests for a larger output, General Manager Rowland announced this week to the exchanges that Metro would not increase its output, that fifty-two pictures a year were sufficient and that longer runs and more careful attention to presentation detail would be more beneficial to the trade than a change of features every day or two.

Doings at Los Angeles

DAVID HORSLEY this week entertained at the MinA studios United States Senator Reed Smoot from Utah, also Dr. J. A. Scott, of the 1915 committee. The senator expressed his surprise at the magnitude of the industry and said he thought that this was the ideal place for making pictures.

Wallace Reid has left the Mutual and is now working at the Lasky studio, playing a part supporting Geraldine Farrar, who is being starred in a big Spanish production.

Harry Leonhardt, general western representative for the Fox Film Corporation, who has been here for the past few weeks, has departed for the east to be present at the convention in New York. He will stop over along the way to visit the many Fox exchanges throughout the country.

Another company has been launched here. It is an organization that will make educational films for the Pathe and other weeklies. They have established a laboratory at 1666 Highland avenue. The men at the head of the new concern are Messrs. Orrin Denny and C. B. Christie, the former having been with the Universal and Essanay firms.

Jack Byrne is now head of another MinA company and is busy at the Horsley headquarters making comedies. Jules Mendel, a former musical comedian, is leading the funny players.

Tropico, a small town near here, is holding a big carnival this week and the famous Kalem Elks club of Glendale, next door to the town, has been furnishing the spirit for the big events. Their White Star Patrol is competing against other drilling teams in the show.

Cyril Maude, who has been working at the Morosco studio for the past few weeks is now on his way to the east from where he will go to London.

We have not had a snake story since the rattlers invaded the Lasky offices last year, so here is an entirely new one which happened this week at Inceville. J. D. Jennings, head of the photographers at the canyon studio went into the dark room where the cameras are loaded. The vault is underground. When he reached up on a bench to get a roll of film his hand came in contact with a slimy cold thing which writhed out of his grasp and fell to the earth. He jumped for the switch and snapped on the white light, ruining about a hundred feet of film, and was just in time to see a snake of huge length sliding away under the cupboard. He yelled and departed as fast as he could to the outside and enlisted the aid of Cameraman Newhard who went fearlessly in, but when he saw the reptile he said "Somebody's Calling Me." Now for four days the Statics have been loath to enter the room because they do not know whether the snake is a rattler or just a gopher snake. The story will continue next week.

Charles "Feature" Abrams of the Quality Pictures gives out a good announcement this week. He says that the company, which moved last week from the old Universal plant across the street to the studio formerly occupied by the Eclair, will erect new buildings and remodel and enlarge the whole plant. The string of dressing rooms have already been raised and the new ones put up. A large new stage will be laid on the old one and over the ground cleared by the tearing up of the old buildings. It will be in two sections 60 by 90, and 75 by 100 feet.

There were in all 25 dressing rooms removed to make way for the new ones. A new projection room is to be constructed.

Sunday we bade farewell tc the Biographers who returned home after the busy winter they spent here. We hope to see them again soon. They stopped en route to take in the exposition at San Francisco before embarking on the homeward journey.

The Festive Three, a bevy of beauties from the Universal camp composed of Herbert Rawlinson, Roy McRae and George J. Uttal, were honored guests this week at the Hollywood Business Men's club when they were requested to sing some of their famous songs. Their minstrelsy was appreciated by the tired business men at this delightful banquet.

Frank Biggy who sold out his interest in the Norbig Film Co. to his partner, Frank E. Norton, has returned from a trip to the fair up north. Mr. Biggy made the journey by motor in one day, leaving here on Sunday and arriving in San Francisco the following morning, establishing a record for a touring car. He was accompanied by his wife and child.

Joseph Darling, advance representative for the Fox Films is in town after a trip of 6,500 miles through Arizona and New Mexico, billing the features turned out by Fox.

William H. Clifford, feature scenarioist has departed from the west and is on his way to New York on business. He turns out many of the big features which are produced by Thomas H. Iince.

* * *

A number of local exhibitors and men of the film industry are arranging to go to San Francisco next week to be on hand when the exhibitors start their big convention. A number of players will also go north for the meet.

* * *

Pretty Miss Phyllis Grey, who broke her left leg just above the ankle three weeks ago, is now hobbling about on crutches at the Balboa studio, receiving the congratulations of her many friends.

Raymond Hitchcock put one over on Mack Sennet the other day when he was given a half holiday. After he left the studios a man drove up to the offices and asked to see Mack Sennet saying he had a note from the great comedian. Sennet received him and read the note which was a request for a hundred dollars to be sent to Hitchcock at his Hollywood home. Mack got the money and when he turned to hand it to the messenger man, he beheld the funny man himself who was gurgling with laughter. He is surely a great make up artist.

Joe DeGrasse and his Big U players are off to the mountains at Bear Lake where they will shoot scenes at 7,000 feet over the sea. They are working on "The Sheriff of Long Butte," a two reel western mountain drama.

Orrin Johnson has arrived at Inceville and is already appearing before the lens in "The Three Musketeers," which will be a multiple reel story produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince.

Tod Browning who was badly injured when his automobile collided with a flat car killing Elmer Booth some days ago, is resting easily at the California hospital while his leg is being mended. George Sergman, who was also in the machine and who suffered bad cuts and bruises will soon be back to work at the Mutual studios.

Geraldine Farrar, now filming herself at the Lasky studios, is one of the most ardent workers on the screen, at least she seems to throw herself into the work more enthusiastically than the average stage star who comes west to appear in pictures. Everyone likes her immensely and she enjoys the work very much. She received this week by registered mail a package containing a picture of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, the first photograph taken after her recent operation. The accompanying note said, "You see, I thought of you first of all." Fred Kley, who received the much stamped and inspected package, said it was worse than being cross examined, to sign all the papers for the precious picture.

The Quality Pictures players were working at Santa Monica last week with Francis X. Bushman in the Boer Village which was built for certain scenes in the current picture. A big brown bear used in some of the thrilling parts escaped, and for days it was terrorizing the countryside until finally when the dynamite exploded in one scene the bear was scared into the open and captured.

Mrs. Adoni Foireri, a French woman, an actress and singer of note, has joined the Griffith producing forces at Hollywood and will play foreign parts in coming pictures here. She was with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt some time ago both in this country and abroad.

Julia Dean has arived at the Big U studios and is appearing in a picture feature written by Peter B. Kyne and Julius G. Furthman, to be called "Renunciation," which will be five reels long.

Herbert Rawlinson is now King of Universal City and Ella Hall is the Queen. These popular players were selected by the photoplayers and members of the company by popular vote, and will hold forth for the coming year.

With Roscoe Arbuckle and Tim Welch, two of the heaviest of heavyweights living at the seaside, we may now prepare to sit back and look for a tidal wave. Roscoe weighs 285 and Welsh tips the balance at 309, making a total of over a quarter of a ton of comedy weight. Roscoe broke open three bath suits from the bath house and so ordered a balloon made from rubberized and non-rippable aeroplane cloth, while Welsh is seeking a dry goods store that carries cloth wide enough to envelope his fat frame.

With a shipwreck of a genuine boat, and big volcanic scenes, "Aloha" a coming Ince feature directed by Dick Stanton ought to be worth while. The vessel was purchased for the sole purpose of being dashed onto the rocks near Santa Barbara.

Hoskins says the man was big and husky so he put him on in a character part. Now that the company is going away the big man came around the other day and said: "Mr. Hoskins, I've found this work just fine, I wouldn't go back to railroading for a million dollars, but if I don't get work at some studio, I'm afraid I'll have to return to the railroad, and I hate like h—— to have to go back to WORK."

Carl Laemmle, Joe Brandt, accompanied by cameramen, actors, and Buck Massie, who did the receiving publicity for the Beauty Special when it was here, are back again.

The Lasky cowpunchers have a special rodeo wild west show for the personal benefit of Geraldine Farrar last Sunday. The famous woman expressed the desire to see one of those real woolly affairs, so Hosea Steelman put one on for her.

In Henry McRae's production of "The World to Come" it was necessary to film a baby show, and as no show was being held in any part of the state at the time, the Universal proceeded to advertise and conduct a real baby show of its own. The result was even better than if they had been obliged to travel to find the proper background.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Edison Company to Produce "Vanity Fair."

THE EDISON COMPANY has just made arrangements with Mrs. Fiske to star in a picturization of "Vanity Fair." Through the broader treatment allowed in the photo drama "Vanity Fair" will be more of the book picturized than was or could be the theatrical version, and the long preparation for its authentic presentation vouches for its being the most pretentious film ever made by the Edison company. Becky is perhaps associated more prominently with Mrs. Fiske's name and fame than any other in her large gallery of dramatic portraits. Since she originated the character about fifteen years ago, its revival has been demanded again and again, until it has become one of the most familiar figures of the American theater.

Eugene Nowland.

A completely new scenario has been written by Sumner Williams. The entire range of Becky's lively and varied experiences will be followed, introduced by a prologue which will show Thackeray in all verity, in his study starting to write the novel. Every personage in the film play will be a faithful picturing of the characters of the times, down to the smallest details.

The Edison Company has chosen for the producer of this play Director Eugene Nowland, who promises an unusual treatment in the photoplay, as he plans, he says, to develop the story much as a musical theme is developed, also making particular use of suggestion rather than bare depiction to "get over" the indefinable atmosphere of the times. For several months he has been in pursuit of players of proven ability and true to the types they will impersonate. A number of the society people of New York and Boston will figure in the brilliant ball scenes, the historical Duchess Richmond's ball at Brussels, and that at Gaunt House. Other scenes will be the Battle of Waterloo and Vauxhall Gardens.

Leonie Flugrath, the child star of the stage "The Poor Little Rich Girl" will be Becky as a little girl. Philip Quinn will be Napoleon. Mr. Quinn has played Napoleon on the stage more than any other character. "Amelia" who has been long sought is as yet unchosen. The Marquis of Steyne is left to George Wright of "Within the Law," and "Bought and Paid For." Rawdon Crawley will be Bigelow Cooper; Jos. Sedley, William Wadsworth; Dobbin, Frank McGlynn; Lady Steyne, Helen Strickland; Mr. Sedley, Charles Sutton; Mrs. O'Dowd, Jessie Stevens; Major O'Dowd, John Sturgeon; Becky's father, Yale Benner.

CHANGE OF MANAGEMENT AT THE BROADWAY THEATER.

Leon D. Langsfeld, general representative of the Stanley Company, in New York City, has taken entire direction of the Broadway Theater. Mr. Langsfeld is also the manager of the Stanley Theater, on Seventh avenue, and promises that the programs at both houses will remain at their present excellent standing.

Spokes From The Hub.

Boston's Society "Fans" to have Private Boxes.

By Marion Howard.

ONE PICTURE house here—the Exeter Street—is dark until Sept. 13 when it will be light in more ways than one according to what I discovered today in calling upon the little proprietor of the biggest theater in the Back Bay. Mrs. Marcellus Ayer, who has made herself tremendously popular in her efforts to please her public told me that there had been a desire on the part of many subscribers for private boxes, and these are being installed at the end of the new and enlarged balcony and the mahogany chairs will cost 50 cents. Steep increase? "Not at all, for prices are bound to go up," declared Mrs. Ayer and she seems to echo the prevailing sentiment of the other first class houses, as discussed in the lobbies, and elsewhere. She is cutting out the ten and twenty cent seats, and the new prices are to be 15, 25 and 35 cents (for front row in new balcony) with the entire lower floor 25 cents as formerly. The 4 boxes will seat 8 and 10 persons each, and may be rented for the season on certain nights. This theater has a seating capacity of 1,500, and is now in the hands of the decorators and electricians.

The Exeter Street theater has a fine organ used frequently by Mr. Jarvis Jocelyn, especially when wedding scenes are on, like the one in "The Moth and the Flame." He is an adept in selecting appropriate music, classical, patriotic and amusing, and, as a well known judge said on the closing night, "He certainly earns his salary."

With 3,200 seats taken almost nightly the old Boston theater is doing a fine business and no wonder for it is more than a 2 in 1 show. I wandered in the other night just as the Fadette orchestra was winding up on a medley of airs of all nations and it was thrilling to see that vast house rise, cheer, and hear them sing as "Old Glory" in her splendid coloring was thrown on the screen. A State House official close to the Governor said: "This is worth far more than the price of a $2.00 seat and we get it all and more for 25 cents."

The Fadettes are a body of good looking young musicians well groomed, and led by Caroline B. Nichols, a Boston woman and a D. A. R. who founded the organization, which for several seasons was on the Keith circuit. Mrs. Nichols has absolute control over the members and is their comrade and chaperone into the bargain. Her head, with its closely cropped hair, looks like that of Rosa Bonheur. Next in point of prominence from the front is the drummer, a sort of musical Pooh Bah, for she plays various instruments, emitting various and amusing sounds and does so with hands and often with her feet. She certainly has her troubles but no one has yet seen her other than smiling. The orchestra, in addition to a concert of a half hour plays incidental music for the films. A man across the aisle exclaimed on hearing the drummer do her stunt "say can't we get her out to our town for the minstrel show, bet she will come for $5.00 and her supper." The man when last seen was headed for the Adams House with a drummer of another sex, both "in search of a thrill" in which a stick figured.

"Jack" Barrymore is vastly popular round here, so a large party of us went to the Park (now happily under the management of W. Fred Bossner) to see "Dickey" Davis' "The Dictator" so cleverly dramatized and presented by a capable company. Though full of comedy there was not one bit of horse play, such as we are inflicted with here at one or two theaters at the hands of an alleged comedian. There is such a difference between real fun and coarse, cheap efforts to be funny. That a widespread protest among intelligent theater goers will result, I predict from the disgusted utterances that come my way.

Boston's club of over 300 professional women is, to a member, devoted to the film productions. The coming season they will turn out to welcome new comers, like Cathryn Countiss, May Robson, Jane Gray and others who are seriously inclined to enter the field. The club members already in are Lillian Russell, Elsie Janis, Florence Reed, Marguerite Clark and Maud Odell.

Happening over to the Castle Square theater the other matinee I got into the pictures quite unconsciously thanks to the enterprise of John Craig who has the matinee audiences snapped as they leave the theater and the films are shown evenings the following week. In them I found Mary Young Craig, her husband's "right bower," with a party of society women, with whom she is popular. The Craigs have opened their summer place at Marblehead and motor back and forth, meanwhile plans are being formulated for their new modern theater in the Back Bay. I venture to predict that Craig will get deeper into the pictures and utilize his old theater for that purpose when the new one is in commission.

SELIG FLYER, ALL ABOARD!

ALL is in readiness for the seventeen days' tour of the West and of California aboard the Selig Exposition Flyer. The train of standard Pullmans, diner and combination baggage car and observation car will leave Chicago from the Chicago & Northwestern railroad station at 11 o'clock Thursday morning, July 8, and friends of the tourists are planning a rousing sendoff.

The tour is an assured success. Motion picture exhibitors, newspapermen, scenario writers and writers of fiction, together with their relatives and friends, have booked reservations.

It has been arranged that special Pullmans be given over to the comfort of the exhibitors and their families, the newspapermen and the writers. One car for the scenario writers has been completely filled, as has the special coach devoted to the comfort of the newspapermen and their friends. However, there will be room enough for all. The Selig Company has chartered extra coaches and another special train may be necessary.

Aboard the Selig Special a daily newspaper will be published which will give all the news, day by day of the tour, and the most versatile newspaper men in the United States are to become reporters. A motion picture scenario is being prepared by Gilson Willets, and scenes called for in this play, to be later released by the Selig Company, will be taken in every city coming and going.

The civic federations of all the large cities on the itinerary have arranged special receptions and entertainments, the latest being the Business Men's Association of Colorado Springs. There is yet time to take advantage of the tour, which costs only $128 and includes hotel accommodations.

WORLD FILM "ALLIES."

Sweden, hitherto a "neutral" country, has thrown in her lot with the Allies. World Film is picturizing Wm. A. Brady's "The Cub" and this picture shows the cast at rest between scenes. The venue is Bear Mountain up the Hudson and on the right of the picture is seen the star, the lovely young Swedish actress, Martha Hedman, who makes her first motion picture appearance in "The Cub." The director of the picture, Mons. Maurice Tourneur, is at Miss Hedman's right. The other ladies are Jessie Lewis and Dorothy Far-num (the Howard Chandler Christy girl) and the young man with the smile is John Hines, who plays the part of the cub reporter in the photoplay.

Scene from "The Cub" (World Film).

France and Sweden, it will be seen, are on the best and most amicable terms.

"The Cub" is scheduled for release on July 12, and the director, Maurice Tourneur, has made a highly dramatic photoplay out of the feud theme.

Real Stories From Reel Studios

Hazen Conklin, feature editor of the N. Y. Evening World, who conducted the movie contest for that paper, absorbed so much of the atmosphere that he pulled out his old typewriter, dusted it off and walked into the scenario game without knocking. Edison has just purchased a big three-reeler from him. Mr. Conklin, like his former colleague Roy McCardell, is a versatile man, having engaged in every branch of newspaper work from reporter to editor. When Mr. Conklin isn't writing a humorous column, interviewing comic artists, writing success stories and developing plots for fiction much of his time is given to writing scenarios and his stuff has that eagerly sought factor—the punch.

And then there's Mr. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount, who next to the film business loves golf. On certain

To an actor who applied for a position a director asked, "What have you played?" "Oh," said the actor, "I played the piano in the second act of——." When last seen the embryo comedian was industriously seeking his hat which he had lost somewhere between the door and the curb.

Louise Vale

IN HER screen interpretation of the character of Cigarette, the leading role in "Under Two Flags," the drama with which the Biograph company will inaugurate its three-reel releases, Louise Vale brings to her work an experience gained in playing many times the same part in stock. In the making of this subject as in the making of many others she has tramped the desert and climbed mountains. For the past year she has appeared exclusively in two-part productions of her company.

Louise Vale.

Louise Vale began her screen work four years ago with Edwin S. Porter of the Rex company. She was then, as she has been since, under the direction of Travers Vale. The player and director did notable work with the Pilot company and with the Reliance company, coming to the Biograph two years ago. It was with the Reliance Mrs. Vale played a single reel absolutely alone, successfully carrying a story with no other person appearing on the screen, a feat which, at the time, caused considerable discussion.

Mrs. Vale had had eight years' stage experience as leading woman before coming to the screen. She has played in stock in Rochester, Syracuse, Hoboken, New Orleans and New York City. On the road she starred as Cigarette in "Under Two Flags," for two seasons in "The Girl of the Emerald Isle," for three seasons in "When the Bell Tolls," and a year in Orpheum stock.

The talented player has written many scenarios which have been successful. Dramatic subjects particularly appeal to her. "I like a story that after you have seen it played leaves food for thought, one from which you can derive a lesson," she says; "one that will not be forgotten as the picture fades. It is one of the wonderful things about pictures that they give you such great opportunities for impressive portrayal."

Mrs. Vale likes California and, singularly enough, the desert particularly, with the comparative hardships entailed in working in it. "But," she adds, "I also like my good home in New York."

EDWIN THANHOUSER AGAIN ENLARGES COMPANY.

The past week saw Edwin Thanhouser out on another talent hunt. His stock company now musters a dozen or so of the brightest lights from Broadway, but that does not suffice. After adding to his staff of directors Edgar Jones from Lubin, and Clement Easton from the Universal, he now announces a new ingenue, Grace De Carlton, and Julia Blanc, William Morris and Reginald Barlow.

Miss De Carlton is working with Director Easton. She is a Bostonian, having played there in the John Craig and Lindsey Morrison stocks and toured with Vaughn Glaser.

Julia Blanc is a character actress of note. Among her engagements are numbered the role of the witch in the play of that name, under Winthrop Ames. She did characters with Marie Dressler in "The Mix-Up," in "The Conspiracy" for Frohman, the "Dawn of a To-morrow," and other big productions.

William Morris will be remembered for his work in "The Concert" under Belasco, "The Family Cupboard" and "Little Miss Brown" for Brady, and "He Comes Up Smiling" for Al H. Woods. Mr. Morris is a powerful type of leading man, and his joining the New Rochelle forces means some striking releases.

Reginald Barlow has not played off Broadway in seven years, and that certainly is a theatrical criterion of a man's standing in the profession. For three years in succession he was at the New theater with Winthrop Ames and leading parts in such plays as "Prunella," "The Yellow Jacket" and "The Devil" underrate his bag of tricks.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

IF READERS who keep their copies of the Moving Picture World on file will refer to them they will find that methods advocated in these columns which were characterized by the censorship agitators as drastic, unreasonable and nonsensical are gradually coming to the front as the real agency for solution of the censorship problem. Before, during and after the administration of the late Mayor Gaynor "Our Man About Town" contended that a true and legal censorship of motion pictures could not be established until that censorship was made to cover the newspapers, magazines, and like publications, or a reasonable excuse be offered for a failure to do so. Not until a very recent period has there been a movement to extend the censorship to that point. Dread of the influence of the press has been responsible for this. The press itself has been remarkably silent on the subject. At no time has it attempted to show why it should be immune. Evidently it has felt secure, in the same belief that has guided those who have not dared to advocate a censorship.

The sessions of the Constitutional Convention Committee, in considering the Bill of Rights, has given an opportunity to bring the question to an issue. It is still an open one. Prominent film men have appeared before the committee and advocated that the screen as well as the press shall be free "to speak, write and publish" its sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for an abuse of that privilege. The chairman of the committee took exception to a statement that no one dare attempt to censor the press and followed it up with a statement that there is a grave question as to whether some control should not be exercised over the newspapers. Had it not been for the movement on the part of the motion picture people the chairman of the committee would not have given this admission publicity. The chairman also admitted that during his life he had seen but one moving picture, yet he practically stood sponsor for a state censorship of their production. In opposing the representatives of the motion picture people he read a letter favoring censorship of the pictures on the ground that caricatures of the Jewish people disgraced the race.

In almost every fight against motion pictures the charges have been based on hearsay evidence of the character produced by the chairman of the committee at Albany. In all courts of law such evidence is promptly ruled out and there is absolutely no reason why it should be considered even when presented by such an able advocate as the chairman of the committee.

If the caricaturing of the Jewish people is to be taken as a standard for establishing a state censorship over motion pictures, then that censorship must be extended over the daily newspapers and the weekly and monthly publications who thrive on it. These publications place before the public illustrations that producers and exhibitors of motion pictures would not tolerate. Many of them are revolting. If some of the pictures which the newspapers and magazines have published bearing upon the European war were put upon the screen the exhibitors would be driven out of business.

Discussion of this question has brought out the argument that the difference between the press and the screen is that what the press throws upon the sheet is seen only by those who have the intelligence to grasp the real meaning; that they do not have the effect that is produced when pictures are flashed before an audience of mixed intellect. This attempted distinction fails to show a difference, unless it be in favor of the motion pictures, showing that in reaching the people the pictures are far more effective than the press is. There is one point that cannot be dodged: Whether pictures be placed upon sheets of paper, or canvas, or any other material, they stand upon the same bottom. The President of the country, the statesmen, honored and useful men in all walks of life, are time and again malignantly caricatured by the press. No such charge can be made against the moving pictures. Picturized reflections on the war have been so revolting that columns of subsequent editions of the papers teem with protests from all quarters.

As Mr. Marshall, the chairman in question, has seen but one moving picture in his life, it may be assumed that he is not personally acquainted with the conditions surrounding motion picture houses. He is probably not aware that a large majority of those houses are either owned or managed by people of the race which the letter he has states the motion pictures so disgracefuly caricature. And we can take him to some parts of Greater New York where the patrons are entirely of the same race. More than that, we can show that many of the most bitter opponents to censorship of the pictures are Jewish people. Mr. Rothappel, who was present as a member of the committee favoring the amendment, must have smiled when Mr. Marshall read that letter.

Another sentiment of these columns recently endorsed by the real motion picture interests is that which advocated a few weeks ago the meeting of fire with fire. In the reckless combat to harass and, if possible, kill the motion picture business pulpits have been transplanted to the lobbies of Legislatures and Congress. Men who have been selected and paid to try and save souls have neglected their real work and become professional lobbyists. Meanwhile the moving picture people have remained passive and allowed themselves to become victims of malicious, prejudiced and grafting legislation. It is gratifying to note that these interests have at last awakened to the situation and intend to take a little hand themselves in lobbying work. Many of them have heretofore contended that the picture industry should be kept out of politics, but the machinations of the enemy have forced the issue of self-preservation upon them. No conservative mind will dispute that an intelligently conducted campaign will put the conspirators to flight. It will open the eyes of the politicians who have been lending themselves to the work of persecution and oppression. There is not an honest, free-minded politician in the country who has investigated the motion picture business and has not given the industry his endorsement.

It cannot be said that all the politicians who have arrayed themselves with the conspirators are not honest in purpose. Many of them have unconsciously permitted themselves to be unduly influenced. Some of them, like Mr. Marshall, have been guided by hearsay, and not by facts. Others have been whipped into line by other means. Whenever the motion picture people gain a point the first cry heard from the censorship agitators is "Bribery!" This term his many synonyms, among them being coercion. This has been one of the chief weapons in the hands of the professional censorship agitators. With this weapon they have flocked to the lobbies and threatened political extinction to those who failed to do their bidding. With this weapon so many laws controlling the motion picture business have been enacted that a Mexican bandit appears as a novice when compared with a producer or exhibitor of motion pictures.

No time should be lost in bringing the motion picture industry to the point where it belongs. This must be done by a campaign of education among the people. Of the millions who patronize the picture shows each day but a small percentage realize that the motion picture business has attained the distinction of a legitimate industry. Few see beyond the screen. They do not realize the immense amount of capital that is legitimately expended in the business. Those who have not had an opportunity to visit studios to see the time and labor that is expended upon productions look upon the best of efforts with discouraging passiveness. The players they look upon as the favorites of good fortune whose lives are continuous streams of ease and frolic. A very prominent and distinguished man, upon a recent visit to a studio, said that what he saw was a complete revelation to him. "Before getting a glimpse behind the screen," he said, "I viewed the motion picture business only as we viewed it in the earlier days, mere horse-play. To my mind a scene was the result of putting a bunch of clever people before a camera and letting them weave a story as their talents dictated. Looking about me and seeing the class of people who do the work, the attention given to costume, scenic and other details, the business, from a standpoint of dignity and possibilities, commands my admiration. The ability and intelligence required for the studio work is reflected by the screen only in part. If the public could understand this the efforts of the producers, directors and players would be better appreciated."

NEW THEATER FOR COLUMBIA, MO.

Warren McConnell and R. W. May are having plans drawn for an 800-seat moving picture theater which they contemplate building in Columbia, Mo. The decorations and appointments are to be of the best.

British Notes

MANY changes appear to be in progress with that old established producing house, the British and Colonial Company. Following upon two important staff changes recently we have this week the decision of M. Maurice Elvey, their producer, and Miss Elizabeth Risdon, leading lady player, to wander from the fold and start work together as the Diploma Film Company. Maurice Elvey has already carved his name in the niche of picture-production with such features as "Florence Nightingale," an adaptation of R. L. Stevenson's story, "The Suicide Club," and several motographic excursions into English history, while Miss Risdon has almost invariably been the woman of his plays. Apart from his picture productions Mr. Elvey has been associated with the staging of some of the most notable successes of the legitimate stage in London and New York.

Another new enterprise in the film producing ranks of this country bears the name of Michaelson Lloyd British Productions and the trade mark of "M. L. B. Films." The initial trio of dramatic works were reviewed in London a few days ago and represent the labors of Warwick Buckland, a former director in the Hepworth Studios.

As indicating the tendency to the revival of the earliest sensations of the moving picture, the production of a serial film founded upon the adventures of "Deadwood Dick" is being pursued with great interest. Amongst the unrecognized fiction of the schoolboy "D. D." is perhaps the most formidable contemporary to that pioneer exploiter of the wild and wooly West, "Buffalo Bill." The Samuelson Film Company have many good productions standing to their credit and apart from its extraordinary character the "Deadwood Dick" serial will mark a stepping stone in the progress of British film production by virtue alone of being the first multiple reel subject produced in this country. The Samuelson Company point out that the original story in literary version ran for over twenty years. The motographic representation will not, however, be upon so ambitious a scale, notwithstanding the enterprise of the company in doing it Americanesque.

Verily doth a prophet remain undiscovered in his own country. If Chas. Chaplin had remained here instead of exploring the States the chances are that he would not yet have appeared before a picture-play audience. But with his fame came recognition and to-day we have the most staid and dignified organ of the political party in power, a newspaper hitherto too deeply engrossed in the more serious matters of State to accord anything but bare mention to film comedians, waxing in eloquent analysis upon the whimsicalities of the inimitable "Charlie." What is the reason for his meteoric rise in public favor? It makes an interesting study. A year ago we were almost unaware of his existence. To-day his fame outrivals the Kaiser's. It is not his clothes, though they help to fix the personality of the man in our minds. Mr. Chaplin has solved the riddle of holding the fickle attention of the crowd and the appearance on the screen of the flapping boots, the baggy trousers, the little moustache, is the signal for a burst of expectant laughter from young and old alike. But other men have worn baggy trousers and we have not laughed. He has succeeded by two means, first by creating a personality, and secondly, by the continual unexpected developments of that personality. The personality he created is distinctly original. We had suffered from grimacing marionettes and galvanic bounders till we were surfeited. Then appeared a new type in the pensive, ill-used, sad-faced man who seldom smiled, the plaything of an unkind destiny. The jaded palate of the picture-goer rose like a fish at a new bait. But if Mr. Chaplin had been content to rest on his laurels and played the same old tricks time and time again we should soon have tired of him. He was far too clever an artist to do any such thing. The charm of his art is its infinite variety. You can never be quite sure what he will do next and it is this wayward unexpectedness of his actions which has been the real secret of his popularity.

Percy Moran, the well-known heavy lead, has definitely fixed up a contract with the new Phoenix Film & Picture Co. of London to appear exclusively in a new series of dramatic specialties they are to produce. Moran has only just returned from a stay in the British West Indies but has already got to work on his first picture, a three-thousand footer, entitled "How Men Love Women."

Another link with the pioneer days of the industry in Great Britain has been severed by the death a week ago of David B. Barnett. As a moving-picture technician he was exceptionally widely known, not only in the home circle but also among foreign visitors, many of whom have profited by his advice. Previous to his demise Mr. Barnett had for some time been in business specializing in the reproduction of titles, sub-titles, heads, tail-pieces and stock work for the larger manufacturing houses, but he was previously associated with Butcher & Sons and formerly with the Warwick Company. Socially, Mr. Barnett was one of the sparkling personalities of the trade. J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

TO BE prepared for grand opera but because of ill luck to land in the movies, would, as a general rule, bring to a young artist no end of discouragement. This was Miss Elaine Ivans's fate, but she shows no discouragement, in fact, she even confesses to being glad that fate was unkind to her and forced her to rely upon the silent drama as a means of livelihood.

Commencing life in fortunate circumstances and not only receiving the best musical education that money could procure, but also studying with the best masters in Europe; at the height of her career her father lost all his money and she was forced to return to America.

Elaine Ivans.

Immediately upon her return to New York Miss Ivans sought the means of capitalizing her fine dramatic and vocal training. One morning when she went to keep an appointment with an opera producer she met a prominent motion picture magnate. He saw the photographic possibilities of her wonderfully expressive face, and when he learned that she had had dramatic training, made her a flattering offer. She was a success from the start.

Some time ago Miss Ivans joined the MinA Company, which has of late been making a name for itself as producing comedies of the better kind, and she is now appearing regularly in their releases where she is living up to her high reputation for beauty, talent and unusual dramatic ability.

WORLD FILM PROMOTIONS.

World film is noted for the rapidity and equity of the promotions it distributes among its loyal and deserving employees. W. W. Drum, the Western division manager of the corporation, has under him a force of men whom he has developed and whose efficiency and assiduity have soon brought them their rewards. The humblest employee of World Film has the chance of getting to the top of the ladder if he will show merit and ability. W. E. Knotts, who has just been made the manager of the Denver office, started in as a salesman at San Francisco; Mr. Theuerkauf, a clerk at the San Francisco branch, has been appointed the Los Angeles branch manager; Charles Gilmour, a Denver branch selesman, has been placed in charge at Salt Lake, and R. H. Clark goes to San Francisco as manager.

All the young men are comparatively new to the film business, having entered it in the past year. These promotions have been made in four out of the five Western divisions. Denham Palmer, the Western division manager, was originally a salesman and preceded Knotts in the management of the Denver branch.

UNIVERSAL PLAYER BECOMES U. S. ENSIGN.

Marshall Hageman of the Universal's west coast forces, has been elected to the post of ensign in the Seventh Division of the California Naval Militia. This is regarded as a special honor in view of the recent government ruling which places such officers on an equal footing with graduates of Annapolis.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Noi Li Abbiamo Debellati.

That means, in Mexican, "we've got their goats." It is taken from a throwaway of the New theater, San Francisco, printed in Spanish and English. There seems to have been a promiscuous goat getting out there to judge from such pleasant lines as:

> As one illustration the foul-smelling and disease breeding picture house on Broadway Street, near Dupont, is showing old junky Keystones, and by putting a "Charley Chaplin" in their lobby have fooled people into thinking that they really had something worth seeing. Fooling people or humbugging them out of their money is equal to stealing their money; they managed to steal a few nickels the first few times but the public quickly got on to such petty larceny tactics and now when they put their "Charley Chaplin" in their lobby it attracts a few rubber-neckers, BUT NO ONE BUYS TICKETS. He was a smart man who said "You can fool some of the people some of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all the time."

Righteous wrath is one thing and abuse of a competitor is another, and generally the latter boomerangs. There is a lot of cheating going on about Keystones. Just the other day another Exhibitor said he thought every Keystone ever made must still be working, but it is a lot better to call attention to the newness of your own offering and leave it to the public than to spend space in telling what a cumberer of the earth the other fellow is. People are apt to argue that there must be some other reason than a regard for the public that leads to the abuse, and they will go to see what it is, or else keep away from both houses.

No Exhibitor ever acquired a fortune by spending money in advertising his opposition.

From Saskatchewan.

The Estevan Progress, Saskatchewan, fixes up the copy from the Orpheum, the local house, and Ernest Walter sends in some samples. Mr. Walter gets a pretty display and he gets some good lines, though here and there the editor shows above the advertising man. One line reads: "The Paramount pictures are produced with princely expense. We show them at pauper's prices." "Princely pictures at pauper's prices," would be better, but somehow the "pauper" seems to suggest offense to those who pay those prices. There is too much the suggestion of cheapness—extreme cheapness—which is something that has damned the photoplay in the eyes of many.

But very neatly does he get around the "first run." He writes that: "This picture was released from headquarters November 19. You may be sure it is up to date." Evidently it is a long way to Canadian territory. Optimistic in the extreme—and unconvincing in the same degree—is "Another reel. We do not know the title yet, but it is bound to be a winner." That reads smoothly, but it lacks pulling power. It is not bound to be a winner if nothing is known about it. Better announce simply another reel without admitting that its identity is not known. To those unfamiliar with booking conditions, not to know what is to be shown is to suggest slipshod management.

The stories, too, are rather loosely framed. "The Rose of the Rancho," for instance, ending with

> There are soldiers, and consequently some fighting, lots of hard riding, love making, several kisses, hisses by the villain, and "Ha, ha, I defy thee," by the hero. Kearney gets Juanita, and all ends very happily with a beautiful wedding scene in a garden. It's stimulating all the way through.

This is hardly calculated to pull business. It does not fill one with a desire to see that "some fighting" or to see the "several kisses." It is writing, but it is not advertising.

The true object of advertising is to create a demand for the article advertised by setting forth its attractions alluringly. "A Keystone Comedy, very funny indeed," does not advertise. The announcement of a Keystone comedy, without further remark, would have been better than the lukewarm addition. We should greatly prefer to tell a brother in the work that he is clever, but Mr. Walter is filling space rather than pulling people. It is hard to think up a new line for a Keystone comedy when one is run on each program, but the fact alone would be better than the daming with faint praise. It is not the number of lines but the value of them that counts. Take this for instance: "Marguerite Clark. She is dainty, consequently magnetic." Dainty persons are not necessarily magnetic. "A tiny bundle of magnetism" would better describe her. An allusion to her successes on the speaking stage might be still more interesting.

If Mr. Walter will give a little study to the result gained by his lines, he will better understand writing show advertising.

Colored Nights.

The Majestic theater, Grand Junction, Colorado, is running a ladies popularity contest that does not differ in most details from other similar contests, the prizes being a trip to the fair, and jewelry, but there is one novel feature. Tickets carry votes to the face of the admission, five votes for a five cent ticket and ten for a ten cent ticket, but on certain nights the house front will carry red or green nights. On "red" nights any ticket will carry fifteen votes and on "green" nights twenty-five votes will be given. The lights will be the sole notification, which will keep the contestants and their friends on the alert, and help rainy and dull nights immensely. A gree light on a rainy night will bring out a lot of extra business at no extra cost.

The house also publishes a four page newspaper program, but in the issue sent in there is an apology by the printer for the appearance of the sheet owing to a breakdown of the linotype. Succeeding issues should carry some local news as well as the house stuff. It will greatly increase the value of the publication. In addition to the broken linotype it would seem that the press might stand a cleaning up. There is too much offset. The idea is good and the house is headed in the right direction. It cannot be mailed, however, unless they modify that free ticket scheme. To the post office this is a lottery.

Some Hustling.

H. F. McGarvie was Director General of Zone Day at the Panama-Pacific and he ripped things loose generally, even if event number thirteen was announced as half past twelve.

Of course there was a voting contest and this was gradually pulled in until ten days before the close of the ballot—only the highest were counted and ten were taken off every second day until the number was reduced to nine, the highest vote deciding the queen and the others the maids of honor. In some popularity contests, a similar scheme might be worked to free the contest of the floaters toward the close. Though hope springs eternal, the gradual elimination has a stimulating effect upon the rest.

A Teaser.

The New Family theater, Adrian, Mich., sends in a teaser that should be effective. The copy has no relation to the matter inside. It is merely to attract attention and hold it to the turning of the page. The page is cut into three unequal parts by rule work, the three banks reading:

It Certainly Is Confusing

Mrs. Smith Said "It Was"
And
Mrs. Brown Said "It Was Not"
Other People Were Consulted—then a Horrible Mixup.

Hence we announce the real truth on the inside of this folder.

In a sense it might be regarded as a waste of a front page to give it to such copy, but it is really spending the front page to buy the two inner pages read, and cheap at the price. The great trick is to get a person started reading the bill. Give him a push and he will keep on going. It is the take off that must be figured, though, of course, the better the rest of the copy the stronger the pull.

Deceived.

Dave Udell, of the Crystal, Paxton, Ill., who was invited lately to call often, sends in some more and writes that he is going to "pester" us until he is called off. If he keeps up to his standard and waits for word from this end, he would do well to take a chair. It is going to be some long time before a stop order comes. We are only sorry he never saw us before. We have several of Mr. Udell's samples, but will show but two this time. The matter is all ten inches across two columns. The first is a running reader, the top line being 36 points and the other lines light 24 point faces. Where the stars run there is a jump covering the Elaine copy.

FINISH THIS STORY TO SUIT YOURSELF

Silas, a man who did not attend moving picture entertainments, went to a large city one day for a short vacation. During one of his walks down the avenue a moving picture theater attracted his eye. There was a large number of these shows along the avenue, but this particular one looked the best to him. Silas made up his mind that he would go in. So he entered a picture show for the first time in his life and occupied a good seat in the rear. His ear was startled by a familiar old tune. The pianist was playing

"My Heart Is Thine"

Silas looked up and there before his very eyes was a beautiful moving picture. The picture met his approval immediately. The fantastic charm of the very idea courted his very soul. It was the visualization of someone's mind, partly his own.

MARY FULLER was playing in
"MARY'S DUKE"

a three act comedy drama. One of those kind of pictures which pleases you through and through. There was no wearisome repetition of scenes. The play went on just like in real life, joys and sorrows equally mixed. The people laughed spontaneously as the many funny scenes appeared. Silas was overjoyed with the advent of the moving picture into his own heart.

Now you have the same opportunity to see the same program Silas saw at

CRYSTAL THEATRE—TONIGHT

The cost will be only one dime and you will not have to go to a large city to do it. Please remember that "THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE" commences one week from to-day. We need not drift into a written redundance about this new serial. It is not requisite. See the caption—the continuation will be obvious.

P. S.—Silas goes to the show every night now.

The second is set in eight point full face with 18 point bold italics for the cross lines except "The Moving Picture," which is 36 point in a two point panel. With slight alteration the matter can be run as straight program stuff, but it is worth the greater display in newspaper work or on a throwaway.

Very Neat.

The Camden theater, Parkersburg, W. Va., sends in a three column advertisement, fifteen inches deep. It is not only good copy, but the absence of heavy type work makes it unusually neat. The house uses a reverse cut (white letters on a black ground) 14 points deep and eight ems wide. This reads merely "Beyond Compare." This is used to get color. It would be more useful were it cast on a twelve instead of a fourteen point base. Then it can be worked in the form better and can also be worked in combination with twelve point border and in other ways. It is well, always, to plan cut copy of this sort to reduce to em measurement and on even rather than on odd ems. That is, the slug should be sixteen ems rather than fifteen or seventeeen or eight rather than seven or nine. Then it is merely a matter of working it with labor saving rules and reglets.

Getting back to the advertisement, which is too long to be reproduced here, the copy covers a week. In the top panel there is the house name and the general argument that this is one of the best week programs ever assembled; a statement borne out by the titles advertised.

Very little display type is used, not more than two lines to a panel, but the white space, relieved by the slugs, stands out better than would a mass of extra-bold letters. Two points were overlooked. The days were not dated and where the top and bottom panels were run side by side, the copy should have been laid out so that the display could be uniform. In each case one panel carries a single display line and the other two. There should have been two each and in a matched type. There was space enough to keep the lines apart and the result would have been more orderly. But these are minor details of an unusually pretty and probably unusually effective advertisement.

One-Reel Feature.

Joseph Goldberg, of the Olympic theater, Louisville, sends in a throwaway for Thanhouser's "Their One Love," a one-reel picture without leaders and asks that his patrons see it "even though it is only one reel in length." This seems to be necessary in these days of estimating the value of the reel by its footage, but it should not be so. A short story may be vastly better than a 50,000 word novel and the short length play may be better than the five-reeler. If only exhibitors and manufacturers alike would realize this and take the same pains with the really good one reel that they take with the multiple, they would be less at the mercy of the feature men. Nowadays most good one reels are up to two thousand feet or more, and lose through padding, yet some of the best stories ever shown have been done in a thousand feet or even less.

The Thanhouser press man sends in the same throwaway, but Mr. Goldberg beat him in.

A Mechanical Man.

Memories of "Frank Reed's" steam man of dime novel days are evoked by the street display of the Victoria theater, Rochester. The man is used to advertise a C——n Week. Apparently he pulls the car, which should be an easy job for a ten footer. John J. Farren, the manager, who is a veteran in the exhibition business, adds that the Victoria is a 1,600 house with a ten cent admission, running General and Universal features. Mr. Farren does not say how the man was rigged, nor does the photograph show, but presumably there is a belt from the axle to the interior of the dummy and a set of eccentrics to operate the arms and legs. Anything out of the ordinary will attract attention and a dozen persons will take notice of this outfit for each one who would note the decorated car alone.

Cut in Copy.

And will those who are good enough to send in cut copy, please add to their kindess by being willing to let go of the photograph. It is not an easy matter to keep track of an original where so many cuts are made for each issue. Mr. Farren made no such request, but we have had to return two other photographs for this reason the current week.

Gosh!

Melvin G. Winstock, of the National, Portland, Oregon, is still alive, though he seems to have long trances of four months' duration each three times a year, but the other day, between trances, he evolved this:

EMILY STEVENS IN CORA.

About a social parasite who greedily coveted a woman's honor and who paid with his leprous life the penalty of his unspeakable sin.

And that's just an "ear" on a half page for "The Heart of Maryland," to boost the coming attraction. Mr. Winstock writes:

Enclosed please find clipping of a little stunt I am putting through for the benefit of the National theater. I have written a little two-reel comedy entitled "Nutty Nick," with scenes taken out in the park here, and different parts of the city. Naturally the scenes taken in the downtown districts attract tremendous crowds. We did borrow the money for the scene, as the paper prints it.

Am also pulling off another stunt here in the form of pantomine. Sunday a week ago put on OLGA PETROVA in "HEART OF A PAINTED WOMAN," and had three living actors on the stage: the artist, the model, and a statue. (Stage was set beautifully with borrowed paintings, beautiful electrical effects, with a pretty fireplace, etc.) It was rather daring, but absoltuely beautiful. The Mayor sent word through the censorship lady that the kiss at the end of the scene was too long, and the model's dress too short. But she afterward denied this, so don't say anything about it. But the thing was artistically fine, and nobody could find any fault. This week worked the same stunt with VALLI VALLI in "THE HIGH ROAD." Put on "The Renunciation" scene from this film. On "THE HEART OF MARYLAND" will put on three branches of militia, infantry and cavalry, who combined will give me a picture scene with every possible lighting effect. Owing to our great big stage and big doors at each end, can have these people do return stuff. There is a strong patriotism developed through presenting American history and every military man in town is helping with all his might.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Did You Write One?

PROBABLY a census of the studios would show that not fewer than a thousand scripts have been written on the destruction of the Lusitania. More than one thousand persons have spent from a day to two weeks on such a script. Supposing the average to be four days: something more than ten years have been wasted on a plot that could not possibly be used.

And yet the incident is rich in plot suggestion. Take Charles Frohman's last words to the effect that death is the greatest adventure in life. There are plots innumerable right there. There is the man who seeks death and cannot find it. There is the man who fears death, but learns to lose his fear. There is the person to whom close contact with death brings a new viewpoint of life. Each of these points in turn will suggest more than one story.

Take the death of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. Here, again, are many suggestions: the man whom money could not save; the man who found in death the great leveler of mankind; the man who gave up life and millions to save some woman of the steerage to a continuance of her poverty-stricken existence. What could be more dramatic than the theme of a man of millions, possessed of all that makes life worth the living, giving his chance in a boat to a woman who later curses his memory because he saved her to a life of shame and misery?

These are but two of the aspects of the hundreds that a reading of the daily papers could suggest. None of the plots evolved would require a sinking steamship or even a marine environment.

Going further, it is even possible to turn this ghastly tragedy into material for comedy in the sense that the imagination, once quickened, will turn to all factors.

Let us suppose the man who misses the boat because he stayed up too late at a farewell dinner. When he finally comes out of the Turkish bath, he is afraid to confess to his wife and his employer. He decides to wait for another steamer. Meanwhile the accident comes. His name is on the passenger list, but not on the list of survivors. He takes a vacation for a week or two, then turns up with a highly colored story of how he was picked up by a sailing vessel and out of touch with the wireless. He is feted and made much of. Then the hotel where he spent his unexpected vacation sends by mail the suit of pajamas he forgot. The wife gets the letter accompanying it. The story would be in bad taste at the moment and presented in connection with the Lusitania, but after a time and with a fictitious shipwreck, such a comedy might sell.

The great trick in plotting is to get your mind into the plotting mood. A great happening moves the imagination more strongly than a lesser one, and is apt to produce a stronger grade of plot, but for safety's sake get as far away from the real happening as possible. Use the horror merely to start the chain of thought just as you use wood to kindle the coal in the boiler, the coal making the steam that does the real work in the cylinders. A single match may be the first step in the train that leads from match to kindling, to wood, to coal, to steam, to the exertion of a hundred horse power. One sees the manifestation of power, but never thinks of the match, yet each step in the progress is dependent upon the one just below just as a scrap of paper, blowing down the street, may by a process of evolution and elaboration lead to the production of a powerful plot wherein the scrap of paper plays no part whatever.

To the Thomas pupil who is assured that his work is a trade, the sight of a dog chasing a cat may be no more than the suggestion of a comedy story in which a dog chases a cat. To the finely trained mind the cat may be the weak oppressed by the strong and repeated progressions may evolve from the happening a powerful preachment on the labor question, a strong study of social economics or the love history of a cave dweller, according to the mood of the moment.

Puzzles.

We know an author who will work an hour over a word square in a newspaper puzzle department, and yet when he wants to write he must dash off his stuff in a couple of hours or he loses interest in his work. Even the suggestion that he regard his work as a puzzle seems to help not at all, yet the accurate development and placement of scenes is one of the prettiest puzzle games that could be imagined.

Regard your problems as puzzles. If you need to get a new arrangement of scenes; if it seems to you that they do not go together properly, write them out on separate sheets, card catalogue size or the unspoiled halves of spoiled sheets. Arrange and rearrange them. See how they should go. Write in others, or take out some of those you have. Take just one section of action at a time, not the entire script. It will generally be found that action breaks naturally at certain spots. Perhaps scenes one to eleven are part of one development and scenes twelve to fifteen, sixteen to twenty-seven and twenty-eight to forty may be similarly grouped. The breaks come whenever a new line is taken up. Take each by itself and see what you can make of it.

So the same thing with your plot. Do not write it as a solid paragraph. Break it into arguments. Write:

John loves Mary.
Harry loves Mary.
Mary's preference is for John.
He proposes. She accepts him.
Harry goes west to hide his disappointment.

Run the paragraphs along until you have told your full story. It will take more paper than the solid paragraph, but you'll do it on cheap seconds and the cost will be little. Working in this way you can get a better view of the story in going over it because you read it as factors and not as a whole. See if you cannot make changes in plot factors that will strengthen the story. You will be surprised, sometimes, to see how many changes you can make always with the improvement of the story in mind.

That's a more intelligent and more profitable occupation than working puzzles from the paper, and it will get you somewhere. If you have the right attitude toward your work you will enjoy it. To the workman good work is not a task but a pleasure; a triumph.

Comfort.

When you look at your story and know it is bad, think of the time you were so foolish that you thought similar rot was good. Realize that all great writers were once where you are now, and that some day, perhaps, you will be where they now are. Take heart of grace and turn back to work. It's your only hope, and it is hope.

Money.

Don't let money rise superior in your thoughts to opportunity. We know one youngster who gave up a four dollar job as usher that paid from ten to fifteen in tips to take a four dollar job as office boy with no tips. In three years he was making as much money—and earning it—as the theater manager who gave him his first job, and he could call the manager by his first name. He saw Opportunity loom larger than fourteen or fifteen or nineteen dollars. Don't try to write scripts just for money, or you'll make no money, and you'll write no scripts.

Real Comedy.

One of the recent books we've dug up tells the student to write a story that is novel in all its factors, violating none of a common list of don'ts, then:

> Write to the scenario editor of some company and explain to him that you realize you have been on the wrong track and tell him you have studied my course of instruction and feel that you have, at last, written something really worth while.

And you send this under separate cover and put the editor to all the trouble of hunting through the pile of stuff (if he does) to find your script. Then the professor hedges by adding:

> Don't be disappointed if your manuscript is returned to you, for the company you sent it to may not be in the market for that style of story, but it is almost certain that you will get a nice encouraging letter from the editor requesting you to submit something else.

Per-haps and then, again, per-haps not. And yet men with no greater knowledge (or else regard for the truth) pose as instructors! There is a laugh here, but it has its serious side as well.

Visions.

Someone wants to know the proper way of writing visions. Visions are no longer written the proper way. They are written as fades, and this is what the correspondent, very probably, means, since it is the way in which they must be worked to be passed. But let's get back a little.

Most writers can remember the time when, for instance, Jim seemed to say "How well do I remember them happy days at muh dear old Mother's knee, when I, an innocent little cheeild was heppy heppy the livelong day." Then Jim fixed himself comfortably in a position indicating deep thought, and on the left hand portion of the screen came in the picture of James, evidently very much younger, and Mother dear.

To make this, that portion of the screen was blanked out by a metal mask. When the camera is started, each turn of the crank is noted and it is found that James commences to see things at the twentieth turn of the crank and stops at the thirty-seventh, the scene running to fifty-one turns of the crank. This figures that vision runs seventeen turns and the action continues an additional fourteen turns. Shutter is covered, the reverse is thrown in and the film is turned back into the feed box fifty-one turns. Now the mask is removed and a new one inserted, giving just the reverse effect, the corner now being uncovered and the rest blanked out. The camera is taken to the other scene and focussd to get the child and its mother in the space provided. The camera is set back to normal and they start turning. When that twentieth turn comes, the camera is uncovered and left open the necessary seventeen turns. Then it is covered and fourteen turns more made. When the film is exposed the negative carries the original scene and the vision.

This is slow and costly, though it is effective and the best way to convey the suggestion of a vision. Someone, to get around cost, invented the fade vision. Here it is not necessary to count, to turn the film back, to make the vision before taking the film from the camera or to do any other of the things that involve delay and cost. The scene and the vision are treated as units.

When Jim begins to reminesce, the director calls "Fade" and the camera man closes the diaphragm of the lens. The light is shut off from the film until practically no light impression is made and the developed negative comes out clear, which in the positive print gives blackness. After a moment, during which enough film is run down to separate the parts, the action begins, the lens aperture is opened to full and the scene is completed, or rather two scenes have been made, the first covering the early action to the point of the vision and the second all of that following the vision.

It may be two or three days later before the director, in a spare moment, poses the mother and child. This time he starts with the lens opening closed and closes again at the end of the vision.

On the screen we see Jim thinking. The screen goes black and there comes up the scene he has been thinking about, this goes down and we come back to Jim. These are "fades" instead of "dissolves," because we do not see the scene with Jim fade into the scene of the mother, but fade into blackness. If it dissolved into the scene with the mother, the same piece of film would be used for the fade down with Jim and the fade up with the mother. This, in turn, would necessitate making the picture of the mother before taking the film from the camera.

Instead of a continuous strip of film, giving the three parts of this scene, each merged into the next, we have three strips of negative; one for each part. Since there are three units to the scene, there are three scene numbers, so we get a script that reads—

19—Room as in No. 10—Jim sitting thinking—head in hands –fade down.

20—Fade up—Jim at Mother's knee, using a child about six years old —fade.

21—Back to No. 19—Fade up Jim –he comes to sudden determination —he rises—exits.

Now, in scene twenty-three, we know that Jim refuses to join Blake and Cronin in their attack on the bank vaults because he remembers his early teachings. It costs from six to ten feet in footage, perhaps, over the straight vision, but it has saved from several hours to a whole day in time.

That is all there is to writing visions. You write the scene up to the vision, then you fade. Then you write a new scene for the vision, fading up and down again, then you go back to the first scene of the trio and fading up, run the action to the end of the scene.

It is inartistic and slovenly, but it is the way it is done, and it should be written in no other way. There are, of course, some minor variations. If the first scene in the story was that scene at mother's knee, you would write in scene twenty—20—Fade up a few feet of scene one—fade down.

If you are a very careful workman, you may, at the end of scene one add a tickler, something like this:

1—Farmhouse kitchen –Mother in rocking chair by stove—Baby Jim in nightie kneels at her feet in prayer—she lays her head tenderly on his head in maternal benediction. (Note—This is also used for the vision in scene 20.)

This can be done, if you are very careful, but if the director is careful, he will know before he uses a set just what scenes are to be made in that set, so the note is permissible, but not at all necessary.

Imagination.

It is not enough to have imagination. You must have a trained imagination. You must invent not only plot, but must be able to add incident. You must be able to embroider the details. Some writers get down the idea and think that enough. It is not. It is sometimes a minor detail of incident that makes the plot effective.

No Press Work.

If the correspondent who wanted to know through this department about a certain typewriter will send a reply envelope and repeat his question he will be answered with pleasure, but until the company sends us a machine and a couple to the boss, they'll have to take advertising space.

"Can" and "Will."

Two forms are used by inquirers as to limitations. One starts off "Will a director" do this or that? The other substitutes "can." Many things can be done that probably will not be done, and authors need to realize that there is a difference in the meaning of the two words. A director can make a scene of a railroad wreck, but he probably will not. He can make horrible scenes, such as the dissecting room of a hospital, but he probably will not. The best way is to write stuff that you do not have to ask about, because probably any company not only can but will make production.

As a rule the question as to the ability of a story to do a certain thing means that the story depends on this particular scene. And it is almost equally certain that the scene really is the story, a mechanical punch to cover up a paucity of an idea. Anyone can detonate a ton of dynamite and write a story around it. The trick is to put the lick of the dynamite into the plot and not the plot into the dynamite.

Side Plots.

At the Inquest lately there rose a discussion on side issues or subplot. A certain release had tried to carry two side lines and failed. Marc Edmund Jones suggested that it was well to make a note of where you wanted your story to get to unless you would be lost in the labyrinth of sub-plot, but this should not really be necessary. The average writer who can get one full plot into a reel or two reels is doing about all that can be expected. To introduce added factors and skip the story from one development to another is to lose the interest of the spectator. It is not as it is in a story where several threads can be run to be tied into a knot at a climax. There it is possible to follow one theme for a time then turn to another and a third, coming back to the first to resume the interrupted recital. In photoplay there is always present the need for telling of action at the time of its happening. The two or three sets of incidents must be related in chronological order, and the result is that the two or three threads of story become too badly tangled to be unraveled when the time comes.

Standards.

And now Mayme Fickes, who is at least our third best observation pupil, breezes in with the remark that she sent some stuff to a certain company "because she writes so much better than the stuff they produce."

Just for that, and because we have a mean disposition, we hope that the company takes and makes her stuff and she takes all her friends to see it. Then she'll sing smaller by a lot. The stuff you see on the screen is not to be taken as your standard. The stuff you see on the screen is what is left of a good story, as a rule. It is not the stuff the studio buys. It's the stuff the studio gets. You cannot always blame the director. Sometimes it is the studio policy. If a man gets an expensive script and is told that he must not spend more than a dollar a foot, he is likely to produce it on a ninety-cent basis, and the story will be poor.

Don't write down to the screen standard. Write the best that is in you, but make it the sort of stuff where the story carries the punch and not the externals. Then try that sort of stuff on the studio that makes stuff "not so good as your own," and they'll probably take it, but don't argue that you write better stuff until you have had a chance to see what the original script of the poor story looked like.

Naturally.

Here is something that comes up about every so often. We are always glad to reply, but sometimes we wonder whether the writers might not have seen the same thing discussed many times in this department. It seems to be necessary to handle certain matters such as this about every so often. The writer says:

> Not long ago I read a letter published in "The World," the author of which seemed to think that the reason for his small number of sales was that he had written too few plays. He had written eleven in a year.
> Now I have been in the game about a year and a half, playwriting as an avocation. The result is one 2-reeler and three 1-reelers with no sales. I have put my best efforts into these plays (which accounts for the length of time taken), rewriting and revising each one several times before submitting once. At present I am working on three others.
> My idea is that my progress has been unusually slow in spite of the fact that four nights in the week are devoted to my regular vocation.

Five reels in four subjects in a year and a half is far too little. Don't get the idea that you must write one perfect play before you can write another. Work on plots until you can write plots, then keep on until you can write good plots, then practice putting the best of the plots in proper technical form and keep at it to improve your form. Working on one story for several months will get a writer nowhere in particular. Write.

At the start the most important thing is to be able to get plots rather than an ability to get one plot into supposedly good form. Write a hundred and every one of the ninety nine will teach you something about that first plot and about all the other plots you have turned out. Study plotting and not merely a single plot. Slow but sure is a good motto, but don't be too slow.

Honest, No!

Lately we wrote that a young author had small chance to make sales because his views of life were too confined to be interesting. Comes at once a sixteen year old who says we are all wrong because he sold a script. He writes for the benefit of his "fellow author." One sale may be an accident, and anyhow this sale was a comedy and comedies do not call for a grip on the affairs of life. Almost anyone can make an accidental sale now and then. An author is one who sells at least sixty per cent. of what he writes, and most persons in their 'teens do not and cannot reach this record. This is not written to discourage young writers. It is written to keep them from becoming discouraged. Start writing as soon as you please and keep at it, but don't expect to make sales before you can offer a mature product.

Reverse English.

Don't think you know it all. When you know it all you won't think so.

Synopses.

If everyone wrote synopses only, who would write the plays the synopses suggest.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important! Operators, Notice!

THIS DEPARTMENT has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of film that I am going to make you the following proposition, and I might say that I am doing it at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country. Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me with a statement as to what day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped, blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter, and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now please understand, I must have the following data. First: What make of film is it; second, Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an independent exchange; third: What day was it received? And don't mix up bad patches or other faults cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels, put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was received, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this, I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE.—Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

LOCAL UNION NO. 321, TAMPA, FLORIDA.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed, or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 92.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high clas men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What are the possible causes of excessive flaming of the carbons, and what are the effects? What, in your opinion, can manufacturers do to improve projection carbons? What, in your opinion, ought to be the D. C. amperage per square foot of screen, when using a cloth curtain, plaster screen, metallic surface and mirror screen? What, in your opinion, ought to be the A. C. amperage per square foot of screen?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 86.

The Roll of Honor on Question 86 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; P. Reg. Dey, Brandon, Manitoba; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, Louisiana, and C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada.

The editor had the misfortune to lose some of the Roll of Honor replies to this question out of his pocket. I do not remember the names now, though I am quite sure Brother Solar was one of them. Too bad, but accidents will happen in the best regulated families.

The reply of Brother Dey has been selected for publication.

Reply to Question No. 86.

By P. Reg. Dey, Brandon, Manitoba.

The Question:

Ought your projection machine, including the machanism, lamphouse and table to be grounded to the operating room metal? Ought the metal of the operating room to be grounded? Explain, in detail, the reasons for your answer.

The Answer:

The projection machine, including the machine head, lamphouse and table should, in all cases, be grounded to the metal of the operating room. If they are not and the lamps or connections make electrical contact with the lamphouse walls and a reel loaded with film is accidentally or otherwise touched to the mechanism or the magazine and the metal of the operating room at the same time there is likely to be a spark of sufficient intensity to ignite the film. Of course if one of the old style projectors with wooden table be used, then the grounding of the lamphouse would be sufficient, and this should be done, because otherwise the operator might, under certain conditions, get a very unpleasant shock. If the conduit system is grounded, as it always should be, the metal of the operating room should also be grounded, since otherwise there is a possibility of sparking between the two, and where there are sparks and film the condition is far from ideal. Unless the fire or insurance regulations call for it there is no reason why the operating room metal should be grounded, other than those before named.

From Terre Haute.

B. Steinhauser, Terre Haute, Indiana, says:

> I note May 29th issue, an article by Mr. Wilson, in which he compliments my projection. I wish to take this opportunity to thank him through the department, also to reinstate my less fortunate brothers at the "American" and "Varieties." The faults at the former have since been corrected. The equipment at the latter consists of two six-year-old "Kintedrome" machines, taking D. C. through a rectifier, the tube of which, the operators tell me, is not in the best condition. The boys of 373, I. A., are somewhat handicapped by being obliged to use A. C. Though this is a city of 60,000 population, there is no commercial D. C. plant. A few down-town houses have rectifiers, or motor generator sets. I have the latter, using 60 amperes to project a 16-foot picture at 90 feet; mirror screen and Powers Six A machines. Am using a film container of my own design, which reduces time in changing reels by about 50 per cent. Will submit one for your approval within a very short time. We have been organized since January, and the houses Friend Wilson visited were displaying the union slide, though he failed to mention that fact. Every operator must have a city license, obtained from the city examining board consisting of the city electrical inspector, master electrician and journeyman electrician, and, through the courtesy of these gentlemen, the local has succeeded in adding an operator, Brother Schaffer, to the board. That is one of the many things organization accomplishes. With a few exceptions managers and operators are pretty well satisfied. Every one receives an unlimited amount of help from the department, which we hope some day will receive more space.

No, Friend Wilson did not mention the union slide, and I am glad he didn't, because I might have made some pointed remarks about coupling the union slide with poor work, and then, when I knew the facts, I would have been sorry, though, even so, I am not a believer in displaying the union slide in houses where the operator is so handicapped in his work that he cannot deliver the goods on the screen. In my opinion the union slide should come to be in the mind of the public a guarantee of a good picture.

I am glad to know that the boys in the two houses named were not to blame for the faults Brother Wilson spoke of. My regards to the members of Local 373. May she live long and prosper! At any time this department, or its editor can be of any service to you, you have only to make that fact known.

Edison Improvement.

The Edison Company, Orange, New Jersey, per L. W. MacChesney, manager Motion Picture Division, says:

> The item at the bottom of the first column on Page 1775, June 12th issue, interests us very much, because Mr. Gall has lately worked out a scheme for joining the titles right in with the negative films, thus eliminating the usual splice at the begining and end of each title. Edison positive prints going out now have only as many splices as there are rolls in the print—usually not more than five or six. This ought to help some if exhibitors are having as much trouble as you say with bad patches, etc.

Well, there is not a bit of doubt with regard to the trouble with bad patches, any operator will swear to that proposition. We certainly congratulate the Edison Company for having achieved this long step in advance. It is not the only thing Friend Gall has accomplished in the way of improvements. The new Edison projector was very largely evolved by him. I am very certain operators and managers well welcome the lessening of the number of splices in Edison films.

Around the Circle.

Recently the editor had business with Brother Griffiths, of Ansonia, Conn., and priming the gasoline heart of his go-devil into action he hit the trail for that classic village. After a talk with Griffiths it developed that he would require a day or two in which to straighten out the matters I called to his attention. Now this particular quill pusher has long had a hankering to view Plymouth Rock, and, that historic spot being only a matter of a couple of hundred miles or so further on, quickly decided to become a pilgrim, and, as a matter of fact, did, after a more or less tempestuous gasoline voyage, land at the stone the Pilgrim Dads made famous some considerable spell ago.

But one or two incidents of the voyage are worth relating.

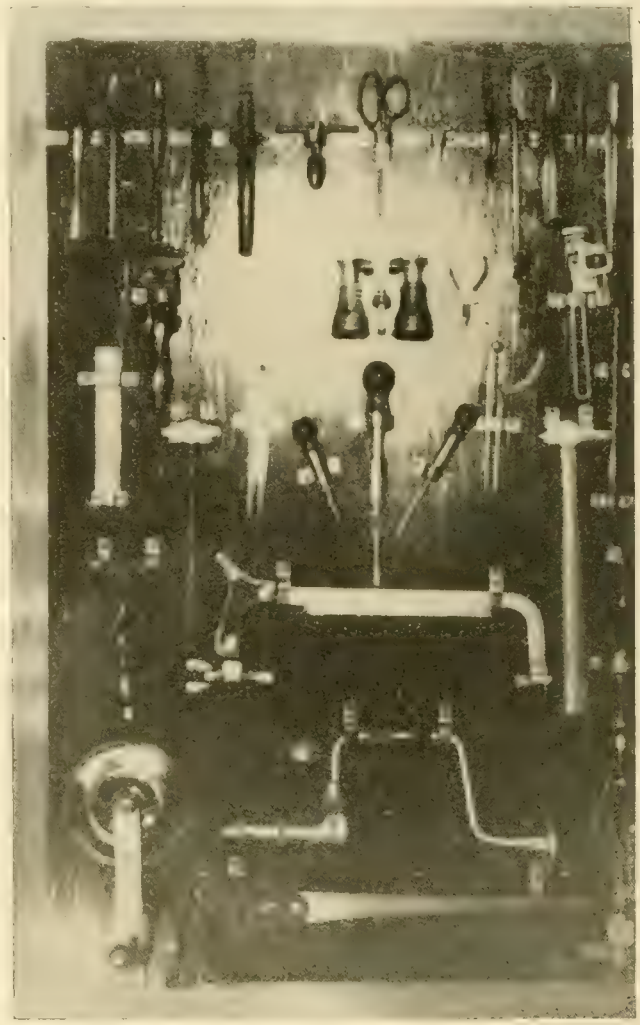
At New London, Conn., I pitched my tent for the night, and, though somewhat weary, decided to drop in at one or two of the New London theaters. Marching up to the "Crown," a house with an imposing front, I boldly presented my card to the autocrat at the door, who at first did not seem inclined to bother even to look at it. Finally he did consent to take the card after the editor had pushed it into his hands. I asked for the manager, but was promptly informed he was away and that the operator was busy. Of course I was squelched. But Mr. Doorkeeper did tell me the manager ran another house, the "Lyric," and that I would find him there. Well, I went to the "Lyric," but no manager. I was informed if I waited half an hour I would be accorded the inestimable privilege of seeing the operator. I did not wait, but went back and bought a ticket to the "Crown," went in and remained ten minutes. The projection was good, or at least what I saw of it was. The light was brilliant and well handled, and the speed left nothing to be desired. I was too tired to stay longer. As I came out the doorkeeper had apparently waked up; he suddenly became quite cordial and informed me that he had "telephoned the operator," but I was tired and I guess a little disgruntled at his former rather cavalier treatment, and told him he need not bother.

The thing that gets my goat is this: I think it may fairly be conceded that during the past five years this department and my Handbooks have made it possible for the managers of theaters to have on their screens the class of projection I saw at the "Crown," and that theater managers, whether they acknowledge it or not, owe a debt of gratitude to the projection department and the Moving Picture World, which they can never repay. It therefore goes a little against the grain to be snubbed by a doorkeeper who should have been instructed to show at least reasonable courtesy to the bearer of a card of the Moving Picture World. Fortunately, however, these instances are rare, and no doubt had the manager been there, there would have been nothing to complain of. I am sorry I did not see the operators at the Crown and Lyric, for at least the Crown man certainly was producing high class work. I did not see the projection at the Lyric.

I also met the manager of the "Empire," a very pleasant gentleman, and had quite a chat with him, though I did not go in the theater, as it was crowded to the doors and I was tired.

And now comes something amusing. It has nothing to do with projection, but, nevertheless carries with it a good laugh. Five miles beyond Narragansett Pier is Saunderstown, where you take ferry to an island and from this island take another ferry to Newport. Just behind me on the second ferry was a big limousine car, driven by a woman, and containing three women passengers. This lady, I have reason to know, was one of the Newport 400, though just who she was I don't know—I would give a perfectly good five dollar bill if I did. Beyond Newport I had to pass through Tiverton, and I asked this lady if she knew the way. "Yes," said she, "I am going over there myself," and started to tell me the way, but I interrupted with: "Oh, well, I will just follow you. You can always say you had one good man after you." She smiled and said: "Very well." But accompanying the smile was a queer slant of the eye that I did not catch the meaning of till later. We pulled off the boat and passed through a short street for probably one hundred yards before turning to the left into the main street of Newport, and right then and there I caught the meaning of the aforesaid slant, for she opened up that big limousine and went up through the main street of Newport 45 miles an hour. It took me about two and a third seconds to decide that that particular lady was not going to get away with that particular stunt, if she had in mind putting me in the discard, so I fed Mr. Go-devil a bunch of gasoline and he responded nobly. Away we went! I saw a motorcycle cop cranking his engine to beat the band—that was the last I saw of him. It is ten or twelve miles from Newport to Tiverton, and the road is p-u-n-k; horribly dusty, rutty and contains some reasonably big holes. At the edge of Newport she added another ten miles to the forty-five, and, regardless of the considerable traffic on the road, it was straight fifty-five miles an hour clear to the stone bridge going into Tiverton, about ten or twelve miles, I judge. I was compelled to drop back a quarter of a mile, and while I didn't have time to laugh then, it was more than funny. All I could see ahead was a big flare of dust with the black top of that infernal limousine sticking out of it occasionally. That lady certainly was "going somewhere." There were times when I wondered if the Moving Picture World would have a projection editor or a grease spot. Going into Tiverton there is a stone bridge, rather narrow and about a mile long. The limousine folks could not see behind them for the dust, and I was supposed to have been in the discard long ago. Going down off the bridge she was compelled to slow up. I didn't. I went down the hill onto the bridge exactly sixty miles an hour, with the officer holding one hand up and waving the other at me. I should worry! I was going to catch that limousine or die in the attempt. And I did it, too! Before she reached the other end of the bridge I rode up besides her car, then going about twenty-five miles an hour, and when the lady looked out and saw me, she was so surprised she let go the wheel and nearly wrecked her car against the side of the bridge. She grabbed the wheel again, took another slant at me, and the expression on her face was certainly worth seeing. I'll bet four dollars she will have a bunch of respect for motorcycles in the future.

Well, when I got to Plymouth Rock it was only fifty miles to Boston, so, after viewing the sights I went on, and next day dropped in at the Park theater, where Thad Barrows is in charge of projection. The Park is a beautiful house, which is partly owned by the same people who own the Strand in New York City. The stage setting is modeled somewhat along the lines of the Strand. The operating room is a good one; it is 20 feet long, 9½ feet wide, with an 8½ foot ceiling. There is a vent flue 2 feet square with a 24-inch exhaust fan. Brother Barrows produces high class projection, and, moreover, is a man with ideas.



I present here a photograph of Fried Barrows' tool rack and tools, and would recommend to operators and managers that they take a good rubber at it. It is the most complete tool board I have seen in an operating room, and the tools are not only well selected but of high quality. Let me remind you, gentlemen, that very often, and in fact, usually the tools are a good indication of the workman, Brother Barrows' Six A machines set at a heavy slant and he has hung the machine motor drive on extension bolts, so that the motor drive sets level. This is a decided advantage. Friend Barrows has also evolved a film chute, exactly similar to those described on Page 839, August 23, 1913, issue. The device is a metal chute about 2 inches thick, high enough to take a reel, and long enough to contain as many reels as are used for the entire show. This chute is attached to the wall at an angle. At the lower end is a door and at the upper end another. Reel No. 1 is placed at the door in the upper end and rolls down to the door in the lower end; reel No. 2 rolls down against reel No. 1, and so on. Reel No. 1 is taken out, placed in the machine, projected and put back into the top end. The reels are thus always kept in their proper sequence, and cannot possibly get mixed up. If rightly constructed it is thoroughly fireproof and the best operating room film container I know of. My compliments to Friend Barrows. I wish there were more like him.

While in Boston I was handed the following:

Pinkerton National Detective Agency.

$1,000,000 Reward.

For William Franke, Jr., known under the following aliases: Piute Pete, Lacteal Luke and Borden Bob. Age two days. Habits slovenly. Does not change his clothes. Hard drinker. Up all night. Sleeps day time with bottle in bed. When last seen was wearing square clothes folded on bias fastened with bar pin motto Safety First. Crime, larceny of hearts of all he meets.

It developed that this mysterious document referred to the son of Brother William Franke, former business agent Boston Local No. 182. I promptly went out and viewed this young reprobate, and, incidentally advised Mrs. Franke to put strong straps around her distinguished husband before he exploded with pent up pride. While in Boston I called at the old union address but they had moved and it was raining and—well I didn't connect. Will next time sure. Coming back I left Boston at 9 A. M., made a detour by Ansonia, Conn., took one hour for lunch at New Haven; stopped and talked with Griffiths, and arrived in New York at 6 P. M.—257 miles in less than 8 hours' actual running time. Some traveling! Huh! Business of swelling up.

Possibly.

A. W. Hornsby, manager "Royal Opera," Port Hope, Ontario, sends in a subscription, and says:

> Enclosed find sketches which I think will explain reasons for flashes in the lamphouse spoken of recently in the department. You will notice that when closing the carbons, sliding bar A > would come in contact with any loose strands from connection B, Fig. 1. In Fig. 2 you will notice there is a big chance of strands B making contact with spindle A. As operator I always read the World, which came to my manager, but as I have been promoted and am now the Head Push (manager) it is up to me to do the subscription act myself, so here is the money.

The sketches are referred to our readers for consideration. They certainly offer one possible solution of the flashes in the lamphouse.

First of All.

Harry Grant, operator, Elite Theater, Placerville, California, writes:

> With reference to the different methods already mentioned in the department by means of which a stereopticon light is taken from the side of the lamphouse, I would say that J. B. Travelle, of this city (my old friend, Joe. Hello, you villain! How's Landers?—Ed.) completed a device of this kind in 1098, the same being as per attached sketch. I had this apparatus on my machine and used it for two years. It certainly is all right. My object in sending this is to show the scheme is not a new one in this section of the country; also to prevent you easterners from swelling up your manly chests to too great an extent. I believe J. B. was the first in the field with a device of this kind.

The sketch shows a condensing lens attached to the side of the lamphouse opposite the arc, with the slide carriage between the condenser and lamphouse. The condensers set flat against the lamphouse wall and attached to it is a mirror which sets at an angle of 45 degrees, thus making a right angle reflection of the slide into an ordinary stereo placed in front. In general it is the same scheme used by the others, but the Projecta Strama goes very much further—very much further indeed, therefore, we, of the effete East, are still entitled to expand our superstructure until our vest buttons pop. My compliments to J. B. and his better half. They are old-time friends, and Joe is, in his way, something of a genius; also he is, I think, the best shadowgraph artist that ever happened.

Seattle Ball.

Louis L. Goldsmith, Seattle, Washington, who signs himself "Your not exactly Irish friend," has the following to say concerning the recent operators' ball:

> Well, the ball was one huge success—the biggest one pulled off for some years past. Dancing started at 9 o'clock, with five hundred people waiting to get in; by 10 you could scarcely move. At 11.30 the Grand March began. Just before the Grand March there was a parade down town, led by a big band, the mayor and the queen of the beauty contest and a number of others. We had the Hippodrome all fixed up with electric effects inside and out, with plenty of steam on the roof, and from Second to Fifth Avenue we had electric lights all over the streets. All in all, it was the talk of the town. All electrical effects were donated by the city and light companies and different theaters. Dancing lasted until nearly 5 o'clock. Yours Truly arrived at his wigwam at 5.30, was due at work at 11, and got there, too. We had five cameras on the job, all moving pictures, and they tell me they came out fine. Every operator was there who could possibly be there, and in full evening dress at that. Class? Well, I guess! Brother Ladd really looked dignified. Conditions here are very good, and most of the boys are working.

So Bill Ladd looked dignified, did he? Well, if he ever comes to New York and I get him to Coney Island he will look something else—take it from me! I will have that particular gentleman standing on the west corner of his northeast ear, singing "On the 5.15" to the tune of "God Save the King." There is a reason! I am glad to know the affair was a success, and that conditions in Seattle are good. May they continue so. Incidentally, I wish it were so I could see one of the moving pictures. The tickets surely are unique. It certainly is going some when the mayor of a city the size of Seattle leads the Grand March of a moving picture operators' ball. But that is exactly what happened. Miss Gertrude Fonda, said to be the prettiest girl in Seattle, and Hiram C. Gill, mayor of Seattle, led the Grand March. Reports are that from a mechanical and commercial viewpoint this ball was notable both for the extravagance of the lighting and decoration. The big hall was a veritable blaze of light, both inside and out, and eight mercury arc rectifier torches were used to make the flashlight picture. When the line had circled the room twice, Mayor Gill and Miss Fonda, preceded by Wagner's band and followed by a retinue of little girls bearing flowers and ribbons, entered the hall and took their place at the head of the march. The programs were printed on strips of silk ribbon made up to represent a motion picture film and each dance was known as a reel. The officials of the union who pulled this ball off are W. W. Ladd, president, A. L. Bohnert, recording secretary; Vance Bartlett, treasurer; George Smith, vice-president; E. W. Jones, financial secretary; Earl Cram, business agent, and A. F. Melin, sergeant-at-arms.

Be Fair.

C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada, writes:

> As a member of the don't-know-it-all tribe of operators I am glad, indeed, to take advantage of the up-to-date information provided in the department. I very much admire the fair-minded way in which you deal with the problems which arise between managers and operators. The trouble with some people is one-sidedness—inability to make proper allowance for point of view of the fellow on the "other side" of the matter at issue. This desire to be just has apparently made you enemies among those whom you are probably doing the most for, but the magnanimity of the editor toward those who oppose him appeals to me, and I believe the day will come when the spirit you display will gain for you a place of honor amongst your fellow-men far above even that you now hold among the right-minded of the fraternity.

Well, I suppose I ought to blush, but I guess I have forgotten how. I am using this letter because Neighbor Dann brings out a point here which needs a little airing. It is not easy for the editor of a department of this kind to be just and fair to all parties, because of the fact that temptation to take the path of least resistance and avoid trouble is always strong. You are perfectly right, Friend Dann, in assuming I have made enemies through refusing to look at just one side, even though that side be the one on which my interest, my inclination, and by heart lies. I must always remember, however, that, of necessity, the Moving Picture World must serve all interests in the industry, and its projection department, while it may point out to the manager errors it believes he is committing, and may point out to the unorganized operator the errors it believes he is committing, still, having done this it must serve what it believes to be, all things considered, the best interests of all these various opposing interests. The worst and most discouraging feature the editor has to contend with, however, lies in the fact that many of the unions bitterly resent any criticism of their policy, or any suggestions as to the policy they ought to pursue. This is unfortunate. It is wrong. It is even childish. But, nevertheless, it is the fact, though, I hope and believe this spirit of intolerance is on the decline, and that the day is not far distant when organized operators will realize the fact that honest criticism is not a thing to be feared, but actually to be desired.

Yes, Friend Dann, the position of the editor is not altogether a bed of roses, but he, nevertheless, manages to hoe his particular row pretty reasonably well, I guess, and keep reasonably close to the head of the procession.

A New Theater.

Ohio makes the following inquiry.

> Our new theater is about half finished. When completed the rear seats will be 106 feet from the curtain. The auditorium will be 67 feet wide, and its ceiling 26 feet above the floor level; seating capacity will be practically one thousand. (a) Under these conditions what size picture would you recommend? (b) What is your unbiased opinion as to the best screen to use, to get the best tone, everything considered—muslin, plaster, wall, mirror or a patent screen? (c) What depth of shadow box would you use at the screen? (d) For a general lighting scheme (subdued or indirect, of course) for the entire auditorium, what shade has been found to affect the picture the least—green, orange, yellow or what? We would thank you very kindly for complete and full answer to each of the above questions, and would appreciate a prompt reply, for which we enclose postage.

Umph! I should think you would, as a "complete" reply would take up at least one entire issue of this department. (a) Under the conditions named, with a 67-foot-wide house, the rear seats 106 feet away from the screen, I would project about an 18-foot picture. On this subject Brother Arkin (October 10, 1914, issue) gives data concerning his views on picture size, but his way of figuring would only give you a 15-foot picture, and that I do not think is large enough where a portion of the audience is more than 100 feet from the screen, though I do believe that the choice as between 16, 17 and 18 feet would, in your case, be largely a matter of personal preference as to the smaller, more brilliant picture, and the larger less brilliant one. With regard to the 18-foot picture, my mind goes back to the upstairs "Bijou Dream" theater of Chicago (long since defunct) where I operated for a year. The last seats were 105 feet from the screen and an 18-foot picture seemed to be just about right. Winding this part of your inquiry up, I would say that my personal preference, under your conditions, would be either a 17 or 18-foot picture. (b) My "unbiased" opinion is what I endeavor always to give, Ohio. It is the only kind of opinion that "goes" in this department. I would not use muslin. It gives a beautiful picture, but is too wasteful. Plaster coated with white calcimine makes a splendid screen, but it requires heavy amperage to secure a brilliant picture on this kind of surface, and, moreover, such a surface should be renewed about once a month in order to get best results. The glass screen has an exceedingly brilliant surface, but it is difficult to get a mirror surface screen which will give entirely satisfactory results in a house 67 feet wide, if the front seats are to be anywhere near the screen. Of the so-called metallic surface screens I can recommend the Mirroroide, the Day and Night and the Minusa Gold Fibre, with the proviso that the manufacturer be required to give a written guarantee as to durability of the surface. I would not, at this time, care to commit myself further on the question of tinted screen surfaces. Personally, I have always stood for a pure white, but those who argue for tints make certain claims which I don't feel in position to dispute. This much, however, I can confidently say, viz.: the addition of any color of any kind to either the lens or the screen surface will compel the use of more current in order to secure equal brilliancy. (c) With a house such as yours I would have a shadow box or border of dead black 6 feet across, though it need not have any considerable depth, say, two or three feet, and outside of this black, which should be a plain surface, covered with dead black (without any gloss at all), I would have a heavy ornamental molding 18 inches to 2 feet, built with round corners at the top, somewhat after the fashion of a proscenium arch. I am assuming that you propose to place the curtain on a flat wall at the front of the auditorium. If you have a stage, then that is something else again. With a stage I would set the picture back, say not less than 5 or 6 feet from the proscenium line, and have a black outline around it of considerable width, say 5 or 6 feet, with ornamental dark colored draperies filling the entire stage from the proscenium arch to the edge of the black. Of course this advice is only given broadly. There are hundreds of ways of doing the thing, but so far as the black is concerned I stand, and have always stood for a wide, plain black border. (d) Side lights should not be used at all, except purely for ornamental purposes; that is to say, behind ornamental semi-opaque shades which will not give off any light at all, but merely "look pretty." If the indirect lighting system is used I think I would prefer white lights with the ceiling containing considerable yellow—a sort of light tan color. This gives perhaps the best effect I have seen, but I cannot keep up with things of this kind. I have not the time to examine the thousand of light effects produced by the ideas of thousands of individual managers. I think you are as well able to judge of this particular item as I am. I would, however, recommend that you investigate the lighting system described on Page 388, April 17, 1915, issue. I am inclined to believe that this is the ideal system of moving picture theater auditorium lighting. A letter to the Shadow-Lite Manufacturing Company, Beaver Falls, Pa., will bring particulars.

Not Correct.

John Solar, Watertown, New York, writes:

> In reading the department, issue June 5th, I see that Nova Scotia does not understand Friend Bullock's curves. These curves do not represent the true action of induction or of a choke coil. They represent the reverse pressure due to self induction by curve B, in a fixed position with the impressed voltage, represented by curve A. If it were possible to have the line voltage and the current waves in time phase, his curves would be true, but if they were in phase there would be no induction, and curve B would not exist. Induction retards or chokes back the current and causes it to lag behind the impressed voltage, therefore when induction is present the impressed voltage and the curent waves cannot be in time phase. The current (not the voltage) sets up the magnetic field in the core, and curve B, representing reverse pressure due to self induction, should be in a fixed position with the current wave. He says the reactance, or counter E. M. F. chokes back or opposes the applied E. M. F., and only the amount in which the E. M. F. is in excess of the reactance or counter E. M. F. can pass through the coil and reach the lamp circuit. From this and the diagram it is very evident that Brother Bullock considers the counter E. M. F. as opposing the impressed E. M. F., where he should have considered it as opposing the current. When induction is present the current lags behind the impressed E. M. F., that is, part of the pressure wave has been formed at the time the current wave forms at zero, and during this interval the pressure is exerted in forcing current back into the line. This energy is termed the wattless component of the current. The balance of the pressure is exerted in forcing current through the arc and is termed the useful component of the current. The reason we do not get the line voltage at the arc is that the current and voltage are not in time phase, consequently the maximum pressure and maximum current do not occur at the same instant.

Well, now I don't know about this, Brother Solar. I do not and never have professed to be an electrical engineer. My understanding of a choke coil is that the counter E. M. F., due to induction, opposes the impressed E. M. F., lessens the voltage and reduces it to a quantity which is sufficient to allow the desired current to flow. Technically it is quite possible that your objection to the term E. M. F. as applied by Bullock is correct, practically, however, I do not think it is. I do not see how you can oppose "current." You oppose the E. M. F. which forces the current against resistance, and, of course, in so doing you might say you oppose current. It is an interlocking proposition, and, while I do not criticise your criticism of the diagram, I do criticise your statement to the extent named. I would rather not, however, go into these very highly technical discussions very much. Not because I get into deep water myself, for that is easy. I could send these letters to one of the best electrical engineers in the city of New York, or, for that matter, to any one of a half dozen of them, and they would give me the absolutely correct dope, so you see I am in position to save my own face at any time, regardless of whether I know the right answer or not. That is a trade secret, but it is the fact just the same. Please don't tell this to anybody, because I would not have it known for the world. The real reason is, that I haven't room to spare for very much of this sort of thing. I only want to give enough of it to start you fellows studying.

Try It Anyhow.

C. Wallis, Hamilton, Ontario, says:

> I note on Page 1772, June 12th issue, that Morehead, Minn., has trouble with his lens. I had a similar difficulty, which I remedied by readjusting the three screws which hold the lens ring of the Powers Six A. It took the out-of-focus effect away for me; perhaps it will for him. I see Roy Chase, Boyne City, Mich., still has use for the pocket Handbook you published long ago. I also received one and it was a great help to me when I was on the road some years ago. I still have it. Am anxiously awaiting the result of the experiments. If you put them in book form put me down for a copy right now. I think it would be a good way to defray expense of the experiments, and you can have my bit.

The Moving Picture World stood the expense of the experiments—no small item. That matter is all settled. The result will be published in the projection department of the Moving Picture World, and in the third edition of the Handbook, when it is printed. I had hoped to have the light matter ready very soon, but getting it into final shape is one whopping big task. There is not so much of it—maybe thirty or thirty-five pages of manuscript, a lot of drawings and photographs and some tables, but to whip the thing into final shape, and make sure that it is at least reasonably correct is—well if you had the job in front of you you would understand why it will be a month or more yet before I can begin its publication. In matters of this kind it is better to go slowly and be very careful, because the tables, which really represent the whole result, are going to be subjected to microscopic scrutiny by a great many people who would have no greater joy in life than to point out faults. I have no hopes they won't be able to find them—none whatever. But I do want to be sure that they won't be able to prove that the whole thing is based in error, and, by heck, I am going to be certain of that before I publish it, if it takes a year. I fully expect to begin the publication in the department not later than August 1st, and, possibly very much sooner. As to the other matters, they are referred to the parties interested.

Interesting and—Practical.

The Day & Night Screens, Inc., is trying out a scheme which looks good. In the demonstration room of the Universal Film Mfg. Company the throw is only 23 feet, with a 9-foot picture, therefore, the out-of-focus effect has been a rather serious proposition. The Day & Night people have so arranged a screen that the operator with one motion swings the screen on a pivot in such manner that it stands exactly square with the machine he is using.

This is something it seems to me that is entirely practical to use in houses where a large picture is projected on a short throw, using two machines. If the screen is properly arranged the movement could not be seen at all, and it certainly would eliminate the out-of-focus effect. Of course, it would make the angle a little greater from the left side of the house when the right-hand machine is being used, and greater from the right side of the house when the left-hand machine is being used, but this, I believe, would hardly be noticeable, and certainly would not be nearly so objectionable as out-of-focus effect.

My own ideas of it would be to set the screen behind a black mask and outline the screen in black, letting the mask rest just far enough ahead of the screen so that the edge of the screen would just touch at the extreme of the swing, and so that the black edge of the mask would fall on the black border of the screen. If this was properly done I think the mask would hardly be perceptible to the audience. In that way the swing of the screen could not be seen, and the thing ought to work perfectly. Yes, it looks to me like a scheme having a whole lot of real value in houses where the conditions before named are encountered.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

THE CONDEMNING CIRCUMSTANCES (Biograph), June 21.—An excellent sub-title for this one-reel drama would be "The Romance of a Vacuum Cleaner," the author of the film employing that useful article to clear the hero of a charge of murder. The reel makes an intense little drama, and is ably acted by Charles Perley, Madge Kirby and Augusta Anderson.

THE MAN WHO FOUND OUT (Essanay), June 21.—A one-reel dream play, with a comedy denouement, this one-reel drama teaches a lesson against unfounded suspicion. Meritorious in treatment and in the acting of Sydney Ainsworth, Beverly Bayne and John Thorn.

THE SACRIFICE ("Road o' Strife" Series, No. 12) (Lubin), June 21.—This instalment of the Emmett Campbell Hall serial is replete with action. The showgirl, Daisy, is the central figure in a number of melodramatic happenings, which end with the girl sacrificing her life for those she loves. Admirers of the story will find "The Sacrifice" deeply interesting.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 49, 1915 (Selig), June 21.—Balloons at Panama-Pacific Exposition in gale, is the opening picture on the reel. Next in order are: Balloon "Venice" drops into San Francisco Bay; Flag Day exercises by New York City school children; flood at Fort Worth, Texas; Chicago street car strike; Lucile fashions; Yale oarsmen at Gales Ferry, Conn.; war spirit in Italy, Nebraskan in dry dock at Liverpool; explosion of dynamite at quarry, Richard City, Tenn.

MR. JARR AND LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM (Jarr Family Series, No. 12) (Vitagraph), June 21.—For a young lady from Philadelphia, the diabolic plot with which Irene Cackleberry revenges herself isn't half slow. The poison ivy motive in this number of the McCardell Serial is the cause of much laughter.

IN HIGH SOCIETY (Kalem), June 22.—There is one very sad feature connected with this "Ham" and "Bud" comedy—it never happened. The two merry gentlemen spend a delightful evening in high society and accumulate unlimited quantities of punch, also the golden trinkets of the other guests, and have a high old time—until "Ham" wakes up and finds, to his unspeakable sorrow, it was all a dream. One of the best films of the series.

FATHER SAID HE'D FIX IT (Lubin), June 22.—A half-reel farce, written and produced by Will Louis, and acted by the Lubin Colored Contingent, this photoplay is a happy reminder of the old-time minstrel afterpiece. Billy Higgins and Mattie Edwards are the chief funmakers.

WITH THE HELP OF THE LADIES (Lubin), June 22.—On the same reel with "Father Said He'd Fix It." A fairly amusing farce, George Welch, Eloise Willard and C. W. Ritchie, contributing largely to its success.

WITH THE AID OF THE LAW (Selig), June 22.—The novel feature of this one-reel drama is Tom Mix in the character of a young business man from the city. The author of the story has discovered moonshiners out beyond the Rockies, and the erstwhile cowboy marries the daughter of the chief illicit distiller. A fairly entertaining photoplay.

A SPORT OF CIRCUMSTANCES (Edison), June 23.—An exceedingly clever string of nonsense is wound up on this single reel. Preston Kendall has hit upon a fresh and amusing theme, and Will Louis has done it ample justice in the producing. Raymond McKee, Arthur Housman, Dallas Welford and Caroline Rankin are especially to be commended for their acting.

THE FABLE OF "THE SEARCH FOR CLIMATE" (Essanay), June 23.—George Ade has beautifully sugar-coated the pill, but this fable, deep down inside, is as pure and unadulterated a temperance lecture as the blown-in-the-bottle brand of W. J. Bryan. The shrewdly humorous insight into one of life's foibles is still there, however, and we swallow the homily with the same relish that the "poor Gloomer" acquired for his buttermilk. One reel.

THE ONION PATCH (Selig), June 23.—A mild one-reel drama, very human in its situations and characters, but possessing little real drama. Lyllian Brown Leighton, John Lancaster. Wm. Stowell and Vivian Reed form a satisfactory cast.

AN INTERCEPTED VENGEANCE (Vitagraph), June 23.—William McLeod Raine has supplied material for a vital and well-made western drama. The death of the bully, Jim Henson, will give great satisfaction to all beholders of the film. Margaret Gibson, Jack Mower, George Stanley and William V. Ranous are particularly good in their respective characters.

HER CONVERT (Biograph), June 24.—The story of this one-reel drama has much to commend it, but the ease with which windows and safes are opened, and the careless way that valuable papers are left lying around, weakens its hold on an audience. Claire McDowell, Harry Carey and Chas. H. West are as reliable as ever.

A HOT FINISH (Essanay), June 24.—An amusing one-reel comedy, that cleverly satirizes the folly of a mistaken ambition. The abrupt change from the country girl's dream of fame to the reality of her existence, forms a ludicrous climax. Marjorie Reiger and Bob McKenzie highly commendable.

THE STOLEN CASE (MinA), June 24.—The foundation of this one-reel farce is not new, but the producer shows originality and skill in building up the incidents. George Ovey is amusing in the leading part.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 50, 1915 (Selig), June 24.—An amateur circus at Rensselaer Institute, Troy, N. Y., starts the reel. Other subjects are: Col. E. M. House at Roslyn, N. Y.; yacht Margaret on Hell Gate rocks; Brookline, Mass., Country Club Meet; Rose Carnival at Portland, Ore.; big guns dragged to Fort Sheridan by heavy tractor; Lucile fashions; Moving Picture Theater Managers of New England at outing; race meeting at Panama-Pacific Exposition; launching of Arizona at Brooklyn Navy Yard; demonstration in "Little Italy," London; Rome after war was declared and motor boat squadron at Hull, Mass.

WHAT'S OURS (Vitagraph), June 24.—The "Fairy Prince" marries the lowly maiden in this one-reel comedy quite in the storybook way. It is all told in a strictly modern manner, but is an engaging bit of romance, nevertheless, and has been given an excellent production by S. Rankin Drew. Muriel Ostriche is a sufficient excuse for the infatuation of her prince, and uniformly capable portrayals are given by Raymond Bloomer, Anders Randolf and Louise Beaudet.

FIGHTING BLOOD (Biograph), June 25.—There is no lack of vigor in this one-reel reissue. It depicts the dangers of frontier life in a very realistic manner, the fight with the Indians forming a strong climax.

HER REALIZATION (Essanay), June 25.—Marguerite Clayton has the lion's share of the acting in this one-reel drama and carries the burden with ease. The story is interesting and original. G. M. Anderson and Lee Willard also make light work of their roles.

HER ANSWER (Lubin), June 25.—The author of this one-reel drama has done his own thinking and evolved a situation which is only an episode in the life of one man, but of great moment to the woman in the case. William Cohill and Lilie Leslie play these parts excellently, and Rosetta Brice contributes a character study of real power.

THEIR FIRST QUARREL (Vitagraph), June 25.—The first quarrel of Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed can lead to but one result—all of their admirers will demand an encore. Sidney Drew Newlywed and Mrs. Sidney Drew Newlywed may promise each other never to quarrel again, but let us hope for the worst, and be on hand to enjoy the fun. (The "scrap" was instigated by the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady!)

THE GIRL HATER (Biograph), June 26.—The best laid scheme of a foxey guardian doesn't go wrong in this one-reel comedy, and the girl hater is made to realize his mistake about the fair sex. A neat little comedy, which receives proper handling by Gus Pixley, Jack Hulhall and Irma Dawkins.

THE BREAKS OF THE GAME (Edison), June 26.—Material enough for a three-reel drama has been boiled down and utilized in the one-reel photoplay by Eugene Nowland. This play is highly sensational, opium smuggling and an abduction in New York's Chinatown comprising the big features. The production has been skilfully made, and the cast, headed by Augustus Phillips and Maxine Brown, is entirely satisfactory.

IN DANGER'S PATH (An Episode of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), June 26.—Locked in a blazing freight car is one of the "hazards" taken by Helen in this one-reel episode. The fight in the pit of the turntable is another bit of real excitement. The same "know how" care is shown in this reel that has been used in the preceding ones.

JUST LIKE KIDS (Lubin), June 26.—There is a deal of human nature in this one-reel comedy for which Epes Winthrop Sargent is responsible. The fight of the neighbors over their children's quarrel, only to find that the two kiddies have shown the better sense and promptly "made it up," is another proof of the truth of the Shakespearian aphorism: "What fools these mortals be!" Billie Reeves gives a capital performance of an Irish hodcarrier.

THE TIGER CUB (Selig), June 26.—The manner in which the tiger is made a part of the story of this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama reflects considerable credit of the author, Emma Bell. The African scenes and characters are convincing.

General Film Company Specials

WHEN THE MIND SLEEPS (Kalem), June 14.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1786, issue of June 12.

THE WORKING OF A MIRACLE (Edison), June 18.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 1621, issue of June 5.

WORK (Essanay), June 21.—A two-reel Charlie Chapman release, the opening comedy business of Charlie of the Guileless Grin will put a broader smile on the face of Momus. Nothing better than the entire reel has been seen to the screen, but the originality and comic invention of the first five minutes of "Work" has seldom been equalled.

THE MISSING MAN (Kalem), June 21.—This two-reel photoplay is a crook play and a western drama rolled into one. It is filled with exciting incidents, rather overcrowded, in fact, and the climax is weakened by the number of the dead and wounded. The filming has been carefully done, and the cast, headed by Elizabeth Baird and Fred Church, is competent.

THE FORTUNES OF MARIANA (Selig), June 21.—The human nature and heart interest in this two-reel drama make a strong bid in its favor. Bessie Rowland, the author, has kept well within the bounds of possibility and constructed her story with skill. Stella Razeto handles the title role with sure grasp, and Scott Dunlap's embodiment of Hinky is without flaw. Lamar Johnstone and Eugenie Besserer assist materially in the success of the picture.

THE WIVES OF MEN (Biograph), June 22.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1438, issue of May 29.

BRAGA'S DOUBLE (Essanay), June 22.—The fight in the cafe, which is one of the big moments in Braga's Double, the two-reel photoplay by Henry C. Roland, comes very near being the real thing. Sheldon Lewis, who has the dual role in the drama, plays the American and the Argentino with finished art, and proves himself a handy man in a row. The illusion of life in Paris is cleverly maintained, and the plot bristles with exciting episodes.

VICTOR'S AT SEVEN (Vitagraph), June 22.—A direct descendant from the old Palais Royal farces, this three-reel photoplay, by Eugene Mullin, has all the spirit and sparkle of its French ancestors. The sporty business man, flirtatious professor, jealous wife, Fifi the chorus girl, her jealous lover, private supper rooms—the correct ingredients have been furnished by the author and fashioned into a delectable bit of fooling by Producer C. Jay Williams, Hughie Mack, Anna Laughlin, Kate Price, Charles Brown, John T. Kelly, Nicholas Dunaew and Ethel Lloyd, guarantee the grade of acting.

THE VIVISECTIONIST (Kalem), June 23.—The theme of this two-reel drama has considerable of the gruesome strength of a story by Edgar Allen Poe. Producer James W. Horne has been faithful to every detail of the situations, and there is no denying their grip. Persons with delicate nerves will not find it enjoyable.

THE KICK OUT (Knickerbocker Star Feature Company), June 23.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 2110, issue of June 26.

THE LIFE LINE (Lubin), June 23.—Elizabeth R. Carpenter has written a two-reel drama of modern life that will command the respect of any audience. The story ends happily, but the lesson it teaches is brought home with telling effect. Lottie Briscoe gives a lifelike impersonation of the heroine, and Arthur Johnson, Leon Kelly and Howard Mitchell afford her excellent support. The production has received the careful attention of Arthur Johnson.

THE DREAM DANCE (Lubin), June 24.—The pathos of Ouida's "Two Little Wooden Shoes" and the moral lesson of "A Fool There Was" are both to be found in this three-reel drama, written and produced by Leon D. Kent. The story is built up in a workmanlike manner, and the atmosphere of Paris and the studios reproduced with skill. L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman and Natalie de Lontan are the leaders in a well-chosen cast.

SANDS OF TIME (Selig), June 24.—One of the best features of this powerful three-reel drama by Colin Campbell, is the fine restraint shown by that gentleman in filming his work. The subject could easily have been turned into commonplace melodrama. Mr. Campbell has given it the benefit of refined feeling and artistic dramatic expression. The acting of Harry Lonsdale and Martha Boucher ably seconds the efforts of the producer.

THROUGH TURBULENT WATERS (Edison), June 25.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 2107, issue of June 26.

HONOR THY FATHER (Kalem), June 25.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1947, issue of June 19.

A DIGNIFIED FAMILY (Essanay), June 26.—Lovers of romance will find much to their liking in this three-reel photoplay, which tells of the love of two brothers for an uneducated mountain girl of the South. It is the story of Cinderella over again, the modest little grub bursting into a butterfly of fashion during the progress of the play. Ruth Stonehouse was a happy selection for the part, and the production maintains a high level of merit.

THE SILENT W (Vitagraph), June 26.—Donald I. Buchanans two-reel comedy belongs to the "Daddy Longlegs" order of romances. The pretty heroine of humble origin who marries the wealthy and good-looking hero, is a bit of stage fiction that is relished by all right minded folk. Lillian Walker and Evart Overton make a fitting pair of lovers, and the production is on a par with Wilfrid North's usual standard.

George Kleine.

THE SPENDTHRIFT, June 21.—Reviewed by James S. McQuade on page 78, issue of July 3.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

MY BEST GIRL (Rolfe), June 14.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 76, issue of July 3.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 25, 1915 (Mutual), June 24.—In this issue are shown the first aerial "jitney"; scenes of the Chicago car strike; Col. Roosevelt at the Battledore bird reservation, Louisiana; the Rose Festival at Portland, Ore., and the launching of the "Arizona."

THE MOTOR BOAT BANDITS (Majestic), June 25.—Irene Hunt, Felix Modjeska, Catherine Henry and Ben Lewis are the chief members of the cast of this production. That there is nothing particularly attractive about the picture is, however, not due to these talented players, but rather to the lack of a good story. The story is of the newspaper-detective sort, but of little account.

BEAUTIFUL LOVE (Komic), June 27.—This is a burlesque on the woman suffrage idea, and illustrates a remarkable flight of imagination on the part of somebody. The picture is a clever one and makes good entertainment.

THE SHOWDOWN (Reliance), June 28.—The characters are well introduced in this story of a young girl's experiences in a boarding house. One young fellow steals the money given her by a pretended friend and then saves the girl from the latter's clutches. This is not powerful but entertaining throughout.

THE MADONNA (Beauty), June 29.—This picture has a good moral, and would interest the majority of audiences. It is the story of how a dissipated young man of wealth found his redemption through a painting of a madonna which he bought. He looks up the model who posed for the picture and with her finds happiness and a new life.

THE KID MAGICIANS (Majestic), June 29.—A clever juvenile subject, featuring Violet Radcliffe, George Stone and Carmen De Rue. Unlike many children's pictures, it shows them doing real kid tricks, and is accordingly more interesting than usual.

A GOOD BUSINESS DEAL (American), June 30.—With the exception of a few scenes that have been very cleverly arranged in such a way that they attract admiration of the individual sort, there is little to recommend this production as an entertainment. The story is slight and uninteresting.

IN OLD MEXICO (Reliance), June 30.—A rather conventional story with a pleasing Mexican setting. A husband's jealousy is aroused by seeing another's arm about the shawl he has given his wife, but it turns out the wife has loaned the shawl to an engaged girl, so a tragedy is averted. The suspense toward the close is well sustained.

A WOMAN SCORNED (American), July 2.—This is rather a good one-reeler. The story is of how an adventuress tried to ensnare a married man and put between him and his wife by bribing a poor man whom she caught stealing in her rooms, to photograph herself and the man in the act of kissing. The kiss, by-the-way, is forced upon the man in an unguarded moment. The plan fails through the poor man, who is now an employee of the rich man, revealing to the disturbed wife what he knows of the case.

THE SILENT CO-ED (Falstaff), July 21.—A light comedy number featuring a basket ball contest, with girl players. The janitor is in love with the settlement girl and wins her in the face of opposition. The scenes are well-pictured and the number quite pleasing.

ONE GOOD COOK (Royal), July 3.—The village undertaker induces his landlady to start up a cooking school. She does so, and, as a result, all the husbands in town are made ill. The idea in this is better than the presentation; it proves only fairly successful.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

LITTLE TEACHER (Keystone), June 21.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 79, issue of July 3.

A BAD MAN AND OTHERS (Reliance), June 26.—A two-reel production savoring of the southwest. It will be found fairly interesting. The theme has not been worked out altogether satisfactorily, and it is distinctly felt that opportunities for dramatic situations have been lost. William Lowery as "Mesquite Mike" and George Walsh as George Hewitt of the play, and also Daisy Robinson in the role of Hewitt's wife are exceptionally satisfying. In fact the picture is not in any way lacking in types.

CHILDREN OF THE SEA (Majestic), June 27.—The cast in this two-reel Majestic are deserving of especial praise for the manner in which they have portraited the various characters of the story. The production has been prettily made, but the story itself is not above the ordinary, and follows a theme that has been oft-repeated in pictures under various kinds of treatment. It is the story of a fisherman's daughter who tired of her quiet life and left home to meet with an unhappy fate. The latter part of the production is taken up principally with the story of her daughter, who makes an attempt to follow in the footsteps of her mother. There are some discrepancies in the picture, chiefly due to the neglect to suit make-up to the flight of years.

BY WHOSE HAND? (American), June 28.—In this production will be found an intensely interesting mystery story. George Field plays the heavy and Winnifred Greenwood is seen to good advantage as the farmer's daughter. The story centers about the wicked life of the villain, who, while he is being searched for throughout the country for one murder and robbery, commits another robbery and attempts murder at the same time. He, himself, becomes the victim, however, and is shot to death, while the farmer, whom he attempts to murder, escapes with a scalp wound. There is a question as to who it is that kills the robber, the farmer's son being out with a rifle near the spot at the time of the murder. Hence the title of the picture.

CROSSED WIRES (Thanhouser), June 29.—A two-reel number, featuring Flo Labadie, Morris Foster and Boyd Marshal. The maid poisons the elderly lady employing her in order to gain an inheritance, throwing the guilt on the nephew. The crime and subsequent happenings are pictured in a most graphic way, the plot being much better than the average offering of the kind. The telephone feature was handled in good style. A crime story with many dramatic moments.

THE FLYING TWINS (Mutual Masterpicture), July 1.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 76, issue of July 3.

TOOLS OF PROVIDENCE (Broncho), July 7.—A two-reel Western number, featuring Wm. S. Hart and Rhea Mitchell. The former appears as a saloon owner and she as the daughter of a minister. She agrees to wait on the bar five minutes if he will attend church next day. He agrees, and becomes a convert. Later he saves her from the advances of a gambler. The closing scenes are quite dramatic and exciting. This is a strongly-enacted number of its kind.

THE ACE OF HEARTS (Domino), July 8.—A remarkably strong two-reel Western number, abounding in good scenic effects. Walter Edwards, Charles Ray and Ethel Ullman play the leads; the part of Baptiste was also well handled. The story contains a murder mystery, and the manner in which the sergeant traces the criminal is not so obvious as frequently happens. The avalanche and struggle in the snow all make good out-door effects. This is stronger than the usual Western offering.

THE HAMMER (Kay-Bee), July 9.—This two-reel number by T. H. Ince and J. G. Hawks is exceptionally good. The plot is new and splendidly developed. It demonstrates how a girl on the upper floor of an apartment house knocks a hammer over the bannister, killing the miserly landlord. The artist on the first floor is held as a murderer. A strong case of circumstantial evidence is built up against him, but the clever detective picks the evidence to pieces and saves his life. A very deft piece of detective work is seen in this production. Frank Borzag, Leona Hutton, Margaret Gibson and Arthur Maude appear. A good offering.

North American Film Corporation.

A RUNAWAY MATCH (American), June 28.—Chapter 9 of "The Diamond from the Sky." In this instalment Blair brings the diamond to Vivian and asks her hand in marriage. During the ceremony an attempt is made to place him under arrest, but both escape. Further scenes of a dramatic nature are pictured at the gypsy camp, where Luke Lovell is injured in a rock slide. Arthur is still in the West and is seen toward the close trying to prevent a train robbery. The number is characteristic and serves to carry forward the different threads of the story.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE WEEKLY, NO. 49, 1915, June.—Among the more interesting items of this issue are the launching of the "Arizona," scenes in the streets of Chicago during the recent car strike, and a flood in a Texan town.

THE PUBLIC PARKS OF PARIS, July.—To those interested in travel subjects this film will be found very interesting. In it glimpses, splendidly photographed, are given, of most of the beautiful parks in and about Paris. On the same reel with "Small Denizens of the Sea Shore."

SMALL DENIZENS OF THE SEASHORE. July.—On the same reel with the above and illustrating the life and habits of the whelk, the sea ear, wood lice and other forms of life that inhabit the sea shore.

SHE'S A PIPPIN (Starlight), July.—The first of the Aubrey and Kendig comedies to appear on the program of the Pathe Exchange. Heine and Louie are, as usual, looking for a living in the belief that the world owes it to them. A millionaire's daughter is the center of attraction, and it is a sad reflection for both to be brought suddenly to a realization that the young woman is the possessor of a husband. This farce comedy is a thoroughly enjoyable one.

THE FRUIT OF FOLLY (No. 11 of the "Who Pays" Series), Rel. Wk. June 21.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 82, issue of July 3.

ROMANCE OF ELAINE, Episode 2, July.—So far "The Romance of Elaine" gives no clue to what may be expected of people and things in general. Elaine continues to be surrounded by harrassing events, but the relationship between the manipulations of the mysterious Mr. X. and those of Marcus Del Mar is not yet even to be guessed at. There is little if any diminution in the interest which was kept always on the qui vive in the previous episodes of the Elaine story, and there is promise of more startling developments to follow.

STRAWS IN THE WIND (Balboa), July.—A three-reel production of fair values. The development of the story is not always natural and the utter lack of discrimination displayed by the characters may hold good in some instances, but as an illustration of the average human nature it is not altogether true to life. The production will not, however, lack interest to the average observer.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 172 (Universal), July 22.—Leading features of this number are a floral parade in Los Angeles, Universal Beauty excursion, subway opening, a railroad wreck and launching of the battleship "Arizona."

THE ADVISER, (Big U), July 4.—A story of love and politics, written by Harvey Gates. The gangsters employ an adventuress to approach a prominent politician, to make his wife jealous and ruin his standing. The plot is neither very strong nor very new. It makes an average number.

BILLY'S BABY (Laemmle), July 4.—A comedy drama with Peggy Hart, Millard K. Wilson and others in the cast. A young detective falls in love with the employe of an unscrupulous promoter; his investigations result in saving the savings of the girl's aged woman friend. This plot is not very strong, though the situations are well-pictured. It makes at the most only an average offering.

WHEN THEIR DADS FELL OUT (Nestor), July 6.—A light comedy number, featuring Billie Rhodes and Jack Connelly. This is full of action, which consists chiefly in a unique elopement in which the participants and pursuers impress into service a handcar, train and automobile. This chase feature is made unusually strong.

STEADY COMPANY (Rex), July 6.—A bright, pleasing subject, picturing the love affair of a poor working girl, who has a worthless father. Pauline Bush and Lon Chaney play the leads. There is a lot of real life in this story and, in spite of the girl's hard circumstances, the humorous side is always up. A good picture, full of natural, homely touches.

THE CHILD NEEDS A MOTHER (L-KO), July 7.—Featuring Hank Mann, Peggy Pearce and a fat young man dressed up as a baby girl. The scenes are mostly of a knockabout type, rough in spots, but quite laughable.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK, NO. 4 (Powers), July 8.—This number bears a special title of "Baffles Aids Cupid." This series of burlesque detective comedies by Clarence G. Badger is offering a lot of enjoyable nonsense. In this particular instalment the detective and his fair nemesis are at their best.

LIZZIE BREAKS INTO THE HAREM (Nestor), July 9.—An Al E. Christie number, in which the humor is rather breezy for some audiences. Lizzie, the country girl, decides to take the place of an escaped Turkish wife. She goes to the harem, followed by her rube lover, where they have many exciting experiences. The fun is of a rough, knockabout sort.

Universal Film Mfg. Company, Specials.

JANE'S DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE (Bison), July 3.—A two-reel number, written and produced by Charles Giblyn, featuring Hobart Henley and Agnes Vernon. The girl's father objects to her marriage with a soldier, but she is a daughter of the revolution and takes action on her own account. The flashes picturing the battle of Concord were timely and well done. The scenes at Fort Winfield Scott are very attractive. Miss Vernon is particularly pleasing as the girl. The closing scenes are not very strong, but the number, as a whole, is better than the average.

THE CURSE OF WORK (L-KO), July 4.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring Billy Ritchie, Louise Orth and others. Billy is a bootblack with a fondness for women customers. He follows one of these to the park and has numerous adventures. The humor is rather broad and not quite so complicated as in some numbers, but it will serve to amuse observers who enjoy this class of film.

THE LITTLE WHITE VIOLET (Victor), July 5.—A pretty two-reel story of a young girl raised in a nunnery, written by Olga Clar[illegible]. A young man comes into her life and she has a strong spiritual conflict before she can decide whether or not to renounce her vows for love. The ending, in which she elects to remain with the church, may disappoint some, but the whole production is beautifully and thoughtfully handled. Mary Fuller as Little Viola brings grace and charm to the part. The photography is good and the settings in and about the nunnery are attractive. Pedro de Cordoba is pleasing as the lover. A good offering of a serious sort.

WHEN THE CROWN ROCKED (Universal Special), July 5.—No. 3 of "The Broken Coin" series. An effort is made in this number by Count Frederick to get King Michael intoxicated and lead a revolution. His plan is outwitted by Kitty Grey. Miss Cunard interpolates some burlesque touches in this number which somewhat interfere with the dramatic effect of certain scenes. The story, however, continues to be entertaining, thought the action of the plot is slightly mechanical. Roleaux reappears in the second reel and rescues the girl in a daring manner.

THE CROWN OF DEATH (Gold Seal), July 6—The sixth and final instalment of "Under the Crescent" series, featuring Princess Hassan. In this number Zorah works out her revenge by killing the prince. This leads to a very dramatic situation, where Olga is discovered to be a queen in her own right One of her first acts is to demand the freeing of the Christians. A revolt occurs and the army of deliverance arrives just in time. This closing number is unusually strong. The series as a whole has been particularly strong in atmosphere and settings.

BETTY'S DREAM HERO (Laemmle) July 7.—A two-reel number, by Witt Cochrane, featuring Robert Leonard and Ella Hall. The time is that of the civil war. The cast is large and the settings are elaborate. The views of the darky quarters are pleasing, and the interpretation of Betty's dream of the old heroic days was very attractive. Some short, spirited war scenes occur and Betty meets her hero in real life, he seeking refuge in her home. The invasion of her room and the subsequnt interview was delicately handled. This has no particularly strong features, but is a decidedly pleasing offering of its type.

SOULS IN PAWN (Rex), July 8.—A three-reel offering by M. B. Havey, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Wm. Cortleigh, Jr., Vivian Prescott and Jos. W. Girard. The theme is a somewhat sordid one, with a tendency to the sensational, but the story is well-constructed and holds the interest. It pictures the manner in which an actress lures a young man from his sweetheart. John's efforts to bring him back raise the tone of the story considerably and give it a good motive. Dick kills the actress' lover in a jealous rage and John accepts the blame for the crime. During the trial scenes the truth is brought out in a dramatic manner. The story is a good one of its type, though this is not of the strongest.

THE ULSTER LASS (Bison), July 10.—This two-reel Irish production features Gene Gauntier, Jack J. Clark, Albert MacQuarrie, Lydia Yeamans Titus and others. It is the usual Irish tale of a young man surrounded by enemies who wish his life. The girl saves him in the nick of time as he is to be shot. Many of the plot ingredients are familiar, and in spite of this the opening scenes are very vague. Old themes to be successful must have more directness and force than is found in this. The photography and settings are very good and the characterizations are pleasing.

Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Mrs. Sidney Drew, a distinguished member of the Vitagraph Stock Company, forsook an enviable position on the concert stage to become a star in the field of expression dominated by the camera. She was born in Sedalia, Mo., April 18th, 1890, and christened Lucille McVey.

Her schooling was obtained in the public and high schools of Sedalia and as a student in the Sedalia College of Music and Nebraska Wesleyan School of Expression, receiving well-deserved degrees from both colleges. When she decided to adopt a profession,. she chose the concert stage as the best adapted to her talents. While Mrs. Drew has had practically no experience on the legitimate stage, she spent six years as an entertainer, in America and abroad, under the direction of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau and became recognized as one of the foremost child dialect readers in America.

Mrs. Sidney Drew.

A restlessness that demanded a change of vocation resulted in her making application to the Vitagraph Company for a position as a member of their stock organization, and again her judgment stood her in good stead as she was not only given a part, but was fortunate in being cast as one of the principals in a comedy being directed by Sidney Drew. A mutual interest attracted these two players and resulted in the present combination of the most popular artists in the field of silent drama.

Mrs. Drew besides playing in all the pictures produced by Mr. Drew has written many scenarios and elaborates and constructs the majority of the stories in which she appears. Her best literary work is in a picturization of Richard Harding Davis' story, "Playing Dead," which, when completed for the screen, will be her greatest acting drama. Mrs. Drew has become identified with comedy in her picture acting but has also proven, in several instances, as "Playing Dead" and "Between the Two of Them," that she is equally at home in dramatic subjects. Besides the two mentioned above, what she considers her best pictures include "The Hair of Her Head," "The Timid Mr. Tootles," "Boobley Baby," "The Story of the Glove," etc.

Mrs. Drew's principal stage experience was obtained during the run of "What the Moon Saw," playing opposite Mr. Drew, when this delightful domestic drama was presented at the Vitagraph Theater, New York City, for a run of four weeks.

"Peer Gynt" with Cyril Maude in Films.

AT THE Los Angeles studios of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, work on this concern's latest screen production, "Peer Gynt," with the well known actor-manager Cyril Maude, is rapidly progressing and it is readily expected that this release will present the largest subject yet put out by the Morosco film forces.

Oliver Morosco's Principal Film Players in "Peer Gynt" at Palm Springs, California.

In addition to the unusually large sets which are being prepared for the interior scenes of this play an exceptional cast of large proportion and including such able players as Herbert Standing., William Desmond, Myrtle Stedman, Charles Ruggles and many others, together with a most generous supply of extras, has been selected to support Mr. Maude. Inasmuch as the subject embraces the world wanderings of a poet-souled adventurer typical scenes of every clime and people will be presented. Already an ocean trip to Catalina Island, another to the desert in the Imperial Valley, costing $1,000 a day, and to many canyons in the Sierra Madres, as well as a journey to the San Bernardino Mountains, have been made by the principals and an army of others including supers, riders, stage and property men, camera-men, directors, etc., to say nothing of the rather unique collection of live-stock which will play an important part in the film. Other big trips are at present being arranged by the producers in order to get the desired atmosphere into the subject.

"Peer Gynt" is an adaptation from the famous dramatic poem by Henrik Ibsen, published in 1867. In February 1876 the first stage presentation of this subject was made with Edward Grieg's famous incidental music at the Christiania Theater, Christiania, Norway, where after having played thirty-seven times, it was burned out in a stage fire. The production was revived in the same theater in 1892 and met with big success, Bjorn Bjornson, the celebrated poet and dramatist, playing Peer. The play was first staged in English by Richard Mansfield in 1906 at Chicago, where its European success was duplicated. Its splendid screen qualities will readily assert themselves to its viewers and a big subject in quality as well as quantity is promised by the producers.

COAST TO COAST SHIFT FOR MANNY FELDSTEIN.

General Manager of the United Film Service Exchanges of Montreal and Toronto, Manny Feldstein, will enjoy the first vacation he has received in his many years of activity in motion picture affairs when he takes the trip from Montreal to California in the interests of his company next week. Although Manager Feldstein will be called upon to get back into the harness again as soon as he reaches the coast, he has arranged his trip in such a manner that he will have a couple of weeks of much needed rest before he takes up his new duties.

Screen Club to Give "Public Reel"

First Public Show of New York Screeners to Be Something New and Pleasing—Many of the Best Players in Country Belong to Club.

"PUBLIC REEL" is a thing that no one has yet seen; the Screen Club is now at work on the first of them and it promises to be a brilliant event that, followed by others in the coming years, will be a shining milestone in American theatrical history. It is not in any sense going to be a "Gambol" or a "Scamper" or a "Rehearsal," but a "Public Reel," something quite different and new.

Members of the Club have felt that something of the kind should be attempted and ever since the Club's beginning groups seated in the smoking room or about the dining-tables have discussed it. The need of putting a fresh punch into the club life set the idea germinating at a recent meeting of the Board of Governors and a general meeting was called to discuss the matter. This was held in the roof garden of the club house, Friday evening, June 25, and several schemes were outlined for an unique and distinctive show. Among these, one that seemed to win most favor, was a plan by William Quirk, of the Vitagraph Company. The final working out of the matter was left in the hands of a committee of the Club's members, who are directors.

A call for volunteers to serve the Club with such powers as each brother had from Heaven and with the things that each could do, brought a ready and enthusiastic response—many of the Club's most talented members declared they were willing to scrub, carry on a trunk, lift scenes, take tickets, or do anything at all that was required of them. It showed the spirit of true brotherhood. Among those present were:

King Baggot, Bill Bailey, Jack Noble, James Kirkwood, Bill Haddock, Paul Scardon, Frank Holland, Billy Quirk, R. M. Smallwood, Thurloe Burge, Peter Lang, Glen White, Maurice Costello, Tom Moore, Guy Coombs, Darwin Karr, Mitchell Lewis, John Harvey, Sam Spedon, Harry Spingler, Harry Morey, Arthur Housmann, Arthur Leslie, Jay Bee, Leo Singer, St. George Harden, "Wid" Gunning, Arthur Vaughn, Jud Langill, A. B. Travis, Sam Ryan, Hugh Hoffman, E. Mason Hopper, James W. Morrison, Edward Middleton, Fred Nicholls, Joe Gerard, Samuel Harrison, Charles W. Seay, George Lessey, Dave Wall, William Bechtel, Hurbert Prior, Albert Roccardi and others who did not take time to register.

Telegrams answering the solar plexus letter composed by Arthur Leslie came from absent members offering their help in the movement. Among these was one from Carl Laemmle and one from Adolf Zukor. Marshall Farnum sent word by Edgar Lewis that he, too, wanted to be of assistance in any way the Club could use him.

Metro Will Fly Flag

Will Swing Huge Banner Across 42d Street July 4.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation on July 4th will unfurl in Times Square the largest national flag in the world. On a steel cable, strung between the eighteenth floor of the Heidelberg Tower, in which building the Metro offices are located, and the nineteenth floor of the Times Building, an American flag, measuring one hundred and seventy-five feet in length and ninety feet in width, will be unfurled after a dedicatory speech, either by Mayor Mitchel or Borough President McAneny, promptly at two o'clock on Independence Day, and all because President Richard A. Rowland of the Metro Pictures Corporation believes July 4th to be his lucky day.

This huge flag, undoubtedly the biggest in the world, was made by a New England cotton mill and measures one hundred and seventy-five by ninety feet. The total weight of this flag is twenty-six hundred pounds and in order to safely sustain it, two steel cables, each one inch in circumference, are required. The cables will stretch across Broadway and 42nd street and will be anchored on reinforced "dead men" in the respective buildings.

The flag will remain hanging all day until Monday, and late Monday evening it will be packed and shipped to the Metro headquarters at San Francisco where, on July 15th, which is to be Metro day at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, Francis X. Bushman will unfurl the flag on the Exposition grounds. Special committees of various civic and patriotic organizations will atend the unfurling in Times Square.

WORLD FILM DECLARES DIVIDEND.

Screen Favorites on Spoons

National Stars Corporation is Distributing Handsome Souvenirs—Broad Advertising Campaign.

THE National Stars Corporation has launched a plan for the distribution of souvenir spoons bearing the likenesses of screen favorites, which should appeal strongly to exhibitors. It is inexpensive, simple in operation and certainly worth trying as a means of pleasing patrons.

The officers of the National Stars Corporation, C. F. Pritchard, vice president, and J. W. Young, general manager, have secured the exclusive rights to reproduce on spoons the photographs of the most prominent photoplay stars. Anita Stewart was the first and at intervals of about two weeks others will follow, the public being allowed the deciding voice in selecting the players to be included in the collection. Spoons bearing the image of Mary Pickford and a few other favorites, certain to be named in any voting contest, have been made already, but in subsequent selections, the National Stars' officers will be guided by the votes of motion picture patrons.

To reach enthusiasts throughout the country, advertisements are being run in the Photoplay Magazine and the Motion Picture Magazine, each containing a coupon requesting that the reader cut it out, designate his choice and mail it to the National Stars Corporation. This is but one feature of a publicity campaign which includes the trade papers and in time will be extended to the general magazines with the largest circulations, for the plans of Messrs. Pritchard and Young are national in their scope.

The spoons will be distributed solely through picture theaters by means of coupons. A representative of the corporation visits a house manager, supplies him with coupons and assists in arranging the details of the campaign, including a spread advertisement in the local paper, paid for by the National Stars concern. There is never any difficulty in finding a redemption station in some store near the theater, usually a drug store. Here the spoons are kept and one may be secured by any person presenting a coupon and fifteen cents, which is in reality a good deal of a bargain, for the souvenirs represent exceptionally fine workmanship.

They are made by the International Silver Company with a base of pure white metal heavily coated with silver. Each one bears the imprint of William Rogers and Son and is accompanied by a guarantee. The sculptured reproduction of the star is at the top of the handle and below it is the name, woven into an artistic design utilizing the flower of the month in which the player was born. The floral design is continued on the back of the handle, where the name of the month is given. Each issue of spoons will be unlike any of its predecessors.

To aid exhibitors in working up public interest in the souvenirs, the National Stars Corporation supplies a lobby display presenting a picture of the star whose spoons are in circulation at the time, all the needed information about the redemption of the coupons and two spoons in a case, that people may judge of their attractiveness by examining the designs on the handles, front and back. Of fine quality and expert workmanship a set of these spoons will be well worth having.

SELIG PLAYERS AT SAN DIEGO.

As a motion picture center, San Diego, California, daily becomes more popular and it is predicted that in a short time it will be as well known as a place for the production of pictures as any section of the country. Miss Bessie Eyton, one of the most popular screen favorites of the Selig Company, has visited San Diego with a company of players, and is engaged in the making of a three-reel Selig Diamond Special entitled "The Whisper." Other than Miss Eyton, considered the most athletic of motion picture actresses, the players visiting San Diego include Lloyd Carleton, director; Edwin Wallock, Alva Blake, Jane Keckley and Edward Lyttel.

UNIVERSITY PLAYS KLEINE PICTURES.

Brown Ayres, president of the University of Tennessee, last week closed a contract with the George Kleine Atlanta Office, whereby the university will show "Julius Caesar," "Quo Vadis?", "The Lion of Venice," "Antony and Cleopatra," "The Last Days of Pompeii," and other great Kleine features. The subjects will be exhibited during the month of July, when the program will be used in connection with the summer school for teachers held each year by the university.

Sir J. Forbes Robertson in Knickerbocker Production.

SIR J. FORBES ROBERTSON, the famous English Actor, who some years ago was knighted by the King of England, will soon appear on the regular program of the General Film Company in a magnificent three-reel production of "Hamlet, Prince of Denmark."

Forbes Robertson made his debut on the stage in 1874 as Chastelard in "Mary Stuart" played at the old "Princess's Theater" London. A man of splendid education and family he soon showed signs of wonderful possibilities, and with many years of rigid practice, became an actor of world wide renown in 1895. At this time he made his first tour of the United States with Mary Anderson as Pygmalion, Romeo, Orlando, Ingomar, Claude Melnotte, etc.

Sir J. Forbes Robertson.

In 1900 he married Gertrude Elliott, sister of Maxine Elliott, and with her has appeared in many plays both abroad and in this country. Perhaps the best known of these plays to the American theater goer are "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," "Mice and Men," "The Light that Failed," "Caesar and Cleopatra," "The Merchant of Venice," "Othello" and "Hamlet."

Mary Nash Signs With Knickerbocker

MARY NASH, the well known character actress of the legitimate stage, has just signed a contract with Knickerbocker Star Features to appear in a strong character part in their three-reel release of August 4th, on the regular program of the General Film Company.

Knickerbocker Star Features feel gratified in having secured the services of Miss Nash as she was hesitating between many offers. She finally decided that these features would offer her the best opportunity. The part in which she is to appear will depict the five ages of woman — ages of twenty, forty, fifty, sixty and eighty, and Miss Nash is known to be capable of successfully rendering this difficult role.

Mary Nash.

Miss Nash made her debut on the stage in 1909, appearing at the Criterion Theater with Ethel Barrymore in "Alice Sit by the Fire." Under this well known actress she received a thorough schooling. The following season she appeared with Miss Barrymore in repertoire in "Captain Jinks," "His Excellency the Governor," "Cousin Kate," and the "Silver Box." In 1911 she played the leading role in Clyde Fitche's "The City" at the Lyric Theater, for one year and went on tour with that production the following season.

Since that time she has been seen on Broadway in "The Woman" at the Republic Theater, "The Lure," at the Maxine Elliott Theater, and in numerous vaudeville sketches.

She is young, pretty and above all a wonderful actress. Her engagement with Knickerbocker Star Features will be looked forward to by many exhibitors.

National Engages Norma Talmadge.

Well Known Vitagraph Girl to Be Starred in Big Productions on the Coast.

BRUCE MITCHELL, managing director of the National Film Corporation of Los Angeles, registered at the Astor Hotel, New York City, announced a few days ago that the company with which he is identified had signed a contract with Miss Norma Talmadge, well known Vitagraph star, to appear exclusively in their productions for a term of years beginning soon after July 1, 1915. The contract with Miss Talmadge was closed soon after Mr. Mitchell and other members of his organization arrived in New York some days ago after having corresponded with Miss Talmadge for a number of weeks. It is claimed that the little Vitagraph girl, who is being billed as "The International Darling," will be paid one of the largest cash salaries which has ever been offered a photoplay star.

Norma Talmadge.

The National Film Corporation is a company which is backed by prominent business men in St. Louis, Mo., Los Angeles, Cal., and San Francisco, Cal. They have established modernly equipped studios in Los Angeles and have already made a number of pictures. Plans already formulated call for the making of at least one four or five-reel feature each month, and a number of one and two-reel subjects for distribution through one of the big releasing organizations. Mr. Mitchell will supervise the production of all of the pictures and will have associated with him a number of directors who are well known in the motion picture industry by reason of past performances.

The features in which Miss Talmadge will be starred will, for the most part, be adaptations from well known books and stories, the screen versions to be prepared by Anthony Coldewey. Mr. Coldewey is with Mr. Mitchell on the present trip to New York, and the pair have already secured options on some of the works of widely known authors who make their headquarters in the East.

Miss Norma Talmadge has been with the Vitagraph for the past five years and work which she has done for that well known company has endeared her to photoplay fans throughout the country to such an extent that the National people feel that the campaign which they intend to wage to establish her as one of the most prominent stars in the motion picture firmament cannot fail of success. The little Vitagraph girl is enthusiastic over her new connection and expresses the opinion that the really great work of her career remains to be done. Miss Talmadge, whose life has been insured for $100,000, will leave for the Coast immediately upon the completion of a big picture in which she is working at the Vitagraph studios in Flatbush, and work on her first feature under the National banner will be begun at once with the hope that the picture will be ready to release about August 1. Mr. Mitchell himself will direct every picture in which Miss Talmadge appears.

TOM MOORE LEAVES KALEM CO.

Tom Moore, for the past four years identified with the Kalem Co., leaves that concern this week. Mr. Moore, during his long engagement as leading man and director with the Kalem Co., has made an enviable record in both departments and while he has not announced any immediate plans for the future, will undoubtedly be heard from shortly regarding further activities in the realms of silent drama.

WILLIAMS LEAVES FOR TOUR OF WORLD.

J. D. Williams, general representative for Winik-Brock, Inc., which controls the world rights to the World Film releases, left New York June 28 for a trip around the world on behalf of his company. He will be accompanied to Australia by Harry Musgrove, who is one of the powers in Australasian film circles.

Power at Exposition.

Extensive Exhibit Will Be Made by Old Time Machine Maker at San Francisco.

THE connection of motion pictures with that largest and most impressive of World's Fairs, the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, is interesting to note. It would appear from the very numerous applications for space in the exposition for purposes of motion picture demonstration that a great majority of exhibitors had decided to use the most modern and up-to-date as well as educational methods of presenting before the visiting multitudes their product and their strides in advancement. The possibilities in this direction were limited, but still permitting the use of many theaters daily engaged in interesting those seeking information in particular lines. One can enter comparatvely few of the very beautiful buildings without finding the omnipresent motion picture screen with the machine busily grinding out what the exposition exhibitor most desires to present to the public.

As showing the diversified application of motion pictures in the demonstration of what is constantly occurring and most interesting to the public, may be mentioned a range from the operations in the conducting of a mine to the remarkable performances of an aeroplane in mid air—manufacturers showing the details in the preparation of their product—land development with all its accomplishments—conservations of our timber lands in the prevention of devastating fires as well as the development of new growth—action in the extraction of the earth's treasures, and the every day happenings in large cities.

Nicholas Power Exhibit at Exposition.

It would take many pages to mention the applications of motion pictures in detail, and the methods by which all this is accompished deserves the greatest consideration. There is shown in a very interesting exhibit the means by which animated photography is presented in its highest possible development, viz., the motion picture projecting machine at the Nicholas Power Company's exhibit. Appreciation of the many years of time, labor and exclusive attention to this branch of the motion picture industry is not shown by the general public until they become acquainted with the highly developed machine construction as is presented in Power's Cameragraph No. 6A, by the use of this machine in the various exhibits throughout the exhibition grounds, there being thirty-five machines of this manufacture.

The general public as well as exhibitors and others vitally interested is becoming acquainted, as shown by the never ending stream of visitors at this exhibit asking questions and examining views of the largest factory of its kind in the world, listening with rapt attention to the description of the enormous plant necessary and skilled work requisite to the construction of this highly developed and wonderfully successful motion picture projection machine. However, appreciation was fully and clearly shown by the Jury of Awards of an International character, which awarded the highest possible honor ever given to a motion picture projection machine at any World's Fair, the Grand Prize.

Awards have previously been given to the Nicholas Power Company for their product by juries of domestic character, but it is indeed a worthy appreciation of many years of untiring devotion to the development of the motion picture art, in granting this acknowledgment to the efforts of a pioneer. Showing their interest in the efforts of the "man behind the machine" a collaborative medal was also awarded to one of the many unheralded projection experts using a Power's Cameragraph No. 6A for the most perfect operation of a projecting machine.

The Longest Throw.

Distance from Lamp to Sheet at Madison Square Garden Longest in the World.

By Will C. Smith.

THE instances where the projection of a motion picture exceeds two hundred feet in this country can be counted on the fingers of the hand and so far as I have been able to ascertain there are only two theaters in Europe where this distance is exceeded. We have often seen the powerful rays of a searchlight penetrating the gloom for great distances and think it remarkable, but when you stop and think of a motion picture projecting machine, with an aperture of one-fiftieth the size of the aperture of the searchlight, throwing a solid ray of light a distance of over three hundred feet to a screen and having life-sized pictures appear thereon, it is truly remarkable and the credit which belongs to the inventor of the projecting machine accomplishing this wonderful feat should be freely given.

No. 1—Interior of Garden Looking Toward Screen.

As concrete evidence and what is known to be a world's record for long distance projection of motion pictures, I wish to cite the following:—About two months ago the management of the Madison Square Garden in New York City, known throughout the country as one of the largest amusement places in America, decided to convert this wonderful building into a motion picture show house, they were confronted with many difficult problems, chief of which was the projection of the pictures on account of the size of the building. You will get some idea of the enormous area of this building from picture No. 1.

Many suggestions were made as to the location of the booth for the projecting machines and the most practical appeared to be that of hanging the booth from the iron girders and placing the machines therein. About this time I was called into consultation by Mr. Presburg of the Madison Square Management and when I suggested placing the booth and machines at the end of the hall (a distance of one entire city block, or a trifle over three hundred feet), it afforded a great deal of amusement, as a throw of this length was considered impossible, especially with respect to maintaining a steady picture with the proper detail.

Both of these were accomplished in the highest degree, and proved the practicability of my suggestion, with the result that two Power's Cameragraph No. 6A projecting machines were installed. The screen used in this building is the largest ever erected, and is 34 feet wide by 26 feet high (see picture No. 4). In picture No. 3 you will note that the first row of seats is 88 feet from the screen.

When one stops and considers the fact of the enormous area of this building and that it covers an entire city block, that the screen used is the largest in the world, that each picture on the film is magnified over 169,000 times and that this is the world's record for long distance projection, you will agree with me that the development of the motion picture industry is truly remarkable and it really deserves a place as the eighth wonder of the world.

KANE TOURING THE WILD WEST.

Robert T. Kane, President of the Prohibition Film Corporation, who recently left New York on an extended tour of the "wild and woolly West" for the purpose of closing contracts for the sale of territorial rights on "Prohibition," the big anti-liquor photoplay feature, has penetrated as far as Portland, Ore. Mr. Kane will visit Seattle, Wash., and other important American cities before returning to his office in the Candler Bldg., New York, about three weeks hence.

At Leading Picture Theaters.

Programs for the Week at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater.

FRANK DANIELS, the comedian who has made thousands laugh during the days when he was the acknowledged king of the comic opera stage, will return to Broadway, this time in the silent drama, and will make his initial bow as a screen artist at the iVtagraph Theater in "Crooky," the picture heading the list of features for the week commencing Sunday, July 4th. "Crooky" is a five-part comedy, written especially for Mr. Daniels by Paul West, and produced by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of C. Jay Williams. In Mr. Daniels support will be found such well known Vitagraph comedians as Charles Eldridge, Harry Morey, Edwina Robbins, Anna Laughlin and Evart Overton. Chapter IX. of "The Goddess" is another feature, the two parts of which will be shown, beginning Sunday.

The Strand.

The Strand Theater will present a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated story, "The Right of Way," in which William Faversham, the distinguished dramatic star, will appear. The production of this play was made at Kinsbury, Canada, the exact locale of the story. John W. Noble, who staged the production, required ten weeks in which to complete the Canadian scenes alone. B. A. Rolfe, the producer of the play, has surrounded Mr. Faversham with an excellent cast including Jane Grey and other well known Broadway favorites. An entire village was erected by the Rolfe Company and later burned to the ground. The second installment of Ayleworth's Big Game Pictures will be shown. Scenic and educational studies, patriotic pictures, a new comedy and the Strand Topical Review, complete the screen attractions. An unusually attractive musical program will be rendered, chief of which is an "American Fantasie" by Victor Herbert, which will be played as an overture by the Strand Concert Orchestra under the direction of Carl Edouarde. The Misses Beverly and Galloway will sing the "Barcarolle" duet from Offenbach's "The Tales of Hoffman," and other musical numbers will be rendered by other vocal soloists who are newcomers to the Strand.

Mary Pickford at the Broadway.

"Little Pal," a Famous Players production, with Mary Pickford in the title role, is the leading number at the Broadway Theater. The scenes of the drama are laid in the Northwest, and the little star has a part that gives her a fine scope for the display of her unique abilities. One of the Bray "Col. Heeza Liar" cartoons, Broadway Animated News, Paramount South American Travel Pictures, and several of the latest comedies, complete the program.

The Central Film Company, Chicago.

Territorial Rights to the Chicago Tribune Animated Weekly with Old Doc Yak Now Being Offered to Feature Exchanges Throughout the Country.

THE Central Film Company, Chicago, announces that territorial rights on The Chicago Tribune Animated Weekly with Old Doc Yak in animated cartoons, are now being offered to feature exchanges throughout the country. The feature consists of a weekly release of 500 feet of current news pictures gathered by Chicago Tribune photographers in various parts of the world, and 500 feet showing the funny antics of Old Doc Yak, the cartoon character made famous by Sidney Smith, of the Chicago Tribune. It has made a big hit in the central west, where it has been appearing for several weeks.

Old Doc Yak is a national character. He appears each week in the Chicago Tribune and in other leading newspapers throughout the country. Nearly everybody knows Doc, and everybody who sees him laughs at his side-splitting adventures. Few comic supplement characters in the history of journalism have gained the popularity enjoyed by "Sid" Smith's Doc Yak, who appeals to children and to grown-ups alike.

Each week a prize of $50 is offered for an idea acceptable for an Old Doc Yak animated cartoon. This is open to everybody. The fame of the Chicago Tribune—The World's Greatest Newspaper—is international. The facilities of that stupendous organization, which covers every nook and corner of the globe, are exceptional when it comes to assembling motion photographs of international events of interest.

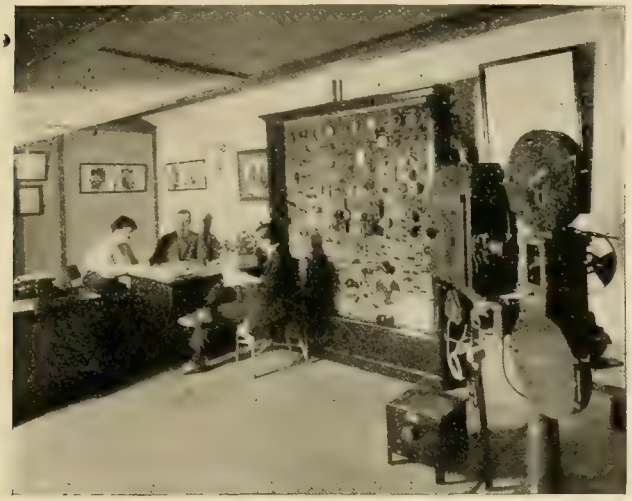
Spectacular incidents in the great world war, assaults of the Germans, counter attacks of the Allies, the great campaign in the Dardanelles, uprisings in India, riots in Singapore, sensational scenes from South Africa, and important happenings in the United States, are some of the assignments of Tribune camera men.

The Central Film Company, 110 South State street, Chicago, has made every preparation to meet the demands of the feature exchanges and of individuals who may desire territorial rights to this fine new feature.

Simplex at the Exposition

Has Comprehensive Exhibit in Departmental Theater No. 2, Equipped With All Latest Appliances for Projection.

THE Panama-Pacific Exposition is unique and different from any other of the large Expositions that have ever been held here or abroad, because of the use of motion pictures. Their use stands out so prominently that even a casual observer cannot help but notice that they are everywhere, no matter which way you turn. You cannot go into a building without seeing them.



Office of Simplex Exhibit.

The magnitude and importance of this change is not appreciated until one stops to realize that the projection machine and the motion picture is almost universally used at the Exposition, not only by Government Exhibits, foreign and domestic, but also because of the fact that the larger industrial corporations have introduced them into their daily routine and have brought them to the Expostion as part of their regular equipment and to illustrate their methods.

These industrial corporations, bear in mind, use the motion picture in a hundred different ways, to instruct their men in the operations they are to perform in manufacture and illustrate to and convince the public of the advantages and purity of their product by showing the operation o fthe entire plant and the scientific methods used.

Probably the most significant fact of the use of motion picture at the Fair is that it was brought about regardless of the action in this direction on the part of the Directors of the Fair, as the preceding statement indicates. This emphasizes more forceably the fact that the projection of motion pictures is not a thing of the past, or a temporary thing, but a progressive growing industry, which is bound to increase and will eventually influence and become a part of every activity whether industrial, or educational, to mention nothing of the large field of influence from an amusement standpoint.

This statement is further emphasized by listing a few of the Exhibits using Simplex machines: U. S. Government, U. S. Steel Corporation, Yelolwstone National Park, Board of Education, Vidaculture Exhibit, United Shoe Machinery Co., New Zealand Building, Palace of Education, Departmental Theaters Nos. 1 and 2, California Building and many others.

Kalem's "Maxim Girl" Button

That exhibitors realize the advertising value of the business booster which Kalem is issuing in the form of the "Maxim Girl" button, is demonstrated by the fact that over a million of these buttons have already been sold. A New Jersey exhibitor's order received by Kalem last Saturday boosted the quantity sold past the million mark.

The exact size of the "Maxim Girl" button is seven-eighths of an inch and it is being sold for $4.50 per thousand, f. o. b., New York. There is no denying the attractiveness of this business booster and it should prove invaluable as a form of advertising prior to the exhibition of "Midnight at Maxim's," or as a souvenir when this four-act feature is shown.

PATHE TO FILM "SIMON THE JESTER."

Pathe has acquired the picture rights to another William J. Locke novel, "Simon the Jester," which will be produced by Edward Jose and feature Edwin Arden. "Simon the Jester" is written in Mr. Locke's best vein and proved to be one of the biggest sellers of its publication year. Judging from Mr. Arden's interpretation of "Paragot" in "The Beloved Vagabond," he is well cast for the title role.

RAY LINCOLN WITH HORSLEY.

MinA Films announces the addition to their producing force in Los Angeles of Ray Lincoln, who has appeared in many motion picture productions. His first apearance with MinA Films is in "The Fighting Kid," a comedy in one reel, to be released through the licensed exchanges on July 15.

N. Y. M. P. and Keystone Stars.

Kessel and Baumann Sign Many Prominent Players to Appear in Feature Productions.

IF BIG names and reputations for past achievements mean anything, the New York Motion Picture Company and the Keystone Company are now in a position to better even their own enviable record for successful productions and turn out an all-star program week after week. As announced in the Moving Picture World of July 3, the present plans of Ad Kessel, Charles Kessel and C. O. Baumann call for two five-reel pictures and a like number of two-reel pictures each week, and in each cast there will be a star of country-wide reputation. Every day brings the addition of a new name to the roster of New York Motion Picture and Keystone players, making it impossible to publish a complete list, but the following will give a fair idea of the quality of the artists being engaged.

Charles Kessel.

Up to June 30th these prominent players had signed contracts to appear in New York Motion Picture productions: Willard Mack, Orrin Johnson, William S. Hart, Dustin Farnum, H. B. Warner, Henry Woodruff, George Beban, Forrest Winant, Helen Ware, Louise Dresser, Julia Dean, Bessie Barriscale, Jane Grey and Mary Boland. Signed for the Keystone Company are Weber and Fields, Eddie Foy, Raymond Hitchcock, Bert Clark, Hale Hamilton and Fred Mace, who has returned to the fold and, according to all reports, is glad to get back. In the court proceedings with the World Film Corporation over the allegiance of Eddie Foy, the claim of Messrs Kessel and Baumann was sustained so that his appearance in Keystone pictures is assured.

Mr. Kessel said a few days ago that the studio at Fort Lee, N. J., would be opened in about a month and at present the enlarged studios on the coast are being utilized to their fullest capacity. Under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince the production of four multiple reel features was begun last week. They are "The Conqueror," starring Willard Mack; "Matrimony," starring Julia Dean; "The Last Act," starring Bessie Barriscale and "Redeemed from Bondage," starring Forrest Winant.

Raymond Hitchcock.

In connection with his return to the Keystone Company, Fred Mace has issued the following unique statement:

"When I first started acting up before the camera I realized that in place of dialogue and effects, worked by the drummer in the orchestra, which I had been used to on the speaking stage, I had to depend on comedy situation and facial expressions. To the uninitiated let me say it is the hardest thing in the world to make a camera laugh and you always have a studio audience standing about with an expression on their faces which seems to say, "I wonder if he thinks that's funny; can't make me laugh, etc." Believe me, Charlie Chaplin and others who succeed in making the audiences laugh earn every cent they can command.

"When I started directing my troubles began; perhaps it was because I had succeeded so well and was in demand that my head began to expand so that a seven and one-eighth no longer sat comfortably on my head. I required a seven and a quarter and even that, at times, pinched a little. I also thought I could write, produce and star in my comedies. Well, I did, but the result showed that the only one I was kidding was Fred Mace. D. W. Griffith told me when I started that I was attempting an impossibility, but the 'seven and a quarter' asserted itself and my ears were locked with success—alas had I listened to the superior advice I would have been far better off to-day.

Fred Mace.

"At that time, nearly three years ago, I was at the top, from a comedy standpoint. The three talked-of comedians were the late John Bunny, Max Linder and myself. With my 'One Round O'Brien' and the two Sherlock Holmes comedies which Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett and myself did, we were just about two years ahead of the times. My mistake, however, was leaving the screen to direct, which I have come to realize fully, so when Mack Sennett made me an offer to rejoin Keystone I accepted and, believe me, I am glad to get back "home," for it sure feels like home to be back with Mabel and Mack, we three who all started with the Biograph. I am certainly going to try and retrieve the ground I have lost and I hope and trust the public will be pleased with my efforts."

Another valuable addition to the forces of the New York Motion Picture Company is Alan Dwan, who, through years of experience as a director for a number of companies, among them the American, Universal and Famous Players, has shown himself able to get the best results out of a wide variety of photoplay subjects.

Metro Pictures at Strand

"The Right of Way" First to Be Shown on Foremost Screen, July 5.

FOR THE first time in the history of the Strand Theater, since the fourth week after it opened, a picture other than that of the only program then in existence, will be the offering during the week beginning Sunday, July 4th. Metro, the newer and ambitious concern, whose remarkable progress and growth during the ten weeks of its existence, is to be honored. A Metro picture opens at the Strand on the above date and the picture, according to all reports is one of the really big feature productions of the day. "The Right of Way" has the honor of inaugurating the Metro service at the Strand and the favored star is William Faversham, who plays the leading role.

There is no gainsaying the fact that Metro is the miracle working institution of the industry. With the exception of the Broadway Theater at 41st street, Metro pictures will now be seen at every photoplay theater on Broadway charging ten cents admission or more. General Manager Rowland of the Metro concern, when asked if he was elated at the thought of Metro pictures being accorded the signal honor of opening a new era at the Strand, said: "No, Metro will not assume the honor. It is entirely due our determined producing allies and, while we are elated that Metro pictures are to be featured at the Strand, we will not be content until the one other house on Broadway, at present not playing our pictures, contracts for them."

"The Right of Way" is a Metro de luxe production, from the city studios of the Metro concern and was directed by John Noble. William Faversham, the noted dramatic star, played the leading role in the production and was supported by a select cast, including Jane Grey.

Reviews of Current Productions

Two Biograph Features.

"Reapers of the Whirlwind" and "A Daughter of Earth" Are Dramatic Subjects of Considerable Strength.

Earth" the last three players named appear in company with Edward Cecil and Alan Hale.

Mr. Ruben, who in "Reapers of the Whirlwind" makes his debut as a Biograph actor, is a recruit from the legitimate stage, certain to attract attention in this and coming productions. His personality qualifies him for juvenile roles and in combination with a youthful appearance is the sure art of a thoroughly seasoned actor trained under the best auspices. His acting is so sincere and filled with emotional feeling that one naturally hopes to see him featured more prominently than is possible in these two photoplays, although even here his characters are by no means negligible.

"Reapers of the Whirlwind" is a relentlessly dramatic story of marital infidelity in which a husband becomes infatuated with a beautiful actress, deserts his wife and son and is killed in a duel with the actress's manager. A few years later the son falls a victim to the woman's wiles, not knowing, of course, that she figured in the earlier affair with his father. The inevitable climax, strongly presented, shows how the horror of the situation is brought home to the youth and how the actress reaps the whirlwind of a trouble-making life. Miss Hartman presents a woman of sensuous appeal in complete contrast to the country girl she portrays in "A Daughter of Earth."

Here we have an expert handling of one of the favorite elementary plots, in which a farmer's daughter is spoiled for the simplicity of life in the country and the love of a village doctor by the flattery of a wealthy man, who insists that her voice is worth a fortune. She runs away to the city and makes out surprisingly well at concerts, receptions and gay supper parties given in her honor; but when the backer of her career becomes ardently personal in his attitude, she is glad enough to return to the quiet of the little village and the genuineness of the doctor's love.

There are many sympathetic touches in the presentation of this simple story. Mr. Cecil as the father of the singer and Mr. Ruben as the brother, are effective in their semblance of grief over the disruption of the family, and throughout the acting carries a tone of sincerity.

Hamlet, With Forbes Robertson.

The Knickerbocker Film Company Offers in Three Reels a Great Play With a Great Star and a Great Cast Supporting Him.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IF ever a great play with a well known star had advertising possibilities, Forbes Robertson in "Hamlet" should draw from the start. The picture of the powerful player over the name "Hamlet" should and probably will draw many passers to enter and see the picture. It is only three reels long and is to be offered, not as a feature, but on the regular Knickerbocker program. It illustrates Robertson's acting very well and is surely a valuable contribution to stage history. The person wh cares nothing for Shakespeare, or Forbes Robertson, or for good acting, will be entertained not by a powerfully moving story clearly told, but solely by the inherent grace of the illustrations such as an artist might place in a book. "Hamlet" is a play that should never be put into pictures for the gallery, but there is justification enough in Robertson's acting of Hamlet, in Gertrude Elliott's playing of Ophelia, and in the support that the Drury Lane players give to these two stars.

There is no actor to-day whose playing of this character reaches so noble a height as Forbes Robertson. The things that he brought out of the spoken stage play absolutely astounded this reviewer when he first saw him in the part and the play is so tremendous that, see it as often as you please, there is always something new in it to be discovered, because the mind is not able to grasp it all at once. The depth, of course, is not in the story, but in the poetry and in the humanity, which in this play reveal themselves first in the rhythmic lines themselves, then in the interpretation and finally in the stage sets and background illustration. The picture gives the backgrounds as no stage could; it also gives that part of the acting which is not dependent on the words of the poet, but solely on the actor's knowledge of their meaning. This is only a part of the whole.

There are scenes in the picture of special excellence and two that are particularly beautiful and effective. The first of these, in which there is undeniable poetry, is the mad scene where Ophelia distributes flowers. In this scene, set in a church yard, the center that catches and holds the eye is the face of the actress, Gertrude Eliott, full of meaning and subtlety, pathetic in all its changes, showing both the lovely garden of the soul that was and the ruin that is; as true to madness as sweet chords intermixed with discords. The last group of scenes, beginning with the duel of Hamlet with Laertes and closing with the coming of Fortinbras, is impressive and dramatic though silent. The acting of Robertson rises to its height and the Queen, the King, Horatio and Laertes all are human and convincing. It seems to be an exact replica of the stage business and is thoroughly worthy. It is an offering especially made for lovers of the stage and admirers of Robertson, of whom there are many.

"All for a Girl."

A Pleasing Story Is Given Fine Production by Mirograph Corporation—Released in Five Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN ONE respect, at least, "All For a Girl" is not open to improvement. Flawless photography, for which George Condert is responsible, makes every scene a delight to the eye, and this, in a picture introducing so many pretty country locations, is no mean asset. Audiences will like Rupert Hughes's wholesome story built around the ever popular theme of a wealthy American girl, whose fortune is a bait for titled foreigners. Tiring of attentions having a mercenary inspiration, she slips off to a New England village and there assumes the character of a simple girl, who must be loved for her own good qualities or not at all. Her loneliness is soon relieved by an upright young American, willing to marry her only on condition that they live on his salary of twenty-five dollars a week until his plans for a big railroad deal materialize, as, of course, they do in the final scenes of the picture.

Renee Kelly.

Renee Kelly is the very fresh and engaging star of H. J. Streyckman's production. She appears equally to advantage as the center of attraction at elaborate social functions, or in the simple garb of a rural maid. There is a charm and a spontaniety about the playing of Miss Kelly that is of particular value in a role of this type. One comedy passage deserving of mention because of its oddity is introduced in the duel between the noblemen, rival suitors for the hand of the heiress. It happens that the affair of honor is arranged by Americans and instead of rapiers or pistols the duelists are presented with boxing gloves, which they do not know at all how to use. After a really ludicrous sparring match, in which the combatants instinctively adhere to the technique of fencing, they call it quits and henceforth have little connection with the story.

Scene from "All for A Girl" (Mirograph).

Another well arranged scene is that showing the narrow escape of the heroine when the horse she is driving runs away and leaves her stranded on the railroad tracks in front of an approaching express train. Here is the psychological moment for the appearance of the poor, but honest and well bred young American destined to rescue and then marry her. The cast in this acceptable offering numbers Roy Applegate, Frank Vernon, Sue Balfour, E. T. Roseman, Robert Lawrence, Georgia Harvey and others who meet the not very severe dramatic requirements. Mr. Applegate was the dramatic director of the picture.

"Secretary of Frivolous Affairs."

A Four-Reel Mutual Master Picture by the American Adapted from the Book by May Futrelle.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IN THE "Secretary of Frivolous Affairs" I saw for the first time the special feature company of the American Film Manufacturing Company at work. I was soon impressed very favorably both by the ability and fine appearance of the members of that company, and compliment Samuel S. Hutchinson on their happy selection.

Scene from "The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs" (American).

The book by May Futrele is hard to adapt to photodramatic use and necessarily requires many introductions before the thread of the story is taken up in a way that commands hearty interest, and so it is not until the second reel is being screened that one becomes thoroughly engrossed in the story. The interest steadily increases after this and the strong climax at the close shows fine construction of plot.

Director Ricketts merits unstinted praise for the staging of the scenes. Many of the interiors are elaborate in structure and appointments and we are treated to several beautiful exteriors, all in perfect harmony with the requirements of the story. In conjunction with fine photography these scenes are very pleasing.

May Allison and Harold Lockwood, in the leading roles of Lulie and Hap Hazard, claim chief attention throughout. Miss Allison is a beautiful girl and a talented actress, and Mr. Lockwood is a fine-looking young man and an impressive actor. There is good promise of many fine efforts from them in future pictures.

Laura Hazard, Hap's sister, is well impersonated by Carol Holloway, another attractive young lady, and Mrs. Hazzard, the mother of Hap and Laura, is given strong characterization by Lillian Gonzales. The Natalie of Josephine Ditt and the Josephine of Blanch Light merit commendation. Carl Von Schiller plays the part of Duc de Trouville, the villain of the story, with strong effect. In the life-and-death struggle in the library with the footman (Wallace MacDonald), Mr. Von Schiller fights with fiendish determination, and Mr. MacDonald is a worthy opponent. Crowninshield, a lawyer, and Winthrop, an aspiring author, are well impersonated by Hal Clements and William Ehfe. The release date is July 8.

"Always in the Way."

A Six-Reel Screen Version of Charles K. Harris' Famous Song—On the Metro Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Dyreda Art Film Corporation's production of this six-reel screen version of "Always in the Way" has but one serious fault—it is one reel too long. The first part of the story is devoted to the history of the motherless little child of the song, Ethermary Oakland taking the character during this period of the play. At the time Mary Miles Minter appears as Dorothy North, the girl is about fifteen years of age and has been taken to Africa by a missionary and his wife. The scenes in this part of the world are novel, dramatic and intensely interesting. In the latter part of the drama, Dorothy returns to New York, and it is here that the action could be condensed to the play's advantage. The final scene, where she is restored to her father, is too full of stage tricks and lacks the sincerity of most of the other incidents.

On the credit side of the play's ledger, the list is a long and honorable one. To begin with, the character drawing has been truthfully done, and the elements which make for popularity include deep heart interest, sound moral feeling, and, in the main, consistent and sensible actions on the part of the persons involved. J. Searl Dawley, the producer, has lent his best efforts to the filming of the drama, in itself a sufficient guarantee that the work has been done in a thoroughly artistic manner.

Mary Miles Minter's portrayal of the heroine has the charm of youth, beauty, and intellect. Her acting is refreshingly unforced, but always equal to the occasion, and she embodies the character with a winsome grace and depth of feeling that are sterling adjuncts to her histrionic acquirements. Well executed conceptions are given by Lowell Sherman, Edna M. Holland, Hal Clarendon, James Riley, Harry Blackmore, and Franklin B. Coates.

"THE LORELEI MADONNA" may be recommended without reservation as one of the very best of the dramatic pictures produced by the Vitagraph Company in recent months. L. Case Russell wrote the scenario and Rollin S.

Scene from "The Lorelei Madonna" (Vitagraph).

Sturgeon produced it in three reels, which seems to be the natural length of the story. There is no padding to fill out the required footage, neither is there any undue condensation.

The picture is a consecutive work of art, admirably constructed and presented in perfect settings. This is not extravagant praise for the cloister and the mission gardens in which the earlier scenes are laid, no more is it fulsome when applied to the environment created for the incidents in the South Sea islands—the street scenes in Tahiti, the dwellings occupied by the visiting Americans and the dive in which Malcolm meets his Lorelei Madonna. One wonders where Director Sturgeon found so much atmosphere of just the right kind.

Mrs. Russell's plot is not extraordinary, but it becomes the foundation of a superior picture because it has been worked into something very live and human. The story grips; it excites an active interest in the characters and offers a really effective dramatic contrast in the shift from the spiritual quietude of the monastary to the tropical exuberance of Tahiti. We see Malcolm as a boy left in care of the priests, then as an unworldly youth—an artist painting a Madonna for the wall of the mission chapel—and know all along that the passion in his nature has yet to be aroused.

On a trip through the South Sea islands with his uncle, he meets the Lorelei, a half-breed French dancer, under the oddest of circumstances; for, just to surprise the frequenters of the dive, she appears in sanctimonious imitation of the Madonna. Knowing nothing of her reputation, Malcolm takes the spiritual quality of her face to be genuine, falls in love, and under the inspiration completes his painting. The Lorelei dies, protecting from the wrath of her discarded lover the first man who ever treated her with respect. Alma Reuben puts much intensity into her playing of the half-breed dancer, and other excellent performances are given by Juan de le Cruz, George Kunkel, Marcia Moore, George Stanley and Edgar Martin Teller.

Three-Reel Picture Well Directed by Robert Vignola—The Heroine Marries Twice; She Chooses Ill at First but Her Evil Husband Is Killed Over Stolen Money.

tion and human, natural conduct of the players all along keep it interesting; and the last half of the story, up to within a few feet of the end, is gripping.

The author of the script is C. Doty Hobart and it was directed by Robert Vignola, with Alice Hollister in the leading woman's role and Harry Millard and Arthur Alberton as the villain and hero respectively. Helen Lindroth has a good role as the mother of the hero. Henry Hallam plays well the small part of the villain's father. John E. Mackin makes a good president of a bank as does James B. Ross, a convincing crook. The action begins when the two young men are still in high school and are rivals for a girl. She is lead to choose the one that we feel she did not want, just because she didn't know her own mind soon enough. We are not able to speak with absolute assurance about the ins and outs of this courting—the director shows us a good deal and leaves a good deal to us to imagine. He manages to satisfy us that it is human.

The boys both get jobs in the same bank (they have done it pretty often in pictures). The one keeps on stealing and one works hard. It is not said that the bad one is promoted over the other; yet he has married the girl and has a pretty home. The other still helps his widowed mother in their respectable poverty. The good youth takes the other youth home in a drunken condition one night and from that point a growing jealousy makes the bad husband a real villain. It ends with his getting his friend accused of thefts so that he has to serve his two years. From this point on the tale leaves the beaten track and becomes not only fresh but exciting. The growing hatefulness of the husband is pictured and also how the wife, in the goodness of her heart, helps the widowed mother of her old friend now in prison. The husband follows her one night and it happens that the innocent prisoner has been released. He finds her in the house and the other man thanking her for the kindness to his mother. He shoots, and wounds not his adversary, but his wife.

A good deal of how the wife looks upon these things is pictured and we are kept feeling that some denouement is drawing nigh. It comes unexpectedly and is dramatic.

results from fine home training, whereas the city chap is pictured as an accomplished villain of hardened sensibilities, a serpent ever on the lookout for such fluttering little doves of feeble innocence. Such is "On Dangerous Paths." The country boy—it used to be the "Westerner" as opposed to the "Easterner"—is supposed to represent all that is good and noble as distinguished from the utterly vicious man in the city. Facts show that the real peril is for the impoverished girl of the city, who knows what it means to be an outcast, yet is overpowered by force of circumstances when unfortified by fine home training. The clean-minded, wholesome girl of good country family is far from being the wobbly weakling she is pictured—she is nowhere so misrepresented as in pictured stories—she deserves that the truth be told about her.

That a country girl such as is described in "On Dangerous Paths," one of noble father and mother, of refined home associations, one having influential friends and a splendid sister in the city, should renounce all the good character that has been built up in her during eighteen or twenty years and be on the point of yielding to the first temptation that comes her way does not argue strongly for good home training, though it is possible that such inferior characters exist. They are not of the kind that make fine wives and worthy mothers. They are as undesirable in real life as they are in reel life, not of the stuff our mothers were made of, not to be exploited as heroines of the screen.

Staats Zeitung War Pictures

Leading German Newspaper of New York Has Received Twenty Reels of Official Moving Pictures of the War—Same as German People Are Seeing.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THREE reels, taken at random, from twenty just received by the Staats-Zeitung of New York from Germany were shown to a reviewer of the World as samples. These pictures are the self-same that the German people are seeing; they are official, and while full of interest and information, many of them wonderfully so, do not teach much history. But it is a marvelous thing to be permitted to see these German, Austrian, Turkish regiments on the march in the very lands where they are battling.

As the films slide before one's sight, glimpses come of the dreary planes of Galicia, of the shell smashed wind mills of Belgium, of the great guns in action, etc. Trench fighting is also liberally shown and there is one scene in Galicia of a superior officer visiting the outposts that might pass as a very realistic dream of Dante's Inferno. He passes over a bleak and lonely plane with reaches of barren mud, few trees and those broken and dead. Now and again as he passes, a spiked helmet rises up seemingly out of the ground and the outpost sentry reports as from his tomb, where he has buried himself to escape burial. Not one whit less like the Inferno is a picture of a French forest in which a regiment had been hidden and had been shelled out. One would think no hurricane could work that peculiar, shattering kind of destruction.

The films are not lacking in the human side of the war. We see many soldier faces often laughing and joking, fine brave fellows, boys and men. The "goulash gun" is shown shooting beef stew for dinner. French prisoners pass through one picture as guarded by their captors they come from the battlefield. There is a good likeness of General von Hindenberg and his staff. Many of the pictures are town scenes and show, for the most part, the regiments departing for the front.

The reviewer saw these pictures with the German subtitles, which he was seldom able to make out; but they will be translated, it is said, into neutral explanation of the scenes. The New York Staats-Zeitung, of 182 William street, New York City, is receiving new consignments of fresh films from time to time and purposes to release them to regular exhibitors in the form of a weekly series of one or two reels. We may state finally that the photography is remarkably good; that we see no reason why the pictures should offend partisan sensibilities; that they give mere scraps that are informing and deeply interesting. We, ourselves, would feel amply repaid for a good admission price by these films.

"Colonel Carter of Cartersville"

Burr McIntosh Appears in Five-Part Production of Famous Story Released by World Film.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

F. HOPKINSON SMITH wrote nothing more certain to live in American literature than "Colonel Carter of Cartersville," which finds its way to the screen under the auspices of the Burr McIntosh Film Corporation, with McIntosh himself playing the role of the proud, blustering, but always likable Colonel Carter. In physical and temperamental characteristics he is just the actor to give life to the author's inimitable creation and the supporting company is an able one, with Richard Neil, Lily Cahill, Katherine LaSalle, Charles F. Emerson and Aaron Emerson in conspicuous parts.

The story, as worked out in pictures, is divided into three distinct periods, the first some years prior to the Civil War, when we are given a quite engaging depiction of the manners of Southern aristocrats; the second during the war, and the third after peace has been declared. In finding correct costumes and pretty locations for the opening chapter in the affairs of the Carters, the director was unfailingly successful, but the full value of some of the scenes was not realized on account of imperfect photography. The variation between clear film and that in which the people and figures were not sharply outlined, was also apparent in the battle scenes presented on a lavish scale. Possibly the defects are not in the negative and subsequent prints may present scenes all on a par with the best, which reveal careful studio work.

The secret marriage of Nancy Carter and Robert Gill, supplying the material for the first section of the picture, is a dramatic episode almost complete enough in itself to become a one-reel photoplay. It closes with a tragedy—the suicide of Robert because his wife will not continue to forgive his intemperance. After this there is an interval of some seventeen years and we are plunged into spectacular battles, which are handled with no little skill. The romance of Nancy Carter begins with the entrance of a victorious Union company, headed by Lieutenant Klutchem. They fall in love, she nurses him when he is wounded and in due time, after the end of the war, they are allowed to marry. Mr. McIntosh's best opportunities for character drawing come during his arguments with Klutchem, Sr., in the concluding reels. Miss LaSalle makes a sweet Laura and Miss Cahill is a suitable Aunt Nancy, save that she does not suggest the requisite age.

"Courthouse Crooks."

Two-Reel Keystone Farce on a Very Live Subject.

CHARACTERIZED by unusual ingenuity of plot, "Courthouse Crooks" has a still higher value in its farcial attack on that most farcial of all modern institutions, our judiciary. That the dignity of any form of public service should be set up as superior to the people paying for it is a form of delusion which has held over from times more primitive than these, when the majesty of the law was that of might rather than of right. The idea of autocratic authority still prevails in this branch of service, the last tawdry old remnant of despotism, and this assumption of superiority, implying the inferiority of people who sustain courts of law to adjust points in contest, offers a vast amount of opportunity for laughter and derision.

Beneath its purely farcial elements "Courthouse Crooks" has some earnestness of truth and bitter truth at that. While the ceremonies and solemnities of trials by courts of justice are only mildly amusing to those who contemplate the hollowness of the whole structure from afar, there is a vast amount of peril, at least of humiliation, for those who imagine that vindication of right is the aim and purpose of politicians when their careers of graft have landed them on the bench. Still, knowing as we do that the whole system is rotten with corruption, we have grown so accustomed to the old score that we tolerate rather than apply the cautery of heroic treatment. It is for comedy, even farce-comedy, to hold up all this vain pomposity of organized crooks to ridicule.

Keystone directors have a rich field to work in exposing the corruption and pretense of our judiciary, a work which will attract general sympathetic interest.

"Gambier's Advocate."

Hazel Dawn as Clarissa Is the Chief Attraction in This Famous Players Production.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

HAZEL DAWN deserves better material than that offered in Ronald MacDonald's story, produced by the Famous Players. As has been remarked before, Miss Dawn looks exceedingly beautiful on the screen and there is no fault at all to be found with her acting of Clarissa, but beyond the radiant fairness of the young star of musical comedy fame there is little in the picture to stir enthusiasm, unless it be the locations and the fine photography.

Probably the best incident in point of novelty and dramatic feeling is that in which Clarissa rushes to save her foolish young step-mother from the penalty of indiscretion. We are told that the woman is so emotionally thankful to the man who rescued her from drowning that she needs must stand in the moonlight with her arms around his neck. As seen from the windows of the house by Clarissa and her father, the attitude is unmistakably loverlike. So the girl, rather than have a family row, hurriedly warns her mother to disappear, and when the head of the household comes to investigate, he finds that his daughter, not his wife, is a partner to the embrace. Under the circumstances Clarissa and Gambier are virtually forced to play the game through by assuming the roles of lovers and announcing their engagement.

This part of the picture is plausible enough, much more so, in fact, than that concerning an insane man's quest of his ex-wife—the sub-titles always use "ex" instead of "former" in referring to the husband or wife—who had him confined in an insane asylum; his shooting of the ex-wife with a revolver given to her by Gambier and the arraignment of Gambier on the charge of murder. Clarissa, however, is fortunate enough to snatch a letter from the murderer which will clear her lover, and in case this should be insufficient, the ex-husband confesses before he dies of apoplexy. An audience that remains unmoved by the melodrama in "Gambier's Advocate" may be contented to enjoy the pleasing countenance of Miss Dawn, the finished acting of James Kirkwood and the choice bits of scenery. Fuller Mellish, Dorothy Bernard, Robert Broderick and Maude Odell should be mentioned for conscientious performances.

ever. He is stopped by the mysterious tiller of the soil and, during a lively rough-and-tumble fight, the farmer knocks the model into a shapeless mass with shots from his revolver. Del Mar and his accomplices next proceed to mine a bridge, and when Elaine and Jameson accidentally stumble upon the evidence of the foreign agent's activities, while out automobiling, that energetic individual promptly flashes a heliograph signal to his men to blow up a bridge Elaine and her companion are about to cross. The two escape death by a narrow margin as the structure is hurled high in the air, the friendly farmer managing to warn the occupants of the auto just in the nick of time.

From the above summary of the episode, it is easily understood that Elaine's sojourn in the country is not at all quiet and restful, but just the reverse. Events move with the high-speed clutch controlling the action. As usual, the photography and filming, under the direction of the Whartons, calls for unqualified commendation. Several of the exterior views are noteworthy for their romantic beauty. Pearl White, Lionel Barrymore, Creighton Hale and the Mysterious Mr. X are in evidence after a fashion that will greatly please their admirers.

you wish it, The Bowery. Townsend's reportorial experiences well qualified him to act as the recorder and describes of Chimmie and of the circles he moved in. There is the fine dramatic story and the contrast between The Bowery and Fifth Avenue. The human bond which connects these extremes of society is most carefully constructed and most artistically. There is that happy commingling of humor and pathos which never fails with an American audience.

The laughable incidents in Chimmie's sudden career of a butler are really precious. When as improvised doorman Chimmie literally obeys his instructions and refuses to admit a visitor to the Van Cortland mansion because he has no card the audience is tickled. When he throws the visitor out and justifies his action with saying "De guy had no ticket and I bounced him," the audience just roars. The play is full of touches like this. Rarely have I seen a better cast, I mean a cast more suitable for such a play. A word of special praise is due to Mrs. Lewis McCord. I have not seen a better Old Irish woman since the days of Annie Yeamans. Another clever impersonation was that of the French maid, Hortense, whom Chimmie fondly and admiringly referred to as the Duchess. It is due to the director to mention the fact that he caught all the happy spirit and all the descriptive power of the author. The atmosphere is splendid, both of the lower East Side with its struggling human bee hive and its picturesqueness, and of the Fifth Avenue section. The contrast is consequently all the more effective. Of the settings and the photography and the types I can say no more than that they are up to the best Lasky standard, which is indeed saying a good deal.

"Greater Love Hath No Man"

Popular Plays and Players Make Five-Part Adaptation of Frank L. Packard's Book for Metro Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE appeal of this five-part adaptation of Frank L. Packard's book is three-fold—in the story, in the genuine acting of Emmett Corrigan, as Varge, who voluntarily pays the penalty of a crime committed by another man, and in the exceedingly attractive production. Photographically the picture approaches perfection, and no subject of recent origin comes to mind in which a fire scene is presented with such a quantity of realistic detail. The spread of the flames through the rooms, the narrow escape of the young woman who is prostrated by smoke, Varge's heroism in braving the fire to carry her to safety, and the final destruction of the house—all this is shown in a most impressive fashion in the spectacular third reel of the picture.

And closely following these scenes of peril on land is a shipwreck, in which a sailing vessel is blown up, leaving two men to float about on a raft until they are rescued by a crew from a life saving station. Here again, the director attained satisfactory results under obvious difficulties.

Mr. Corrigan has a highly sympathetic role in the character of Varge, whose life illustrates the Biblical passage commencing, "Greater love hath no man." The picture opens with the murder of the man who took Varge from an orphan asylum and reared him as his son. Out of gratitude and a desire to lessen the suffering of the woman who had taken the place of a mother to him through his boyhood, the adopted son accepts responsibility for the crime committed by the good-for-nothing offspring of Varge's foster parents. Scenes in the penitentiary, to which he is sentenced, are accurately pictured and various incidents serve to reveal the manly qualities of the martyr, for, in effect, he is no less.

Slightly less convincing, but passable, granting that a picture must have a love interest, is Varge's affair with the warden's daughter and his escape from the penitentiary, because he thinks it unwise to remain near her. Ultimately, his innocence is established and the story closes with the customary embrace of united lovers. Appearing in support of Mr. Corrigan are Mary Martin, Thomas Curran, Mabel Wright, Crawford Kent, William Morse and Lawrence Grattan.

ation might improve the feature. The story deals with the mysteries of the Far East, and at times the atmosphere is truly Indian. There is a melodramatic flavor which no doubt will be appreciated by people who care for that sort of thing. Tigers and lions figure prominently in the play; the lions are in the cages of a collector of animals. This collector wants a supply of tigers to complete his collection and in this way he comes to engage an Italian nobleman, who sets forth for India, where he has been before, to hunt for tigers and to find adventures generally. The nobleman is poor and that is one of the reasons he takes the tiger-hunting job. The parts which show a tiger jumping upon a camel and digging his fangs into the back of the wretched animal and the other scene which shows one of the big cats seizing a kid have been reduced to a flash. It is well that this is so, because scenes of this character invariably offend the women and children.

The acting is fair and at times good. The settings leave nothing to be desired.

Cromelin Ends Successful Year

Twenty Cosmofotofilm Releases Have Been Well Received in America—Big Subjects for Coming Season.

IT IS approximately one year since Paul H. Cromelin organized the Cosmofotofilm Company for the marketing of European pictures in this country. War, or no war it has been such a successful year that Mr. Cromelin marked the first anniversary of his business by moving from the fifth floor of the World Tower building, West Fortieth street, New York, to the sixth floor, where he furnished larger offices.

For the purposes of an importer of pictures his new quarters are quite ideal, including as they do, a deep, well ventilated projection room equipped with two machines. Then, on the same floor, just a few steps from the Cosmofotofilm offices, is the World Tower annex, supplied with vaults for the storage of film belonging to tenants of the building; also rooms for cutting and assembling. The arrangement could scarcely have been bettered for the needs of Mr. Cromelin had he drawn the plans of the building himself.

Twenty features, starting with "The House of Temperley," produced by the London Film Company, as were most of the others, have been brought to America during the past year. Mr. Cromelin intends to let the dull summer months pass without venturing any big productions; but beginning in the autumn, he plans to release on an average of two subjects a month and among them will be some strikingly big pictures.

It is not unlikely that the coming season will be launched with a picturization of the famous old play, "Liberty Hall," and no less notable will be the production of "The Shulamite," also a profitable offering for September or October. Then there are several big plays hanging fire on account of copyright uncertainties, among them being "Trilby" with Sir Herbert Tree as Svengali. Mr. Cromelin declares that this is a wonderfully fine picture and he is confident that eventually it will be released in this country. An American production with Wilton Lackaye would afford an excellent opportunity for comparing the performances of the two great exponents of Svengali. Other important photoplays likely to come through the Cosmofotofilm office are Anthony Hope's "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Rupert of Hentzau."

Naturally, Mr. Cromelin is much interested in the progress being made by the London Film Company, which he considers without a rival among picture producers in England. He is ready to give due credit to the American directors, Harold Shaw and George L. Tucker, and to the head of the scenario department, Bannister Shaw Merwin, likewise a product of American methods. The policy of the company, consistently maintained, has been to employ only the best players and never to skimp on the cost of a negative. Actors and actresses, trained in studios on this side, have appeared frequently in London Film pictures; two favorites whose names immediately come to mind being Jane Gail and Edna Flugrath.

In speaking of the record of the year just closed, Mr. Cromelin expressed satisfaction at having sold pictures to two of the largest distributing organizations in the country, Paramount and Metro. "Brother Officers" and "The Middleman" went through these channels and were popular successes, as were W. W. Jacobs' comedies. "She Stoops to Conquer," "Called Back" and those admirable offerings for the Christmas season, "Two Columbines" and "A Christmas Carol" won a high place on the list of Cosmofotofilms.

Then it was Mr. Cromelin's good fortune to release "England's Menace" on the very day that the first of the European nations declared war. This picture was made three months prior to the outbreak of hostilities, but had it been prepared out of a full knowledge of coming events, it could not have reflected the subject more accurately. Even if the war continues for another year, Mr. Cromelin sees no reason for anticipating a shortage of good productions from England, for the London Film Company is steadily increasing the quality and quantity of its output.

Broken Ways

Henry Walthall and Blanche Sweet in a Superbly Acted One-Reel Biograph Re-Issue.

WITH subjects such as these being offered, it is not hard to explain why there is such a large demand for the Biograph re-issues. In "Broken Ways," the sixth of the series, we have a subject that is equal, if not better, than the previous releases. We have Henry Walthall and Blanche Sweet in the principal roles, under the direction of D. W. Griffith.

Scene from "Broken Ways" (Biograph).

That in itself is an assurance of a skillfully presented and exceptionally well acted production. Indeed, it would be impossible to find a trio that is more capable. Add to that the consistency of the Biograph photography and the unequaled facilities of the Biograph studios, and you have an unbeatable combination.

The story deals with a road agent, who, under false colors, wins the love of the young telegraph operator. She does not learn his true character until after their marriage, and decides to live her life apart. Going to another place she obtains a position at her former occupation and meets the local sheriff, who asks her to marry him. The husband, trying to escape the sheriff's posse, also crosses the divide, and, going to the railroad station meets his wife. He tells her of the pursuing posse and she hides him. Later, after the danger is passed, he asks her to go back with him and start life all over again. She turns him out and in a pistol fight with the sheriff that follows the road agent is killed. She is then free to marry the sheriff.

The well constructed situations of the story give Henry Walthall and Blanche Sweet an opportunity for their respective dramatic qualities, the closing scenes especially being very effective. Harry Carey and Robert Harron also have prominent parts and do some very good work.

India and the Far East when, on stopping off at Los Angeles she was finally persuaded to appear in a film play that would do justice to her wonderful art, incidentally acquiring for the screen world another prominent name of international import.

By presenting this star in an exquisite divertissement of dance and drama, Bosworth, Inc. has departed from the usual channels in motion pictures, and, penetrating into a hitherto forbidden realm of modern art, has borrowed one of its most distinguished figures. The wonderful ability of the artistic dancer is given wide opportunity to assert itself in this production and the various dances which she performs in the film will readily stamp her as one whose fame has not been misplaced. Her dramatic accomplishments are also shown to good advantage in this stirring love story.

Maud Allan's principal support is Forrest Stanley, one of the most popular leading men on the American stage and for several seasons the lead in Oliver Morosco's famous Burbank Theater stock company. The cast includes Howard Davies, long associated with Wilson Barrett in England and with the Lieblers; Herbert Standing the well known Bosworth player; Jane Darwell in one of her distinguished society women roles; pretty Mary Ruby and Laura Woods Cushing and young Harrington Gibbs. The release date is scheduled for July 5, when this production will open on the Paramount program.

"THE AMERICANO" NEARLY FINISHED.

Nearing completion at the Reliance-Majestic studios, is the two reel feature, "The Americano" in which Thomas Jefferson is featured. It is a story of turbulent Mexico in which Elaine, the daughter of an American, is carried off by bandits. She is ultimately rescued by Boyd Norton, an American, who fights with the constitutionalist forces in order to reach Elaine. Marguerite Loveridge, Lawrence Payton, Raymond Wells, Carl Formes, Jr., and Kate Toncray support Mr. Jefferson.

"The Little Dutch Girl," is the name of the next Vivian Martin play, which is now being made at the World Film Corporation studio, with Director Chautard in charge. Since Vivian Martin played in "Old Dutch," with Lew Fields, it has become customary for her to wear wooden shoes. Many of the scenes that are being taken for "The Little Dutch Girl," are being specially built at Watson's Pond, near Fort Lee, and when it is seen on the screen, one may be sure that there will be many questions asked regarding what part of Holland the play was made.

"FIFTY YEARS AFTER APPOMATTOX" (Thanhouser).

The woman who loved them both waits the summons to join them in that land where there is no strife, or sectional feeling, or hatred of any kind. That is the last thought that occurs to an audience as the final scene of "Fifty Years After Appomattox" fades into the Thanhouser trademark, leaving Lorraine Huling alone in the cemetery where she has just decorated the graves of her husband and brother who fought, respectively, on the Confederate and Union side. This poetical drama, so capably interpreted by Charles Emerson, Boyd Marshall and Miss Huling, begins with pictures showing the thinning ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic parading on Memorial Day. As she goes to the cemetery the old lady, who has been watching the parade, rehearses the past and recalls the part she took in the gigantic fratricidal struggle known as the Civil War.

When the brother enlisted on the Union side, she went through the lines as a spy and finally was caught with incriminating papers. A young Southern officer, touched by her appealing beauty, interceded and she was given her freedom. She becomes a nurse. Among the wounded brought to her care, is the Southern major who saved her life. She assists in his escape, but is detected by her brother who finally becomes a party to the deception when he learns what the Southerner once did for his sister. After the war's conclusion, the two young people meet amid peaceful scenes and their love comes to a happy conclusion.

"MOUNTAIN MARY" (American).

"Mountain Mary," a two reel Flying "A" drama to be released July 5 in the Mutual program, is the thrillingly enacted story of a feud among mountaineers. The children of combative parents become entangled in the softening net of love and romance and lend the story a more charming side, a side the beauty of which is heightened by the wonder of the settings in which these pictures were taken. Vivian Rich has the leading role, that of a joyous, care-free daughter of the mountains.

Scene from "Mountain Mary" (American).

Joseph Galbraith plays opposite her in the part of Ivan Doone, the artist who plots her ruin, but falls in love with her instead. Jack Richardson and Louise Lester are also in the cast.

Because her father and his have long been at bitter odds, Ivan plots the ruin of Mary. His mother suggests the plot in a spirit of vengeance because her husband, Ivan's father, has been wounded in an encounter with Giles Turrell, Mary's father. Before they finally find happiness, however, many exciting adventures and misunderstandings threaten them. In the end, in a unique way, Mary brings the two grizzled feudists, their parents, together.

"THE PURSUING SHADOW" (Picture Playhouse).

The Picture Playhouse Film Company state that they are nearly ready to release "The Pursuing Shadow," the first of their features starring Tom Terriss. This play had remarkable success on the legitimate stage, when William Terriss and Edwin Booth appeared in it, both in the United States and in England. Now, Tom Terriss, the son of William Terriss, rivals on the screen his father's brilliant success before the footlights.

An unusual feature is that Tom Terriss takes a double part, playing not only the character of Earl Dexter, the polished young diplomat, but also that of Tony Oscaros, a disreputable character and a thief.

Owing to the activities of Craig Dare, a gentleman burglar acting in league with Tony Oscaros, a valuable pearl necklace is stolen and suspicion is cast on the young diplomat. Even Dexter's father believes him guilty and there is a stirring and wonderfully staged court scene. He is set free when the real criminal is captured after a thrilling pursuit.

Anna Luther, who has played a leading part with Lubin and Selig, takes the part of the charming wife of Dexter, while Alfred Hemming, who has played with Henry Irving and in many plays of Dickens takes the part of Dexter's father. R. De Cordova takes the part of Craig Dare, the gentleman thief, while Lionel Pape, who has appeared before the public in this country in "Fanny's First Play" and in "Milestones," makes his debut in filmdom playing the part of Viscount Acheson.

ALICE BRADY WITH WORLD FILM.

William A. Brady's charming and accomplished daughter, the youthful star, Alice Brady, has signed a long contract to appear in pictures released exclusively through the World Film Corporation. Miss Brady in December, 1914, made her screen debut in the photoplay version of the famous Brady-Snyder drama "As Ye Sow." She repeated her success in "The Boss," with Holbrook Blinn, released by World Film only a few weeks ago. The names of the new Alice Brady pictures will be published shortly.

V-L-S-E. LAYS CORNER STONE.

The ceremony attending the laying of the cornerstone for a building to be occupied by the Seattle branch of the V-L-S-E that took place on Saturday, June 19th, proved to be a gala affair, and was staged with all the pomp and dignity at the command of the Seattle city administration. All of the Seattle newspapers devoted front page space to the story on the event.

Mayor Gill of Seattle played the star role, in what the newspaper called the V-L-S-E release, "Laying the Cornerstone," and the ceremony was attended by the Chamber of Commerce and all of the leading business men in the northwestern metropolis, all of whom, owing to the fact that the occasion was recorded by the Hearst-Selig Weekly, became for the time being moving picture performers.

KRAUS WILL HAVE TWO EXHIBITS.

At the forthcoming exhibitors' convention in San Francisco the Kraus Manufacturing Company have leased a space which they have taken in conjunction with their San Francisco representative, George Breck, who will show all visiting exhibitors a replica of what is now being displayed by this concern in the building of Fine Arts.

At the exposition proper, there is a more complete line of their goods. At both places there will be showing life-size paintings for lobby display, and various styles of glass transparencies of all sizes, and the different styles of hand-colored pictures, sizes ranging from that of a post card to the one sheet size. Six hundred different faces will be displayed in post cards.

"AT THE POSTERN GATE" (Reliance).

A one reel drama of unusual charm called "At the Postern Gate" is released by the Reliance company in the Mutual program on July 9th. Teddy Sampson is the featured player in the cast which includes Maxfield Stanley, a leading man new to the Mutual, Ray Myers, George Pierce and Mabel Wiles. The scenes of the story are laid in old France and a realistic whole is preserved down to the last detail. The production was made under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. The costumes of the period and largely to the picturesqueness of the play.

At the postern gate near his mother's chateau the little and pretty Antoinette was accustomed to meet handsome young Argle in secret. Her mother, Louise, had selected a wealthy cousin, Philippe, as a husband for Antoinette, but this choice found no favor in the eyes of the girl. A generation previous at this same postern gate, Louise had been accustomed to meet Jacques, Argle's father, and there the two parents had plighted their troth. In the end, however, Jacques had deserted Louise and made a marriage for money, since when Louise had hated him. Philippe told Louise how Antoinette was meeting Argle, but when Louise suggested that Philippe should meet Argle on the field of honor his craven heart failed him. So Louise herself dressed in men's clothes met Argle. Argle saw through her disguise, however, and refused to use his sword and it was Antoinette who rushed on the scene and adjusted the old quarrel between her mother and Argle's father.

"THE STRAIGHT AND NARROW PATH" (Kalem).

The wonderful human note touched by "The Straight and Narrow Path," a two-act Kalem drama scheduled for release Wednesday, July 14, sets it apart from the average two-reel production. Reviewers who have repeatedly deplored the tendency to stretch two reel stories into four and five reel productions will delight in this. Here is a story which many would have taken four reels to tell, compressed into two.

The honors of this production, the scenario of which was written by Harry O. Hoyt, easily go to Ollie Kirkby. As Frances, the department store girl who is sorely beset by temptation, Miss Kirkby has demonstrated that she possesses all the qualities which make the real actress. We know of no finer bit of acting than her work in the restaurant where Harris endeavors to induce his victim to desert the straight and narrow path.

The magnificence of the sets and the portrayals of the various characters go far towards making this an exceptional offering. James W. Horne is the producer.

ALL CELTIC EXPANDING.

The All Celtic Films have some big plans for the future which are not ready for publication at this time, but it is said that when they are announced that many will be surprised, for some of the biggest stars and plays of filmdom have been secured, and will be produced in a series by Charlie O'Hara.

"MONEY! MONEY! MONEY!" (Lubin).

A misunderstanding husband, his pretty wife, and a wealthy bachelor, who is a friend of the family, are the three central characters in the Lubin drama, "Money! Money! Money!" featuring Ethel Clayton and Joseph Kaufman and released July 9th.

The husband unjustly assumes that the bachelor is winning his wife's heart with money. He broods over this until he gets in such a state of mind that he plans a robbery in order to get money to lavish on his wife. A real thief, however upsets the plans and after a series of unexpected developments the husband sees the truth—that his wife is in love with him only and that the bachelor is a real friend of the family in every sense of the word.

"THE MOUNTAIN GIRL" (Majestic).

The effective Griffith star Dorothy Gish is featured with Ralph Lewis in "The Mountain Girl," a two reel Majestic feature. Miss Gish, Mr. Lewis and a company under the direction of Paul Powell made "The Mountain Girl" in the San Bernardino Mountains. They went far from the railroad on horseback and found some exquisite settings.

Miss Gish got thoroughly under the skin of her part. Living the life of a girl of the mountains during the making of this production, she did some of her best work as a screen actress.

The strongly dramatic situations in "The Mountain Girl" are brought into splendid relief by the surroundings. The mountain girl lived in a primitive log cabin among the pines. For years her only companion was her grandfather (Ralph Lewis). Finally love enters into her life in the person of Ned, a mountaineer (W. E. Lawrence).

The course of true love even in the mountains cannot run smoothly, however. The obstacle to its delightful course comes in the person of the stranger (Frank Bennett). He is a gambler who has been expelled from the mountain hamlet not very far from the girl's cabin.

A thrilling situation comes when he endeavors to make forcible love to the Girl. Her grandfather, helpless and paralyzed cannot interfere, but prays for strength. In his youth he had been a veritable Sampson. Suddenly, his prayer seems answered. With the firm grip of his youth he seizes the gambler by the throat and overpowers him.

"THE OCTOPUS" (Selig).

"The Octopus" produced by Thomas Santschi, from the story written by Charles Belmont Davis, released Thursday, July 15, as a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, is the story of a great city; of how its tenacles entangle and poison the hearts and minds of those susceptible to its fascination. "The Scene from "The Octopus" (Selig).

Octopus" teaches a lesson that all that glitters is not gold, and not all of the success and joy of life is to be found within the environments of the metropolis.

This Selig Diamond Special contains beautiful scenic effects, and the action is carried convincingly forward by Thomas Santschi, Lillian Hayward, Leo Pierson, Marion Warner and others.

DANIEL FROHMAN AGAIN PRESENTS "SEVEN SISTERS."

The five-part photo-adaptation of the famous international triumph, "Seven Sisters," presented for several seasons by Daniel Frohman at the Lyceum theater in New York City, serves as the medium for the next return to the screen of Marguerite Clark, who, since her motion picture debut, has achieved an uninterrupted series of distinct screen successes.

Scene from "Seven Sisters" (Famous Players).

This amusing Famous Players production is scheduled to appear on the Paramount program July 26.

The play is based on the Hungarian system of marriage, where the matrimonial conventions inexorably consign to spinsterhood a girl whose younger sister marries before her. As Mici, Miss Clark is altogether delightful. She plays with a thorough enjoyment of her part. Her mischievous gravity is enhanced by a rather wistful air, which she varies with bursts of wild, uproarious mirth, as suddenly suppressed. Her frank ingenuousness, her quaint philosophy, and her irresistible girlishness, are altogether captivating. Miss Clark's success is complete, and the assistance of her capable supporting company, which includes Conway Tearle, who recently distinguished himself in "The Hawk," in support of William Faversham, enhances the value of her characterization.

The Hungarian atmosphere of the subject is faithfully suggested, an exact replica of a typical Hungarian town having been built in the Famous Players studios.

IN CHICAGO FOR RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS.

J. L. Kempner of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Company was called to Chicago a few days ago to close a number of contracts for screens which resulted from the placing of a Radium Gold Fibre screen in the Colonial theater, Chicago, which recently turned to the photoplay policy under the direction of Jones, Linick & Schaffer.

The show at the Colonial has made quite a success and the screen installed is given considerable credit for the splendid projection which is being secured.

Radium Gold Fibre sales in the Chicago territory are directly controlled by the Central Film Company, but Mr. Kempner, of the New York Radium office, is in charge of the timely sales campaign which is being conducted at the present time.

Before his return to New York, Mr. Kempner expects to visit a number of the other important cities of the Middle West for the purpose of establishing regular commercial sales offices to aid in the wider distribution of Radium Gold Fibre Screens.

BURR McINTOSH STARTS WEST TO PICTURIZE "MY PARTNER."

Burr McIntosh left for the West the other day with a company of thirty people to make the next production for the Burr McIntosh Film Corporation. The piece selected is Bartley Campbell's famous play, "My Partner," which was universally recognized as the greatest melodrama up to the time it was first produced, by a remarkable cast of stars at the Union Square theater, Tuesday evening, September 16, 1879.

Mr. McIntosh will visualize "Joe Saunders," the most popular part of the late Louis Aldrich. John Leach, acknowledged to be the best Chinaman on the stage today will be the "Wing Lee" which Charles T. Parsloe made such a classic. Arthur Deagon whose splendid work in "The Follies" of last year, will do some wonderful open-air stunts on the tight rope and rings in the mountains of California. Miss Marie Edith Wells, whose beauty and ability are assisting to make "The Builder of Bridges" so successful, will be "Mary Brandon" and Miss Ethel Mantell, Robert B. Mantell's attractive daughter, will be the ingenue. The production will be made by Mr. Eugene Sanger, a master in the art of producing high grade features.

M. H. BLACKWELL FEATURE DISTRIBUTORS.

Pittsburgh exhibitors will be interested in learning that the feature distributing business formerly conducted by A. A. Weiland, under the name of The Northern Film Co., has been taken over by M. H. Blackwell. The offices of the new company will be at the same address as the old, that is at 113 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, and will be under the management of J. O. Fay, an exchange man favorably known in the Pittsburgh territory.

The M. H. Blackwell Feature Distributors have bought the films owned by the Northern Film Co. and will secure other offerings that are dependable as they come upon the market. These films will be rented to exhibitors at a price that will leave a reasonable profit for both the exchange and exhibitor. The idea being not to supply a program, even of one a week, but to have especially good pictures to send out as often as needed. A short prospectus has been sent to the trade in the Pittsburgh territory especially recommending the Carlyle Blackwell features and stating that in smaller towns where these have not yet been shown, a price can be quoted that will be especially attractive so that exhibitors can give their patrons a feature that is worthy of the biggest and best conducted houses in the cities. They are not asking for all the business, but only as much of it as the service that they give justifies. This seems to us a modest and commendable way to solicit patronage.

TULLY ENGAGED BY RELIANCE.

A purchase and an engagement of great importance in the motion picture world is announced by the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation. The engagement is that of Tully Marshall, one of the most artistic and effective actors in the country, to become a member of the permanent stock company at the Reliance-Majestic studios in Los Angeles, California.

The purchase is that of Horace Hazeltine's widely read novel "The Sable Lorcha." In the photodramatization of "The Sable Lorcha," Thomas Jefferson is also to be featured with Mr. Marshall.

Tully Marshall has been known for years on the speaking stage not only as an actor who created vividly the most repulsive types of men and the most heroic with equal ease, but as a stage director of great resources. He was the weakling husband in "Paid in Full" which was widely successful.

"Sable Lorcha," which is to be made the foundation for a multiple reel feature, is a Chinese mystery story with deeply colorful dramatic situations. Chester B. Clapp of the Reliance-Majestic literary forces has begun work upon the scenario. The two chief characters are brothers, one a man of attainments and the other a ne'er do well. The part thus becomes a dual role.

"THE BATTLE OF THE BALLOTS" (Good Luck).

"The Battle of the Ballots" will be complete by Saturday, July 4th. This picture is not made along the old lines, but is liberal, entertaining and convincing. It does not appeal to passion, but reason. The picture is full of action and strong dramatic effect. It shows a large town under the administration of the Wet Forces and then shows the town under the Dry Forces. It vividly depicts the methods employed to carry elections and the hard work done by both sides. There are new and original features in the picture that were never produced before, that will undoubtedly appeal to the public. A romance runs through the story, but at all times the main point of showing the evil of drink is never forgotten and is constantly kept before the audience.

Scene from "The Battle of the Ballots" (Enterprise).

An exhibition will be given on Saturday. State rights will be sold for the "Battle of the Ballots." M. A. Neff, who is the author and producer, has copyrighted the picture and will place it on sale in the near future.

"THE ARROW MAIDEN" (Reliance).

For the first time in her life "Billie" West plays an Indian role, that of the maiden in the Reliance production "The Arrow Maiden." Among her support are two players of Indian blood, Eagle Eye and Dove Eye. The Indian hero, Brave Heart, is played by H. Moody.

The point of view taken by Director Francis Powers, who filmed "The Arrow Maiden," was that Indian superstition as believed by the Indians should be visualized on the screen. Consequently, we see the tribe's medicine woman, Dove Eye, placing the hero, Brave Heart, under a spell so that he dies. She relents, however, and resurrects him. All these unusual scenes are pictured in "The Arrow Maiden."

Scene from "The Arrow Maiden" (Reliance).

There is also a strong love story in the foreground of this latest Indian subject. Eagle Eye, a "bad" Indian and Brave Heart, a "good" Indian, are rivals for the hand of the maiden. She is to become the squaw of the one who excels in Indian games. Brave Heart wins but then the medicine woman works her spell.

After the resurrection of Brave Heart, Brave Heart himself deals with Eagle Eye, hurling him over a cliff to the sea below. The tribe comes to chant a ceremonial over his body but find him arisen from the dead and making love to the maiden.

"THE ISLAND OF SURPRISE" (Vitagraph).

"The Island of Surprise,' another popular Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady story, has been adapted for the screen and is now in course of production by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Lorimer Johnston. The cast will include William Courtenay, who will be seen in his first Vitagraph picture, which will also be his initial appearance on the screen. Mr. Courtenay will portray Robert Lovell, a character admirably suited to his personality and artistry. Edith Storey will play the lead opposite Mr. Courtenay, appearing as Dorothy Arden. Others in a long cast of principals include Julia Swayne Gordon, Zena Keefe, Charles Kent, Anders Randolf, Charles Wellesley and Leo Delaney. "The Island of Surprise" is a story that lends itself ideally to the demands of the camera, and employs many unusual and daring situations. Two beautiful girls and a man are marooned on an uninhabited island. The man is husband to one of the girls, but their marriage has been kept secret. The other girl has been selected by their parents to become his wife. It is from this situation the author has built his story. One of the big scenes will show a horde of savages attacking the three on the island, while a counter attack by a warship is in progress that effects their rescue.

"A NIGHT'S LODGING" (MinA).

The one-reel comedy, "A Night's Lodging," is to be released Thursday, July 8, on the program of the General Film Company.

"A Night's Lodging" is a hilarious farce, replete with situations and action. The fun starts in the very first scene and develops into a riot at the climax. It may be said that "A Night's Lodging" is perhaps the funniest film MinA Films has made. In view of the quality of the previous MinA releases this recommendation is quite forceful.

The story of "A Night's Lodging" relates the trying experience of Jerry to escape the law's vigilants after he has departed abruptly from his boarding house, where he overlooked the little formality of paying his room rent. By a trick of his own Jerry obtains sufficient money to engage a room in a hotel. His lack of knowledge of hotel rules force him into trouble and the more he attempts to extricate himself the deeper he becomes enmeshed, until finally the police reserves are called. Jerry finishes his night in a cell.

Jerry is played excellently by George Ovey, who is given real assistance by Goldie Colwell, Janet Sully and others of the cast.

SAM BERNARD BEGINS WORK FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Following the announcement recently made by the Famous Players Film Co. to the effect that they had secured the exclusive motion picture services of the world-famous comedian, Sam Bernard, reputed to be the highest salaried comedian on the stage today, comes the statement that this celebrated star has now begun work before the camera in his initial screen appearance. The subject selected by the Famous Players for Mr. Bernard's introduction to the motion picture public is an original story, so constructed as to display to the utmost advantage the inimitable comedy talents of the star, entitled "Poor Schmaltz—Sam Bernard 'In Dutch.'"

Mr. Bernard will portray the role of a German wig-maker who becomes the principal agent in a side-splitting series of comic adventures and humorous difficulties. The title "Poor Schmaltz" was selected because in the best known of his stage successes he bore this character-name. From the first few scenes already taken, Mr. Bernard has evidenced a remarkable adaptability to screen performance, and the directors of the Famous Players are confident that his first screen impersonation will be surprisingly effective.

"THE BROKEN COIN" (Universal).

The Universal's new serial, "The Broken Coin," is to run in film theatres for the next fifteen weeks. The story will be released in installments of two reels each and will be published concurrently in newspapers throughout the country. The story was written by Emerson Hough.

"The Broken Coin" was produced by Francis Ford, who put on "Lucille Love" two years ago, and appeared as he does in this serial, with Grace Cunard in the leading role. Eddie Polo has a strong role which calls for a series of hair breadth escapes and experiences.

BOOKING RIGHT FOR BETTY NANSEN PICTURE.

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, Nathan Hirsh, president, 130 West 46th street, has secured the exclusive booking rights for the Great Northern Film Company's latest release, "The Heart of Lady Alaine," for Greater New York and northern New Jersey. This is a five-reel production of exceptional merit, with Betty Nansen, the celebrated royal actress, in the lead as Lady Alaine.

Mr. Hirsh is delighted over the criticisms he has received on this production by numerous exhibitors and bookings thereon are coming in beyond his expectations.

"JABEZ'S CONQUEST" (Essanay).

This is another of the thrilling adventures of Dominica Meduna, the series written by Henry C. Rowland and being produced by Essanay. Nell Craig carries out the part of the beautiful and accomplished girl thief with her usual cleverness. Constantly seeking adventure for the pure joy of it, she flirts with a rich stranger and he becomes so enamored with him he is ready to do anything for her. She tells him a hard luck story of her brother being in trouble and the necessity of raising an immense sum of money at once. She gives him the imitation Rajah's tunic as security. It is supposed to be worth a fabulous sum, but in reality cost but a few thousand francs. She makes a big haul, then her heart gets the better of her. The rich stranger was so generous and his ways so fascinating that she returns the check. Released July 20.

Scene from "Jabez's Conquest" (Essanay).

ANOTHER "COL. HEEZA LIAR" CARTOON.

"Col. Heeza Liar, Dog Fancier," the latest Bray comedy to be released at an early date by Pathe Exchange, Inc., is one of Bray's best efforts. The doughty Colonel is a Red Cross worker in the war zone on a hunt for wounded and comes across a "bologna" hound left on the ruins. His decision to adopt the canine fails to meets the hound's sense of what is proper, and "bologna" undertakes to rid himself of his adopter. Accordingly he catches the lone flea which has been annoying him, and places it on the person of Heeza Liar. That worthy has an awful time trying to dispossess his boarder, and is compelled to take to the water.

The antics of the dog and the Colonel together with the remarkably funny expressions of each, make up a most ludicrous picture.

DEMAND FOR QUALITY FILM PRINTING.

Louis B. Jennings, president and general manager of the American Film Laboratories, Inc., states that the producers in the film industry are waking up to the fact that in order to have successful results much care and attention must be given to the printing and developing. The consequence of the awakening is reflected in the fact that producers are showing a willingness to pay the proper prices for proper work.

For sometime past the tendency, especially among the smaller producers and in some instances among the large producers, has been to get the printing done at as low a figure as possible and exchanges throughout the country have been receiving very poor prints. Owing to this, bookings have been cancelled right and left; the revenue has therefore been cut and it all comes home to roost on the producer's shoulder. In order to save a few dollars at the start, he has to assume a big loss in the end. It is a case of "A penny wise and a pound foolish."

Bearing the above in mind the American Film Laboratories are most careful that only the best work possible to secure from a negative is allowed to depart from its doors. Its plant, located at 69-71 West 90th street, in the heart of New York City, enjoys every facility for prompt delivery. Associated with Mr. Jennings in this company is Edwin S. Porter, general manager and treasurer of the Famous Players Film Company. Producers of film should visit this plant.

CHANGE IN ESSANAY RELEASE DATES.

"The Blindness of Virtue," the six-act feature written by Cosmo Hamilton, will be released one month earlier than at first scheduled. The date now set is July 19. "A Bunch of Keys," Charles Hoyt's comedy, which was booked for July, will not be released until later. Both these photoplays, released through the V. L. S. E., have been completed by Essanay.

"The Blindness of Virtue" deals with the sex problem and caused a stir of comment when produced on the stage. It was criticized by some for its advocacy of teaching the truths of motherhood to young girls.

Edna Mayo, as Effie, the minister's daughter, who has grown to young womanhood in innocence and without the slightest knowledge of the fundamental truths of life, is exceptionally fitted for her part and portrays the character of the happy carefree girl with a vividness and reality that holds the interest of all. Bryant Washburn, as her sweetheart, plays his role with his characteristic understanding of character.

"THE GARDEN OF LIES" (Universal).

One of the latest acquisitions to the pictures is beautiful Jane Cowl. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company will release on July 12th from its seventy-two distributing centres a five-reel adaptation of the late Justus Miles Forman's popular play and novel, "The Garden of Lies," with Jane Cowl in the leading role. As a play it was put on by Sir George Alexander in London and scored an immediate success. Prominent in the cast in support of Miss Cowl are William Russell, Violet Horner, Ethelbert Hale, Philip Hahn, David Wall, Claude Cooper and Adele Carson.

MAY ROBSON IN "A NIGHT OUT" (Vitagraph).

The initial appearance of the international comedienne, May Robson, as a Vitagraph star, will be in a picturization, by Frank Dazey of her latest success, "A Night Out," the comedy in which she starred the past two years on the legitimate stage. Director George D. Baker has selected a cast in support of Miss Robson, which includes the Vitagraph Big Comedy Four, Flora Finch as Mrs. Haslen, Hughie Mack as Jeff Dorgan, Kate Price as Mrs. Duncan and William Shea as Captain McMahon. Augmenting this galaxy of Vitagraph Stars will be Charles Brown, George Cooper, Ethel Corcoran, Belle Bruce, Arthur Cozine, Jack Storey and Frank Bunny. Work has already been started on "A Night Out," which, when completed, will be a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in at least four parts.

METRO WINS IN DENVER.

After showing Metro Pictures at the Broadway theater, Denver, for six days to which exhibition all exhibitors throughout Colorado, Nevada, Wyoming, and Montana were invited, Harry J. Cohen of the Metro home office announces a gross contracted business exceeding two thousand dollars a week, with other contracts as yet unsigned. The unusual method of showing the exhibitor twelve releases before requesting them to use the program, Metro hit upon a novel method and as seen from above, struck a most responsive chord.

Four of the principal Denver houses are playing the Metro program three and fours days and one an entire week, while the cities in the four states incorporated in the Denver territory are responding in unusual fashion.

PEACEFUL RAFFERTY MAKING HIT.

Peaceful Rafferty, the genial Irish character created by Charles O'Hara, the president of the All Celtic Films, producers of the pictures which are being released through the World Film Corporation, is highly pleased with the way he has won the hearts of the picture-going public. Witmark & Sons, the New York music publishers, have just issued a Rafferty song that any exhibitor can have for the asking, for it is the intention of the All Celtic people to have each exhibitor play the song when he plays the films. And believe us it is a very catchy little march that is bound to make a hit anywhere.

KLEINE HAS HEAVY REPRESENTATION IN CHICAGO LOOP.

The Chicago loop district is showing more film bearing the George Kleine Brand the present week than that of any other single manufacturer. Two big Jones, Linick and Schaeter houses, The Colonial and the Orpheum, are both featuring Kleine subjects, while Alfred Hamburger's Ziegfeld opened June 19 with the latest Kleine Feature, "The Spendthrift," while The Fine Arts theater, also a Hamburger house, is showing the Kleine Travelogue.

NO INCREASED RENTAL FOR "THE ROSARY."

In order to correct a misapprehension, that "The Rosary," owing to its being a seven-part production would be held at a higher rental than the four and five reel subjects, the Selig company have issued a statement that no increased rental would be asked for this feature.

The manufacturers of the Red Seal productions on the V-L-S-E program wish to make it distinctly understood, that they are releasing their features by the subject, and not by rule of reels

They classify The Rosary" as seven reels of strength, which is a neat summary of the feature.

DIRECTOR TOURNEUR PLANS SOMETHING DIFFERENT.

As soon as Maurice Tourneur finishes work on the William A. Brady picture "The Cub," he is to start work on a spectacular production which will be along unique lines, and one that will make the World Film exhibitors feel that in Tourneur's work they have something they can always bank upon as a knockout.

GENTER SCREENS GOING STRONG.

President Genter of the J. H. Genter Co., Inc., has just returned from an extensive trip through the Middle West and reports big business during the first part of June, for their well-known Mirroroid Screens. He was gratified to meet so many highly satisfied users of their screens during his trip and to find on his return more orders shipped in the first twenty-five days of June than the total for the previous month.

NEW GRIFFITH MULTIPLE REEL FEATURE.

D W. Griffith, since his return to the Mutual's Hollywood studios, has been filming a new multiple reel feature to be known as "The Mother and the Law." This will be the first Griffith release since "The Birth of a Nation. Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Miriam Cooper, Mary Alden, Ralph Lewis and Walter Long are in the cast.

Oliver Morosco

WHEN, in the early part of last November, Oliver Morosco announced his advent into the field of motion pictures at the head of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, the importance of this acquisition to the film world was immediately apparent.

In theatricals the name of Morosco today ranks second to none as a result of the wonderful progressiveness of the young westerner and his radical departures from stage traditions. From an obscure manager, 3,000 miles from the hub of the theatrical world, to his present postion as one of America's greatest producers, has been accomplished by Mr.

Oliver Morosco in His Library.

Morosco in the brief period of four years. To be sure, Los Angeles theatergoers were thoroughly familiar with Mr. Morosco and his activities for many years, but it was only four years ago when the billboards bearing the name of Morosco first made appearance in the vicinity of Broadway.

Mr. Morosco received his first theatrical experience at his father's theater in San Francisco, the Grand Opera House. At eighteen he was treasurer, acting manager, press agent, play reader, engagement manager and often stage director. Branching out for himself he migrated to Los Angeles, where he leased the Burbank theater, which had already failed twelve times. When the curtain arose on the opening performance Mr. Morosco's worldy possessions amounted to exactly $39 in American currency, a stack of unpaid bills and the good will of the members of his company. Today the Burbank theater is his chief producing center, having brought him a fortune every season.

With the Burbank as a corner stone, Mr. Morosco began adding story after story to his theatrical structure that is now of skyscraper proportions. His first important production was made in 1911, when he produced Richard Walton Tully's romantic Hawaiian drama, "The Bird of Paradise." Immediate success was accorded this production in Los Angeles, following which Mr. Morosco, despite the warnings of the wise ones, took the play to New York, where another triumph was scored by the progressive manager. Today "The Bird of Paradise," while four seasons old, is one of the most profitable attractions on tour. "Peg o' My Heart," a play that nearly every manager in New York had refused as a sure-fire failure, was his next offering, and its success is well known. This play in one season returned to its producer a profit of over a half million dollars. Other successes, including "Help Wanted," which captured the record of the year in Chicago with a run of seven solid months at the Cort theater and made an instantaneous hit in New York; "The Escape," "The Tik-Tok Man of Oz," rapidly succeeded each other.

Mr. Morosco's motto has always been "The Country At Large." He contends that notwithstanding New York's preeminence, the greatest theatrical interest is the interest of the multitude of other towns and cities; that the ninety-five millions, not the five millions, come in for first consideration; that perhaps there are other standards of judgment than New York's, and that while he values metropolitan success he will count himself an eventual failure if he does not please the whole country.

The success of the screen versions of several of Mr. Morosco's most notable plays already released by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, i. e., "Help Wanted," with its original star, Lois Meredith, and "Pretty Mrs. Smith," with Fritzi Scheff in her former characterization, indicates a success in the field of motion pictures for the western manager that bids fair to duplicate his remarkable career in theatricals.

In his forthcoming offerings to the motion picture patrons, Mr. Morosco will introduce such well known celebrities of the stage as Lenore Ulrich, who for many seasons has starred in his "Bird of Paradise;" Cyril Maude, the well known English actor-manager and star of "Grumpy;" George Fawcett, star of "The Great John Ganton" and "The Law of the Land;" Peggy O'Neil of "Peg o' My Heart" fame, and others.

John C. Flinn Joins the Lasky Staff

JOHN C. FLINN, for the past three years dramatic reviewer and assistant dramatic editor of the New York Herald, has been engaged by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company as promotion and publicity representative.

He is the second dramatic editor of a New York newspaper to join the Lasky staff, Mr. Hector Turnbull, dramatic editor of the New York Tribune already having taken up scenario writing and literary work in the firm's studios at Hollywood, California, where he has become a member of the artistic department of the company. Mr. Flinn's ability has been marked not only by a talent for criticism and an eye for news but by a genuine literary capacity in the preparation of special articles on general and dramatic matters, and the decision of the Lasky Company to obtain the services of so widely known and enterprising a young man as Mr. Flinn is in keeping with the progressive spirit of this organization.

John C. Flinn.

In no slight degree was the public success last winter in New York of Mr. and Mrs. Granville Barker, English producers, attributed to the manner in which Mr. Flinn, at the invitation of the Stage Society of New York, directed the propaganda of the "new art in the theater" for them.

Mr. Samuel Goldfish, treasurer and general manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, who has just returned east from Hollywood where Miss Geraldine Farrar has begun the preparation of the extraordinary plays which will be released by the Lasky Company, announces that a regular press department has been instituted in Los Angeles, under the direction of Mr. Kenneth McGaffey, at one time press representative for Messrs. Comstock and Gest, and who has held important appointments of this order under most of the large theatrical firms in New York.

With these two press departments working in unison and co-operating together the Lasky Company feels that exhibitors will be better served than ever before in the history of the business so far as exploitation and feature film productions are concerned.

Whitman Bennett formerly press agent for the Lasky Company remains with the concern in an executive capacity.

RECOVER FROM EFFECTS OF ACCIDENT.

Betty Marshall, leading woman of The Gotham Film Co. and Frederic de Belleville, her leading man, who so nearly lost their lives in a premature explosion in one of the final scenes of the Gotham picture "A Trade Secret," are rapidly recovering and will shortly be about again, none the worse for their thrilling experience.

It was first thought that Miss Marshall's beauty would be slightly impaired, but the only mark on her face will be a small scar.

Mr. de Belleville, who suffered more from shock than anything else is about again and has finished his work in "A Trade Secret." He is none the worse for his experience.

AUTO FILM EXPRESS ON JOB

Works Between Washington and Baltimore—Planned to Fill Needs of Picture Men.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE local film exchanges, it is said, are enabled to save considerable money through the operation of the Baltimore & Washington Film Express, and although in operation but a very few weeks, it seems very practical and capable of rendering a most efficient service.

"We must give better service and for less money than the express companies," said Frank H. Durkee, head of the new concern, to the World correspondent, "and we must do everything we can to help the exhibitor get quick deliveries. Now, instead of the operator taking the film cases to an express office, which may be in an out-of-the-way section, he merely delivers them to one of the exchanges, where they are picked up by our automobile. It makes no difference to what exchange the cases may be consigned, nor in what exchange in Baltimore or Washington they are left. The machine leaves Baltimore between 1 and 2 a. m. It is a two-hour run over the road, but we allow ourselves four hours to take care of any breakdown that may occur. The return trip is then made following the picking up of cases due to go back to Baltimore. The operator of the automobile knows the location of every telephone along the road so that in the event of trouble he can quickly communicate with the garage, where a reserve machine is kept for emergency use. The four hours which we allow ourselves each way would enable us to send out the extra car and continue the trip without further inconvenience in the way of loss of time."

Mr. Durkee is himself an exhibitor and has a good idea of the class of service an express of this kind must give. The company enters into a contract with the film exchanges on the basis of the number of shipments to be made during a given period of time. All of the larger exchanges and many of the feature offices are now using the service.

NEW PROJECTING MACHINES.

Harry Crandall, of Crandall's theater, never allows his projecting machines to get in bad shape, and, in fact, has changed them three times in the seventeen months that the house has been open. He first used two Edison projecting machines and he found these perfectly satisfactory, but he had a chance to turn them in with a small amount of cash and get two Powers 6-A machines. These were all right, but the opportunity came when he could exchange these for two Simplex projecting machines, and the trade was made. Mr. Crandall states that he can get far better results through this method than by keeping the same machines working all the time.

CAPITOL CITY JOTTINGS.

The Colonial theater, in Farmville, Va., has been taken over by the Exhibitors' Co-Operative Booking Agency, located in the Bank of Commerce and Savings Building. Farmville is a seminary town and the new operators expect to do a good business with features charging an admission of 10 and 20 cents. Two new Powers 6-A machines and a new screen are to be installed. The front will be remodeled and the interior is to be redecorated. The house is little more than a year old and had been operated by V. D. Venable, who has leased it to Earle A. Reese and George W. Smiley, of the agency. It has a seating capacity of about three hundred and will be run under the management of E. M. Henry. He was formerly engaged in the film exchange in Atlanta, Ga., having operated the Metropole Feature Film Company in that place. He recently sold out his business to W. H. Peck.

The Princess theater, 1119-1123 H street, Northeast, is to undergo extensive alterations during the summer. The front is to be redecorated and the exits changed around to make possible the enlargement of the operators' booth. When this work is completed another Simplex projecting machine will be installed. The interior will also be redecorated and Manager Joseph P. Morgan intends getting his house in good shape for the fall, when he will again run a feature program with an admission of 10 cents.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Coffey, of Cincinnati, Ohio, are in Washington visiting the father of Mrs. Coffey, Marcus Notes, who operates the Empress, on Ninth street, northwest, and the Criterion, at Atlantic City. Mr. Coffey was formerly connected with a local film exchange. He is now manager of the United Film service office in Cincinnati.

J. Martin McKee, traveling representative of the local office of the United Film Service, has just been released from a hospital in this city, where he has been confined for some time from an attack of rheumatism. Mr. McKee was taken ill while traveling through Virginia and was forced to give up his trip and return to Washington. He will be able to again go on the road during the coming week.

H. P. Gooding has opened the Pleasant Hour Park on Twelfth street, Northeast. This airdome, which is located between C and D streets, is a new one this year and is operating with General Film Service.

Joel G. Bodine, who has been house manager of the Stanton theater, in Stanton Park, Northeast, has been placed in charge of the Empire theater, on H street, between Ninth and Tenth streets, Northeast, succeeding Mr. Alvine in that position, the latter going to the Empire Park. Mr. Bodine is one of the most popular young theater managers of the city and it is believed he will do well in his new position.

Samuel Greenberg, formerly manager of the Empire theater, and a member of the company operating that house, the Stanton and Empire Park, and from which he recently severed his connection, has taken over the Truxton Park theater, it is said, and has secured a long lease to that place. It is understood that he will rename the theater upon reopening it.

Peerless Park, on Georgia avenue, Northwest, has been reopened for the season with Pathe service by William Gains.

The airdome at Fourteenth and V streets, Northwest, has been taken over by the Boston Park Company, of this city, and renamed Tango Park.

The Pickwick theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, Northwest, has been closed for the summer season.

Monte Craig, who manages the New theater, in Staunton, Va., was a visitor at the local exchanges, booking films for that house.

D. P. Wine, who operates the New Virginia, in Harrisonburg, Va., while in town last week, reported that business in his locality is improving in a most satisfactory manner. "The South has been a little up against it," he said, "and we have felt the result of large numbers of people out of employment. The cotton troubles, however, did not reach Harrisonburg. There is a marked improvement in business generally in my section and those who were out of work are gradually obtaining employment so that conditions are becoming more normal. I cannot complain now, for the New Virginia is doing very well." Mr. Wine's house has a seating capacity of 1,012 and was built for use both as a motion picture and legitimate theater. The proprietor is president of the Exhibitors' League of Virginia.

The Randolph Park, a new airdome just opened at the corner of First street and Randolph place, northwest, has proven a magnet in this section of Washington, D. C. Although located within three blocks on either side of three other theaters and two parks, the new airdome is proving a success from the start. A varied program, with feature bills, makes up the weekly programs. Many attractive features are also introduced during the week for the pleasure of the patrons. Mr. J. F. Brady is manager of the park.

LETTER FROM LYNCHBURG, VA.

By Julian T. Baber, Lynchburg ("Daily Advance") Correspondent for Moving Picture World.

THEATRES in Lynchburg showing features are landing the business these days, and several managers are already booking the big ones as fast as they can make arrangements.

The Trenton theatre has given up the Paramount service and is now putting on other features.

The National theatre, of which M. L. Hoffheimer, of Richmond, is manager, is showing the Paramount pictures, having grasped this opportunity when the Trenton theatre turned loose the franchise.

The Gayety theater is offering the United Program and is getting its share of the business among the smaller houses. Manager Sanderson has the faculty of working up a clientele that will come once and then again, and he is satisfied with the service that he is now getting. The Academy of Music is also showing the United, presenting three reels in addition to a regular tab program every day.

The popularity contest being conducted at the Universal theater is attracting not a little attention among the female patrons of this attractive house, and by the time it is concluded Manager W. R. Wilkerson will no doubt have made up his mind that the publicity he has received was well worth the effort which this feature required.

Manager Guy Barrett, of the Belvedere theater, has dispensed with the services of his piano player and drummer and is now depending upon his new Wurlitzer orchestra to supply the musical feature of the Belvedere program. The Belvedere is the oldest theater in the city and is regarded as one of the best.

Julian T. Barber, address "The Daily Advance," Lynchburg, Va., is reguar correspondent of The Moving Picture World in and about Lynchburg. He will be glad to receive any items of interest that may come up in his neighborhood.

Ordinance Upheld

Circuit Court in Portland Sustains Demurrer in Film Case—Follows U. S. Supreme Court Rulings in Ohio and Kansas Cases—Proposed Drastic Building Ordinance May Drive Exchange Men from Portland.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FOLLOWING the filing of briefs in the case where the Majestic Theater Company sought to enjoin the city of Portland from enforcing its new censorship ordinance with reference to William Fox's production, "The Valley of the Missing," Circuit Judge Davis sustained the city's demurrer to the theater company's complaint, and based upon the recent Supreme Court decisions in the Ohio and Kansas censorship cases cited by Deputy City Attorney Tomlinson, held the censorship ordinance to be constitutional.

The theater company contended that under the city charter the council had no right to pass the ordinance, that the powers held by the board were powers unlawfully delegated and that the ordinance denied the people affected the right of due process of law. Edwin James, manager of the theater, was in San Francisco at the time the decision was rendered, and although the injunction suit was started to test the ordinance, it is not known whether a further appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court.

ANOTHER DRASTIC ORDINANCE.

The motion picture industry in Portland seems to be the target for more than its share of drastic legislation, and following at the heels of an ordinance giving practically unlimited and unappealable power to the censor board of the mayor's choice, comes an ordinance calculated to deliver a solar-plexus blow to the exchange men of the city should it pass in its present form.

Late Tuesday evening, June 15, the exchange men for the first time became aware of the fact that an ordinance similar to the one recently vetoed in Seattle was coming before the council on Wednesday morning and that day found representatives of the exchanges there in a body. The council was induced to postpone action in order to give the picture men an opportunity to present their side of the matter, and a meeting between the commissioners and the exchange men was arranged.

Among the points in the ordinance that stand out as impractical are that no exchange or other building harboring films shall be situated within 30 feet of the nearest wall of buildings of the classes enumerated, which include nearly every class, but particularly buildings of frame construction, that under working conditions for a film exchange of any size, the repair room, shipping room and wash room must necessarily be separate rooms divided by fireproof walls, supplied with fireproof doors fitted with automatic firelocks; that no more than one two-ounce bottle of ether or amyl acetate or similar repair cement shall be kept in a repair room, and that only 90 days are given to the exchange men to alter their buildings to comply with the ordinance.

The ordinance was initiated by the fire marshal and aimed particularly against film concerns in the suburbs using wooden buildings for part of their work. In search for a precedent, the Seattle ordinance was selected.

City Building Inspector Plummer, when interviewed by the writer, intimated that a redraft of the ordinance was probable, as it was not the idea of the Portland commissioners to drive the film exchanges from the city, which would be the effect of the ordinance in its present form. An emergency existed, declared Mr. Plummer, requiring regulation of buildings housing films in addition to that found in the building code and the Seattle ordinance, with a slight toning down by himself and Percy Boardman, assistant fire marshal, was submitted to Chief Fire Marshal Stevens, who presented it to the council.

Six of the large exchanges of the city are located in a building erected by the Espe estate for their special use. Under the proposed ordinance the changes in the building necessary to be made will amount to thousands of dollars. Rather than go to this expense the film men are ready to move their exchanges to nearby towns. Already J. P. Kiggins, a prominent business man and owner of the U. S. A. theater in Vancouver, Wash., directly across the Columbia River from Portland, has offered the exchange men the use of six acres of land in the heart of that city, rent free for a long time, and other inducements, to persuade them to locate their business there.

The exchange men appreciate that something different from the present regulations in the building code is required for their own protection and they hope that their conference with the city officials will result in a redraft of the ordinance eliminating the obnoxious features.

LOCAL PICTURES TAKE.

Pictures of the Irvington Rose Festival, held in that section of the city following the big Portland festival were taken by a local concern and exhibited at the Columbia theater. Mr. Bergner, the manager of the theater, advises that a great deal of local interest was aroused and the Irvington people turned out in force to see the pictures of their efforts, together with "Fine Feathers," the regular World release.

NEW THEATRES.

B. J. Callahan, of Seattle, Ore., is opening a new theater there with a seating capacity of 500. He will run three changes of Pathe pictures weekly.

The Nat theater opens at Newport, Ore., July 2.

J. J. Bryan announces the opening of a theater of Eugene, Ore., shortly.

The Bijou theater, Grants Pass, Ore., has been opened by Guy Harvey and Clark Morey.

Samuel Gibson has sold his show at Charles City and will open another at Osage.

Fire destroyed the opera house at Grand Junction, owned by W. W. Kirby.

PORTLAND BRIEFS.

The Service Film Company, W. A. Stone, supplied the Master Bakers' Convention, held at the Multnomah Hotel, in Portland, with a projecting machine and temporary booth for the exhibition of a film showing the modern methods of baking bread.

The Portland lodge of Elks recently exhibited the "Pioneer Peacemaker," a historical picture now making the rounds among the Elks lodges.

The Ford Weekly contracted for several hundred feet of the Portland Rose Festival films, as did the Woodmen lodge. The pictures were furnished by the Northwest Weekly.

The Sunset theater, J. E. Murphy, manager, has signed for the new Mack Sennett Keystones, commencing June 20.

PORTLAND VISITORS.

H. M. Wilson, of Cottonwood, Idaho, and well known as an exhibitor throughout Montana, passed a few days in Portland and swapped yarns with Mr. Malcolm of the General Film Company's Portland office.

John Rance, of the Rex and Dream theaters, in Bremerton, Wash., passed through Portland on his way to Los Angeles.

PRAISE FOR GOOD PICTURE.

The Edison people have made an impression in Illinois with "The Stoning." There is a very thin line of demarcation between faithful portrayal of village life and travesty. Few productions have been able to awaken the necessary sympathy because there has been a tendency toward types that at least subtly suggest the "b'gosh" drama. The World representative was pleased with the cast of "The Stoning," a country-bred friend took the pains to write of his satisfaction, and now comes the Republic at Madison, a small Illinois city, saying: "It should have been seen by every young person in Madison, for it was better than any sermon, and was true to life."

Will Probably Sign Bill

Olsen Bill, Passed by Illinois Legislature, Expected to Get Governor Dunne's Signature—What State Papers Have to Say About the Measure—What It Provides for With the Penalties— League Against Bill.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A CENSORSHIP that is welcomed only by likely office holders becomes effective in Illinois July 1. The possibility that Gov. Edward F. Dunne will veto the bill is remote, as political dopesters cannot foresee an act that would antagonize the Secretary of State's office and its following. There is a demand for its veto by such papers as the Chicago Tribune. In fact the leading papers of the state are opposed to censorship. All three of the state capital papers, including The Register, of the Governor's own party, have been against it.

The Register says of the act: "Its principal desire seems to be to create additional jobs at the expense of the taxpayer." The State Journal terms it superfluous and "adding an unnecessary burden of expense to exhibitors. Springfield has had no complaint of the work of the national board." "Unless the people show strong disfavor," warns the News-Record, "Illinois is likely to have an affliction of moving picture Comstockery." Representing Northern Illinois, the Rockford Star declares: "There has not been one demand for further censorship. The bill has only one purpose, and that is to make jobs for hungry politicians."

The bill, which was passed by the house, 95 to 10 at one of its closing sessions, was introduced by Senator Olson. It provides: The Secretary of State shall appoint, with the approval of the Governor, three persons, one for one year, one for two years, and one for three years, who shall constitute such board. Upon the expiration of the term of each member so appointed a successor shall be appointed in like manner for a term of three years.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of State shall furnish the board of censors with suitable office rooms, and with sufficient equipment to properly carry out the provisions of this act. The board of censors may organize by electing one of its members as president. The Secretary of State shall select a competent person who shall act as secretary of the board. Every member of the board of censors shall receive an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars per year. The members of the board shall be considered as employees of the state, and shall be paid as other employees of the state are paid. The secretary of state shall appoint such assistants and clerical help as may be necessary to carry on the work of the board.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of the board of censors to examine and censor as herein provided, all motion picture films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in the State of Illinois. Such films shall be submitted to the board before they shall be delivered to the exhibitor for exhibition. The board shall charge a fee of one dollar for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand lineal feet, and one dollar for each additional one thousand feet. All moneys so received shall be paid each month into the State treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund.

Sec. 4. Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board. They shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered. Before any motion picture film shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words, "Approved by the Illinois Board of Censors," and the number of the film.

Sec. 5. The board of censors may work in conjunction with any censor board or boards of legal status of other states as a censor congress and the action of such congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of the board and all films passed, approved, stamped and numbered by such congress, when the fees therefor have been paid by the Illinois board, shall be considered approved by such board.

Sec. 6. Ninety days after this act shall take effect no films may be publicly shown or exhibited within the State of Illinois unless they have been passed and approved by the board or the censor congress and stamped and numbered by such board, or congress, as provided for herein.

Sec. 7. Any person, firm or corporation who shall publicly exhibit or show any motion picture within the State of Illinois unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Illinois board of censors or the congress of censors, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $25 nor more than $300, or imprisoned not less than thirty days, nor more than one year, or both, for each offense.

Sec. 8. Any person in interest being dissatisfied with any order of such board shall have the same rights and remedies as to filing a petition for hearing on the reasonableness and lawfulness of any order of such board, or to set aside, vacate or amend any order of such board, as is provided in the case of persons dissatisfied with the order of the Public Utilities Commission of Illinois.

Illinois exhibitors are congratulating themselves that the bill introduced by Representative Jackson, a Chicago negro, failed. This bill was aimed at films likely to cause race riots, but was so worded as to exclude even still pictures of the crucifixion which might tend to create a prejudice against the Jewish race.

W. W. Watts, of Springfield, treasurer of Illinois State Branch No. 2, M. P. E. L. A., and his fellow exhibitors did commendable work against the censorship measures. They enlisted the support of local editors. Letters signed by all were sent to all the members of the legislature.

SOME SAFE HITS BY SHOWMEN.

The film, "The Christian," will long be remembered in Paxton. It was shown at the Majestic and Crystal theaters under the auspices of the Young Men's Athletic Association. At the Majestic the show opened with a tableau of a pilgrim kneeling before the cross with the Holy City in the background. The lighting effects were appropriate. During the tableau "The Holy City" was sung. Special orchestras were used at both houses. "Uncle Sam at Work" was shown at the Elite in Somonauk for the benefit of the school library.

Merchants in Camp Point will provide business to the Photoplay for twelve Monday nights by giving tickets with each twenty-five-cent purchase. Not more than ten tickets are allowed one person. The Court at Pekin has discontinued the five and six reel features during the hot months. The Empress at Galesburg has a new Wurlitzer pipe organ. The Lyric at Litchfield gave its patrons small silk flags the day before flag day. Members of the fire department saw "Out of the Ruins" as the guest of the Eagle at Princeton. "The Closing of the Circuit" was a repeater for this house. The La Salle theater and a photographer at La Salle combined in a baby voting contest. A feature was that no names were published. The Globe at Ivesdale is giving away ironing boards, clothes bars and the like, one a night.

Plenty of Taxes

Tennessee Taxes Materially Increased for Coming Fiscal Year—$100 a Year Imposed on Picture Theaters—More If They Have Private Electrical Plants—Rates Become Effective May 11.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

REVENUE for all three—state, county and city—will be materially increased during the next fiscal year in Tennessee by reason of the passage of the revenue bill by the 1915 legislature. This bill provides a tax of $100 annually against all moving picture film companies. Itinerants, which will probably include traveling road shows, are taxed $40 to $150. Electric light and power companies will pay an additional tax of $500 to $1,000. In some cases theaters in smaller towns have put in their own power plants, with which they have furnished light to neighboring buildings. The new law will force the owners to pay a tax for this privilege. This taxation all comes under the head of "privilege licenses." The new tax bill is the first that Tennessee has had since 1899, and became effective May 11.

The county court clerk at Chattanooga recently received a number of copies of the bill, which he is now distributing. The county court at the July term will adopt the state revenue bill as its revenue measure, and the city commission will adopt it for the city. Under the law neither the state nor county can adopt a revenue measure in excess of the amount assessed by the state, neither can the county or city assess a privilege license against anything that is not assessed by the state.

MEETING FOR BETTER PICTURES

Mrs. Frederic Levy, of Louisville, was in Knoxville, Tenn., on June 17, and as leader in the international movement for better and cleaner moving pictures for children she spoke at two meetings held under the auspices of the City Beautiful League. Educational pictures were shown at the two meetings and a special luncheon was given at the Hotel Imperial. The City Beautiful League invited every one interested in better pictures to attend the performances. Mrs. Levy was a resident of Knoxville up to the time of her marriage.

PICTURE MEN APPROVE OF THE FREE SHOWS.

That the moving picture exhibitors of Nashville are not opposed to free motion picture shows at the public parks and playgrounds of the city is proved by the fact that the Crescent Amusement Company, which operates numerous houses in Nashville and surrounding cities, has assisted the Board of Park Commissioners considerably in the latter's attempts to furnish amusement for the open-air parks. These shows started on June 1 at Watkins Park. The show is generally shown in one park at a time. Two nights at one park and then the show goes on to another park so that each park has a show about once a week. These free shows will be continued through July and August, it is understood.

GOVERNOR PRAISES "SAM DAVIS PICTURES."

"The Sam Davis Pictures" recently made in Tennessee and shown at the Parthenon theater, of Nashville, probably attracted more attention than any local pictures which have previously been made. The pictures have been shown at a return engagement and the sign S. R. O. has been displayed on numerous occasions. Governor Rye, of Tennessee, was present at the theater on Friday evening, June 18. Upon entering the theater the audience began calling for a speech. The Governor finally responded, after being introduced by General John P. Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division of the United Confederate Veterans. Governor Rye in his brief address highly complimented the Sam Davis film.

"It typifies the scenes of the old South, so dear to our hearts," said the Governor. "The man's heart which is not touched by this picture must be stony, indeed."

TENNESSEE ITEMS.

The Elite, of Clarksville, Tenn., recently played a return engagement of Dustin Farnum in "Cameo Kirby." The play went so well the first time that the popular show house had many requests that it be shown again.

The Orpheum, of Nashville, Tenn., which was closed some time ago following a fire which destroyed a portion of the stage, has been remodeled and has reopened as a stock theater. It has been improved decidedly.

"Cotton Bolls and Wedding Bells," a Memphis, Tenn., moving picture, which was shown before 30,000 Memphis people a few weeks ago, has just been shown at a number of towns in the vicinity of Memphis and especially in the cotton district. These towns are Dyersburg, Tenn.; Fulton, Ky.; Forrest City, Ark.; Stuttgart, Ark.; Covington, Tenn.; Osceola, Ark.; Amory, Miss.; Itta Bena, Miss.; Sardis and Grenada, Miss. The film was booked solidly for the first ten days in June. It will shortly return to Memphis, where it will be shown at several of the airdomes and outlying theaters.

The management of the Airdome Theater Company, of Nashville, Tenn., recently booked a full week with the Starnes Stock Company. Vaudeville and moving pictures were shown between scheduled acts.

Marvin Wiles, of the Crescent Amusement Company, Nashville, Tenn., recently made a moving picture of the post-offce of the city. The picture showed the heads of the various departments, mail distributing department, the men leaving the station, and the sub-stations around town. A parade of the entire force was also made in front of the camera. The rural equipment brought up the rear of the parade. These pictures will probably prove interesting in the smaller towns throughout the state.

NOTES FROM SOUTHWEST.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE new Fort Worth, Tex., censor board will criticize pictures as well as censor them. Mrs. J. V. Brewer, secretary of the board, issued the following statement to the Mayor:

"We have attempted to see every change of program, and with some assistance have almost succeeded. We found many good pictures, some medium, a few questionable and two of such a nature we felt it our duty to report to you our condemnation. We felt that the character of the pictures has improved and is improving, and we have found there exists a kindly feeling of co-operation from the proprietors. Our first call on them assured the picture show owner that we would pass no white slavery pictures.

Vandals put a block of wood in the ventilator shaft of the Dell theater, at Stuttgart, Ark. When the fan was started it was damaged. Later cayenne pepper was placed so that it was distributed throughout the theater by the fans. Still later that night the front door was broken and the electric piano badly damaged. An effort to get at the projection apparatus failed.

Chaplin pictures are in the limelight more than usual. The Grand, at San Antonio, Tex., had amateurs compete to see who could get the best Chaplin make up. The Queen, at Waco, Tex., announced it would "throw a Chaplin fit four days." The Nickel, at Waco, took the New Essanay release, "Work," and the first day ran it continuously on the theory that there were plenty of people that wanted to see nothing but Chaplin.

It made a great impression on the newspaper men especially. "Scandal" will be booked here by a local exhibitor soon.

About 300 La Grange people will take part in the performance. The pageant is divided into fourteen episodes, depicting the historical phase of Indian life from the landing of Columbus to the days of the Puritans.

SAME FILMS TOO OFTEN.

Moving picture patrons are beginning to complain in Atlanta because of the same films being shown too often at the different theaters. Especially is this true of the four and five-reel features.

Operators Want New Scale

Kansas City Local of Operators' Federation Makes Demands That Would Almost Double the Cost of Projecting Films—Charges for Operating and for Special Branches of Work—Exhibitors' League Formed.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

WAR clouds have begun to gather in Kansas City between the exhibitors and the moving picture machine operators. In this war that is about to break the Federation of American Picture Machine Operators local union is the aggressor. They startled the exhibitors last week by sending out letters telling briefly of their intention of making a new scale, which will go into effect in the near future. The new scale will include charges for operating the machines and handling the films and for all other separate branches of the work that they are expected to do. The new scale will about double the expense of operation, according to the exhibitors.

The exhibitors were recently recipients of unsigned letters urging immediate cooperation in the matter. The anonymous letters were at first attributed to one of the most active exhibitors, but he claims that he had nothing to do in the matter. The exhibitors have all taken the stand in the matter as if their fight against these charges should be a most secret one. They have all refused to say in just what way they intend to oppose the new scale and all have refused to show the letters that they have received.

However, some one let the cat out of the bag. It is known that many of the exhibitors with the larger interests held a meeting for the purpose of discussing the situation. D. F. Dugan, of the Eastern theater, was elected president, and W. Quade, of the Bonaventure theater, secretary of the New Kansas City Exhibitors' League.

Mr. Quade refused positively to discuss the new organization or its purpose. He says: "The letters which we received were very mysterious, and although at first attributed to me, I have succeeded in acquitting myself. I am unable to say just what action the league will take in the matter or to yet give out any of the business that it has already transacted. The league is made up of the exhibitors owning the largest interests in the city, and although not barred very few of the people operating smaller shows have joined. Meetings will be held weekly either at a hotel or in a moving picture theater. The trouble that is now in hand seems to affect all the shows. Authough I cannot now state just what it is, it will, if successful, put many of the theaters out of business."

Mr. Quade says that he is very desirous to get the business in motion as early as possible to ward off the blow that threatens to kill the exhibiting game here. The film exchanges generally have not heard of this trouble or at least the lack of information seems dense. It is not known just who was behind the organization of the exhibitors, but it is known that the large amusement companies that are operating several theaters here have a hand in some place.

FIRED ELECTRIC THEATER.

The Electric theater, in Kansas City, Kan., was the victim of an incendiary the night of June 14. Persons passing along the street about midnight heard a smashing at the front door. They burst in the door and discovered a fire on the stage. The fire department was called and extinguished the blaze before more than about $2,000 damage was done. The fire chief discovered what looked like the cause of the trouble—two five-gallon cans that had contained gasoline. It was very plain that somebody had started the fire on the stage with gasoline, and had tried to escape by the front door, but was unsuccessful, probably becoming confused after the dastardly deed was executed, and had then got away by a rear exit. A. F. Baker, manager of the theater, said that gasoline was never used or kept about the theater. George and Edward Grubel and Mr. Baker, owners, have offered a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of the incendiary.

BACK TO FIVE CENT SHOW.

A. Durrin, manager of the Twelfth Street theater, last week changed his show from a 10-cent one to a 5-cent one. He is now using the first run Universal program service exclusively and is not showing any of the long features. He says that he believes that the show is in much better shape since the change was made and he will continue to run the Universal service throughout the summer. It was only a short while ago that Mr. Durrin changed from the 5-cent class into the 10-cent class and began showing feature pictures. He says that the first few weeks paid him well, but during the hot weather the patronage fell off to a certain extent and he thought it advisable to go back to the 5-cent show. The Twelfth Street theater is on a street that is lined with 5-cent shows and it is almost impossible for a 10-cent one to run any length of time with large success.

KANSAS CITY GLEANINGS.

J. A. Schnack, of Larned, Kan., was in the city recently and visited the exchanges here. He was well pleased with the business done with the "Who Pays" serial, and is looking for the next release of its kind. Mr. Schnack says that the business in Larned has been good all summer and that he does not believe that he will have one poor audience all the year round.

Archie Blue, of Salina, Kan., was in from the wheat fields, visiting the film exchanges. He called on Mr. Edwards at the Pathe Exchange and confided to him that the crops were in the best of shape and that they would harvest a great amount of money this year, for the farmers will all attend the moving picture shows when they get to the town.

The Kriterion Film Company recently opened offices in the Glody building, at Kansas City. J. W. Cotter, general manager of the company, established the office and placed E. A. Liles in charge of the branch. Mr. Liles has had a great deal of experience in moving pictures and he says that his branch is in the field to stay.

Drops Summer Vaudeville

In Louisville, the Management of the B. F. Keith Theater Drops Former Custom of Cheap Vaudeville During the Hot Months—Will Show Feature Pictures Exclusively—Vaudeville Again in Fall.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE management of the B. F. Keith theater in Louisville will discontinue summer vaudeville at ten cents and show moving pictures. The theater was opened Sunday, June 20, and had as its first attraction Fox's production, "The Plunderer," in which William Farnum plays a part similar to the one he took in "The Spoilers." Other plays booked to follow are "Hearts in Exile," "The Millionaire Baby," "The Spendthrift" and the "Sporting Duchess."

The company will reopen with vaudeville in the fall. Louisvillians are not at all strong for summer or cheap vaudeville, which has never taken very well in the downtown theaters. At the parks it has done fairly well.

WANT LESS PADDING.

Numerous comments have been heard lately in Louisville among the moving picture patrons concerning overplaying certain feature films. Moving picture patrons are now becoming so thoroughly versed in good pictures that a film which could easily be played in two or three reels, but which is drawn out to five or six reels, proves more or less irksome. This condition is especially true in hot weather when it is hard to hold the attention of a big audience even with very interesting films in which every reel shows action throughout. Instances have been noted where the star in the picture was overplayed, and the pictures were so slow that interest was lost in the plot. This condition is brought about more by hot weather than any other cause, as it is practically impossible to keep large theaters, seating a thousand or so perspiring persons, cool and comforable.

BUILDING C. F. F. STUDIO.

The Children's Feature Film Corporation, recently incorporated to manufacture "Aladdin Films," is rapidly getting ready to start producing pictures in Louisville. A lease has just been closed with Ed Alvey, owner of a large "pool" room in South Louisville, for the use of the building at a very attractive figure. This building was formerly used by the bookmakers when Louisville was practically a wide open gambling town, but has not been used for several years. It covers a plot of ground 105 x 65 feet and all operations will be handled on the ground floor. Glazers and carpenters are now making estimates on the work required to build a wing on the west side and put the building in first-class shape.

It is proposed to operate three stages so that three productions can be made at one and the same time if necessary. Around the west side and the front will extend the property room, kitchenette, dark room, dressing rooms, rest room, smonking room, private offices and general offices. The kitchenette and dining rooms will be used when films have to be rushed straight through without interruption, and meals will be served on the grounds. A downtown office will also be maintained. B. W. Conant, general manager of the company, reports that things are now coming along in nice shape and he is very much pleased with the progress made.

SWITOW NOT WORRYING.

M. Switow, of Louisville, president of the Switow Amusement Company and the Phoenix Amusement Company of Lexington, Ky., said that building operations had not been resumed on the theater at Lexington, due to the failure of the contracting firm. However, the bonding company is losing $25 a day which is a forfeit for every day that the contracting firm is behind in finishing the theater on a specified date. Mr. Switow said that he really preferred opening a little later than had originally been planned, as warm weather would be experienced in the early fall, and he preferred to inaugurate pictures at a season when the weather was cool and good crowds could be secured from the start.

THEATER OWNER ENGAGED.

Announcement has just been made in Louisville of the engagement of Miss Mary Shreve Lyons of this city to Dennis H. Long, secretary-treasurer and chief stockholder in the Alamo theater, owned by the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company. Mr. Long is a son of George J. Long, the millionaire turfman. He is a college bred man and an all-round good athlete. Miss Lyons is the daughter of Harry J. Lyons, a wealthy stock brocker of the city. Miss Lyons for several years has been one of the champion tennis players of this section of the country and is highly educated and talented in many ways. The engagement is one of the big social discussions of the season in Louisville society. George J. Long owns Bashford Manor, one of the handsomest estates in Kentucky, and one of the largest thoroughbred stock farms.

NOTED IN LOUISVILLE.

Frank Schoeffel, vice-president of the Palace Amusement Company, which formerly operated the Palace theater at Shelby and Rupp streets, has just filed notices of the dissolution of the corporation. The notices were filed in local papers on June 5, 12, 19 and 26. This theater was closed when practically the same stockholders opened the new Shelby theater.

Louis Dittmar, manager of the Majestic Amusement Company, is making several changes in the theater. The entire entrance lobby has been torn out and is being done over. A scaffolding and canvas platform was erected in the meantime to prevent any possible damage resulting from falling materials. On the interior of the theater heavy brass rails, four inches in diameter, have been set back of the rear rows of seats to prevent big crowds between night shows from jostling or annoying persons who are seated in the last row. Heavy, turned mahogany posts are inserted every few feet to carry the brass railings. The idea is a capital one, as the jam at the rear of the theater has on many occasions disturbed the people in this last row considerably.

The Clifton theater and the Broadway theater are both represented this season in the Juvenile League, which is composed of the boys in the advanced classes of the grade schools, or boys under a sixteen-year age limit. The two teams were tied for second place recently when both had won six games and lost two. The theaters get a good deal of advertising out of this sport at a very low cost.

John S. Purnett, of Jeffersonville, Ind., recently closed a lease at Shelbyville, Ky., on the Hartford building, which was formerly occupied by the Stag saloon, which he will use as a motion picture theater. Immediate possession was taken and remodeling work was commenced at once. The theater will be ready to start shortly after July 1. Mr. Purnett has decided to call the new picture house a rather unusual name, that being "The Green Dragon." Mr. Purnett was recently in Louisville and purchased 500 seats, two Powers 6A motor driven machines, a curtain, fireproof booth and other equipment.

E. S. Sullivan, of Cecilia, Ky., was recently in Louisville, and closed contracts for equipment with which to start three motion picture theaters which will seat 400 persons each, at Cecilia, Grayson Springs and Stithton. Powers machines were purchased for all of the theaters.

The Sanders Amusement Company of Louisville, composed of Henry B. Sanders, Andrew F. Sanders and Putnam Sanders, is now operating two airdomes, one in Crescent Hill and one on West Broadway, known as the Crescent Airdome and Broadway Sky Dome. The company has just sent out some very attractive blotters which were delivered by a boy throughout the office buildings in the downtown district. The blotters carried a message for tired hot men, showing that the company controlled the coolest spots in the city, and had just the place for muscular relaxation. Failure to state the locations of the theaters on the advertising marred its value somewhat, however.

The Preston Amusement Company is finding a good deal of use for its airdome just now in spite of the fact that rain is being experienced more this summer than for several previous one. The Preston, with its tight theater for bad weather, is continuing to get the public regardless of weather conditions, while both airdomes and theaters not running in conjunction have felt the climatic changes more or less. The Highland theater, on the Bardstown Road, is another local concern which is adapted to any kind of weather. This concern operates a theater on one side of the street, and the Baxter airdome on the opposite side. The shows are swapped backward and forward according to weather conditions.

At Albany, Ky., J. H. Miller is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater which will have a seating capacity of 275 people. A Powers machine and other equipment has been purchased and the show will shortly be started.

What promises to prove a paying venture is that of the Mammoth Cave Cafeteria Company, at Mammoth Cave, Ky., which has just purchased a complete moving picture outfit with which to give shows in a building which is 100 x 100 feet. It was necessary to install a private lighting plant to operate the machine.

Capture San Francisco

Universal Beauty Party Reaches Coast—A Glorious Day at the Fair—Trip to Mount Tamalpais with Dinners and Dances Make Visit a Noteworthy Event—Could Well Have Stayed Longer.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Universal Beauty Special, bearing sixty of the prettiest girls to be found in all the United States, arrived at the goal of its transcontinental trip promptly on time and San Francisco was not long in realizing the honor that had been bestowed upon it. Shortly after the arrival the girls were taken to the local Universal Exchange, which had been tastefully decorated for the occasion, and then sight-seeing trips through the city were in order. On Thursday evening they were the guests of the management of the Tivoli theater, and the announcement that they would be present packed this big play-house. Following the regular performance a vaudeville entertainment was furnished by talent from the Empress theater contributed by Sid Grauman, and a buffet lunch was served on the stage to the girls and hundreds of invited guests. Dancing was indulged in on the stage and in the spacious lobby and it was early in the morning when the guests began to leave. Among those who enjoyed the entertainment were Carl Laemmle, Joe Brandt and Morris L. Markowitz, representing the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.; Ruth Roland, Art Smith, the aviator, and his wife, and practically all of the exchange men of the city.

On Friday the visiting beauties were taken on a trip to Mount Tamalpais, through what was declared to be the most beautiful scenery they had found on the whole journey. Lunch was served on the mountain and in the evening, after the return to the city had been made, a ball was given in their honor at the Hotel Manx. The entire office force at the local exchange was given a vacation on this day to enable all to enjoy the festivities. On Saturday the visitors were taken to the Exposition grounds and watched the great harness meet, after which the various palaces were inspected. In the evening a banquet was tendered them at the Old Faithful Inn, and later they visited some of the leading attractions on the Zone, as the amusement district is known. A longer stay was made here than was originally planned, and it was regretted that a longer stop could not be made, as the time allotted did not permit of a thorough inspection of the Exposition, but it was impossible to rearrange the schedule.

REGULAR HOUSES WANT PREFERENCE IN FILMS.

The tendency of late in large vaudeville houses to feature leading moving picture productions, and to reduce prices to the level of the exclusive moving picture theaters, has brought about a condition that is causing exhibitors to take action. These combination houses insist on first-run pictures, and so far have been successful in securing them. Exhibitors take the stand that the film exchanges are dependent upon picture theaters for their success, and not upon vaudeville houses, and are refusing in many instances to book films that have first been shown at these houses. The exhibitors of Alameda County, through their local organization, have gone on record to this effect.

Price, Pacific Coast manager for the V-L-S-E., Inc., has returned to his San Francisco headquarters from Los Angeles, where he opened a branch exchange, and will shortly visit Salt Lake City on a similar mission. TO HANDLE EDUCATIONAL FILM

The Atlas Film Corporation has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $10,000 for the purpose of handling film used in churches, schools, lodges and other places outside of regular theaters. The incorporators are George E. Chamberlain, F. E. Guenther and W. H. Waite, all of whom have had considerable experience in film exchange work. Quarters have been fitted up at 114 Golden Gate avenue, and already a considerable stock of film of an educational nature has been secured. Additional subjects will be added as soon as they can be purchased and a strong bid will be made for patronage. This exchange promises to fill a long felt need in this territory and has the indorsement of school authorities and clergymen, who have found diffculty in the past in securing subjects to meet their particular requirements.

AMERICAN THEATER COMPANY INCORPORATED.

The American Theater Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 by Edwin F. James, J. H. Christie, C. S. Rogers and M. Christie, to conduct the American theater, on Market street. This house was opened as a moving picture theater several months ago by Mr. James and is now closed for extensive alterations.

Clover, who has had charge of the Tivoli theater for some time, manager of the De Luxe theater at San Jose, and William Hannell of the latter house will be placed in charge of the Tivoli. Mr. Clover is well known in San Jose, having been resident manager of the De Luxe before.

"The Sins of Ignorance Bring a Life of Sorrow To Thousands of Girls"

Mary Ann was all sweetness and innocence. She lived in a world of dreams, peopled with gallant knights and dashing heroes of her story books.

When her hero came and told her of London Town, with its lure of lights and music, it was an easy matter to persuade her to run away. In a short time her house of cards tumbled down. The tinsel gone, her romance dead, she crept back to the village in tears.

Her broken hearted mother took her to the curate for advice. In the quiet of his study she sobbed out her story.

"I didn't know," she wept. "I didn't realize the harm. I had never been told."

The curate looked out of the window and saw his own daughter, Effie, dancing in the sunlight, happy in her youth, exalted in love. She had been carefully educated, safe from contact with the outside world.

A great light dawned on the curate. It was not Mary Ann's fault that she had answered the lure of London Town. It was not her fault that life had dealt her so severe a blow.

The curate hastened to his wife and demanded that she instruct Effie of those impulses that enter so seriously into the lives of all girls. But his wife was horrified. Her mother had never told her. It shocked her to think of telling the truths of life. And she refused.

Then there happened an incident in the life of Effie which aroused the curate to the fury of action. Through her innocence she had committed an indiscretion. Then she was told and she was saved.

And there arose from the curate's heart a great prayer for the mothers who avert life's issues; for the fathers who delude themselves; for the unutterable piteousness of the blindness of virtue.

This startling revelation of the mysteries of life and love is made in Cosmo Hamilton's masterpiece, "The Blindness of Virtue," which Essanay has produced in a great six-act photoplay, released through all the branch offices of the V. L. S. E., Inc.

Clemmer Visits Studios

Spokane Film Magnate Back From Visit to California Gives World Man Interesting Account of Picture People He Met and of Los Angeles Studios—Saw Hundreds Enjoying Sight of Films in Making.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DR. H. S. CLEMMER, of the Clemmer and Casino theaters, and who is also interested in the Clemmer theater, Seattle, took a vacation trip to San Francisco and Los Angeles and returned a couple of days ago. He visited the moving picture studios and the moving picture city near Los Angeles and upon his return said:

"After getting our passes from the head offices the rest was easy. The first man we spotted at the Lasky studios was Theodore Roberts. It seemed like meeting an old friend to see the old film favorite come stalking across the lawn. I introduced myself and he showed us around. He is a fine genial chap and took pride in showing us his dressing room, which he declares is the best there.

"We saw and were introduced to Blanche Sweet. She is just as sweet personally as her name would indicate and a delightful girl. We also met Myrtle Stedman and were very much impressed with her charming personality. We found William C. De Mille, the popular Lasky director, hard at work directing a production and too busy to talk much.

"I encountered an old boyhood friend in James McGee, now manager of the Selig interests at Los Angeles. At the Griffith studio we saw most of the people of the Mutual and Reliance features at work. In the Universal City we encountered Hobart Bosworth, who is now working for the Universal people. They admit the public to see the making of films, charging a small fee, and 1,200 people were on hand that afternoon.

"At the Bosworth studio I found another old friend, E. J. Atkinson, who now heads the producing end of that company's operations. We saw the making of Keystone comedies first and the whacks of slapstick comedy are considerably more realistic and strenuous when seen in real life than when portrayed on the screen.

"In one of the cafes we saw Mabel Normand and Ruth Roland, both very pretty attractive girls, surrounded by and stared at by crowds of people everywhere they go. That is true of all the moving picture stars. They seem to be known by everybody.

"On one of our automobile trips we discovered the Essanay people making a comedy in front of a restaurant with Charles Chaplin as the feature. He is by far the funnier in the flesh on the street than he appears on the screen. And hundreds of spectators were roped off, enjoying his antics immensely.

"The natives are every bit as much interested as the tourists. You see 'location work' everywhere, in front of palatial homes, by the seashore, on the drives, in the suburbs, and in fact everywhere you go. In every group of actors you recognize somebody you have seen and it is like being acquainted with them. Citizens willingly donated the use of their fine homes for the motion picture people.

"We visited the studio of the Famous Players, but it was a holiday and nobody was working. We viewed the field of action where D. W. Griffith filmed his famous $500,000 production, 'The Birth of a Nation,' based on 'The Clansman.' We saw the complete picture in Los Angeles and it fairly made us hang on the brass rail in front of us for the three hours it was running."

SPOKANE BREVITIES.

James McConahey, manager of the Best Show, recently signed a contract for Pathe features and reports that he is doing a fairly successful business and that the films are pleasing the audiences.

The Casino closed a contract during the week for the V. S. L. E. features and is expected to show the first production under this contract July 4. It will probably be "The Eagle's Nest," with Romaine Fielding and Edwin Arden appearing in the leading roles.

"The Battle," with Blanche Sweet in the leading role, proved a good drawing card at the Class A.

Mary Fuller and Josephine West are favorites with many Spokane audiences.

Mary Fuller and Matt Moore appeared at the Rex theater during the week just closed in "The Honor of the Ormsbys."

"The Eternal City," by Hall Caine, and made by the Famous Players under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, and featuring Pauline Frederick, has been booked for the Clemmer.

LOCAL FACES IN LINCOLN HIGHWAY FILM.

Special to Motion Picture World for Indiana Trade News Service.

LINCOLN Highway day was celebrated at LaPorte and several thousand citizens got into a film that is being made of the principal cities on the highway.

General Counsel H. C. Osterman and his official party in four cars spent two days in Laporte taking pictures of the parade. The feature was the selection by the official party of Miss Dorothy Dolan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Dolan, of Laporte, as the prettiest girl in Indiana. In each state the prettiest girl is selected and this girl becomes the Lincoln Highway girl of the state.

Carl Fisher, "father" of the Highway, posed for the film. One picture shows him stuck in the mud, a picture of dejection and disgust, then he has a vision, and is shown riding down a stretch of road with a seraphic (in all dictionaries) smile on his face. Then the picture comes back to mud again, and Fisher is shown jumping to his feet with the words "I'll do it" almost audible they are so well registered.

Zaring & Rhodes have sold the Delight theater, Twenty-fourth street and College avenue, Indianapolis, to J. Woolley. The theater is running the Criterion program.

COOL BREEZES IN-DOORS.

The Orepheum theater, Hartford City, Ind., has installed a ventilator in the roof, the Murat, Indianapolis, is serving ice cooled air, the Isis offers a cool change every three minutes, and the Palms gets the atmosphere with a palm out in front, into which an electric fan shoots its cooling breath. All indications that in Indiana, at least, summer is at hand, and the lure of ourdoors is real competition for the picture exhibitors.

WISDOM IN BROWN COUNTY.

Abe Martin, the Brown county philosopher, says that a movie actor plays jest as good before empty seats as before a crowded house.

BLINN THEATER CORP. ELECTS.

Officers and directors for the Blinn Theater Corporation were elected at Frankfort, Ind. It was the twelfth annual meeting of the stockholders. The directors named were Jesse Blinn, T. C. Paris, J. B. Meifield, H. F. Campbell, Dr. Charles G. Chittick, W. R. Hines and Marvin Hufford. The directors then chose the following officers: President, Jesse C. Blinn; vice-president, T. C. Paris; secretary, Marvin Hufford; treasurer, H. F. Campbell. W. R. Hines, former secretary, is retiring for business reasons which make it necessary for him to leave the city.

The John W. Ruskin jungle pictures drew exceptional crowds at the Lyric theater, Indianapolis.

INDIANA JOTTINGS.

The Victory theater, Union City, is installing a new Edison machine which it is believed will improve the projection.

Manager Bailey of Valparaiso, Ind., will attempt to open Sunday afternoon with a religious program. Manager Bailey is the new owner of the Lincoln theater.

The Gem theater, Plymouth, Ind., is installing a new motiograph.

The Summer theater, Corydon, Ind., has added a canvas top, and expects to give a show hereafter, rain or shine.

The New Union theater, South Illinois street, Indianapolis, was entered by burglars and a valuable lens and an electric fan was taken. The picture screen was cut.

Harry Bassett, Joe Rolles and Otto Ray were a committee to call on Mayor Joseph E. Bell to protest against alleged interference with union pickets in front of the New Union theater, Indianapolis. The union operators charge that a picket who was arrested for assault and battery was held under $1,000 bond.

Guy Kinman and Carl Thompson are building an airdome in Sullivan, Ind.

Joe Schnitzer, manager of the Central Film Service, Indianapolis, went to Pittsburg this week to visit his parents.

The Lyric theater, Connersville, Ind., has been sold to Roy Wheeler. Angelo Iammarino, the former owner, is going to remove to Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Iammarino has been running Fox and Universal pictures and Mr. Wheeler announces that for the time being he will make no change in program.

John H. Pruett has bought The Royal, Terre Haute, from Charles Roberts. The show has been under the management of Harvey Lowry. Mr. Bruett expects to install an electric piano and will change the program.

Ora Garretson has bought the Warren, Ind., picture show from Charles Foust.

W. A. Laverty, manager of the Montezuma Mineral Springs Pool and Airdome has put on the United Film Company service. Laverty's pool and airdome are doing a good business.

The Edison, Royal Center, Ind., has added a new machine, according to Manager Ed Howard.

The Majestic theater, Evansville, Ind., is to be leased to Buffalo parties according to Philip Skora, the owner.

Russell Premer, restaurant keeper at Bluffton, Ind., has been ordered to move. A picture theater, soon to be started, has leased the quarters.

The Orpheum theater, Hartford City, is using amateurs every Tuesday night.

The Tri-City Theater Company, which owns the Sipe theater, Kokomo, the Wallace theater, Peru, and another house in Anderson, Ind., declared a seven per cent. dividend. The company contemplates the erection of a new house in Kokomo at Main and Taylor streets, an old residence on the site being wrecked now.

Herbert Moore is building an airdome at Jamestown, Ind.

Roy Shanks, owner of the Kai Gee, Rochester, Ind., is opening an airdome which he calls the Kai Gee Garden. Some advertising sense to the choice of the new name, as all the advertising value of a well known name is added to the new enterprise.

H. M. Personett is opening the Sky Dome in Richmond, Ind.

The Winchester, Ind., airdome has installed cypress seats. Last year they were pine, and pine exudes resin and resin ruins clothes, hence the cypress seats this year.

"The Diamond from the Sky," first chapter, drew three record-breaking crowds for Manager H. Harrell of the Strand theater, Oriental and Washington street, Indianapolis. The house seats 709 people and more than 2,200 tickets were sold for the three shows. Extra ticket takers were used.

Frank Green has opened an airdome at State and Fletcher avenues, Indianapolis, and is using the Universal program.

MANAGER OF THE SAVOY WAS IN THE BOOTH.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE coroner's jury at Hancock decided that the death of 17-year-old Bert Omanas in the operating room of the Savoy theater June 3 was accidental. The verdict was: "We, the undersigned jurors, find that the late Bert Omans came to his death through an accident due to an unprotected switch while employed as assistant in the operating room at the Savoy theater June 3."

Testimony at the inquest revealed little.

Manager Ruttenberg of the Savoy takes exception to the statement, in a circular sent out by the state fire marshal, that the boy had been in charge of the booth a few minutes before the fire. Ruttenberg claims that he was in the booth with young Omans when the fire occurred, in fact for several minutes preceding the accident, and that the only time his helper, the deceased, was alone in the booth was at the end of the first performance. The fire occurred during the second show.

The Savoy has made an additional exit from the booth, has purchased a Simplex machine and has been redecorating preparatory to reopening.

BUTTERFIELD BUILDING IN JACKSON.

A new theater to be known as the Orpheum will be constructed on Main street, in Jackson, by W. J. Butterfield. The house, which will cost $60,000, will seat 1,250. Construction will start about July 1. It will be devoted to pictures and vaudeville. Construction features will include a gold-fibre screen, Kimball pipe-organ, ladies' retiring room and smoking room. The entrance between two stores will be arranged with a garden wall effect in rough brick with coping and from this there will spring lattice work covered with vines.

MICHIGAN NEWS NOTES.

The city council at St. Johns has instructed the marshal to see that moving picture shows are closed on Sundays.

A movement for local censorship in Kalamazoo is reported.

"The motion picture is a wonderful boon to the deaf," said Willis Hubbard, a member of the faculty of the Michigan School for the Deaf at a meeting of the state association for deaf at Flint. The three hundred delegates saw films of an address given by Mr. Hubbard at the national convention in Cleveland in 1913.

Manager Sullivan of the Grand, at Escanaba, is conducting a voting contest with an Overland auto as capital prize.

Manager Frank Anderson of the Star, at Cadillac, has contracted with the World Film Company of Detroit, to use that service.

Roberts & Henman have sold the Princess, at Albion, to D. C. Snuggs and Robert De Noylles, of Jackson. Snuggs was treasurer of the Victor Amusement Company at Jackson, and De Noylles was manager of the Temple theater, in that city.

Leroy Hornbeck has been made manager of the Fuller theater, at Kalamazoo.

The Apollo, at Holland, was closed for three days to be fitted out with a new summer dress.

The Bijou, at Albion, played a return date of "The Pit."

Turnaway business at the Family theater, in Greenville, was caused by running slides of local celebrities taken unawares.

A. J. Hicks has moved the Gem, at St. Johns, to a new location.

The Aladdin, at Bay City, had motion pictures of the Flag Day exercises supplemented by slides of "people you know."

"Dreamland," a new motion picture house at Reading, has been opened.

Ingersoll on Film Prices

Prominent Detroit Theater Man Discusses Exhibitor's Side of Higher Cost of Making Pictures—Manufacturers May Be Asking Too Much—Increase in Number of Theaters Aids Makers at Showmen's Expense.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FREDERICK INGERSOLL, president of the Knickerbocker Theater Co., which operates the Knickerbocker theater at Jefferson avenue and the Belle Isle bridge approach, said to the writer the other day, "What's the matter with the motion picture business?" I answered, "Nothing so far as I can see."

Mr. Ingersoll said: "It looks very much to me as if exhibitors were paying too much for the film. With competition getting keener and very little opportunity to raise the prices above 15 to 25 cents for an outskirt theater, the exhibitor stands little chance of showing an increase in his attendance from week to week. Yet he must pay higher prices for film than ever before. Now, the argument that the film salesmen use is their manufacturers must pay more for stars, and that they are putting on the productions better than ever before. That is true, but that does not justify the asking of more money, because where the manufacturer had an opportunity to sell a dozen people in a big city, he now sells two or three dozen; in this way, he can offset the extra money he is putting into his production.

"But consider the poor exhibitor; on all sides of him they are building theaters just as beautiful as his; in some cases they are larger; it is out of the question to raise prices for one or two days just because the exhibitor is presenting an expensive film. The exhibitor must realize that often his patrons put up with a poor picture, hence the 'extra good' pictures simply offset the others. The question is just this: how can the exhibitor get more business to meet the extra expense he must go to get good features? It looks to me as if the exhibitors were getting the worst end of it. As for the manufacturer, he is reaping the benefit of the thousands of new theaters being built. I have given the matter a great deal of thought, and in my opinion unless the exhibitor is able to get his film for less money than he is now paying so that he can, to a degree, offset the loss of business which is sure to come by the keen competition, the time is not far distant when hundreds of moving picture theaters are going to discontinue business.

"The hand-writing is on the wall. Take the Knickerbocker theater for an example; it is doing a satisfactory business, but the chances are that it will never do much more than it is doing right now; we are making a little money, but what has the future in store for us, more theaters being erected to take part of our business away, on top of which we are asked to pay more for our film. I don't deny the fact the manufacturers are paying more to produce them, but they are also getting more from each exhibitor and there are more exhibitors to sell. Show me a single moving picture theater to-day in Detroit that is doing a bigger business to-day than a year ago. They are few and far between.

"The manufacturer and the exhibitor should get closer affiliated. It seems to me that the manufacturer has not been quite as considerate of the exhibitor as he might be. The manufacturer by taking less money from the exhibitor for his film is going to help prolong the life of hundreds of theaters which otherwise are doomed to failure."

WHY THE NORWOOD WAS BUILT.

Not every owner of a moving picture theater expects to make a "mint" of money. There are really some very interesting reasons why some of them are built. In this connection, the new Norwood, located on Woodward avenue, near the Grand Boulevard, is worthy of comment.

The owner is Charles Rall, wealthy real estate operator and former confectioner. To a representative of the Moving Picture World he said: "The reason I built the Norwood was not so much as a money-making proposition as it was to draw people to the particular block in which it is located. Another gentleman and myself own most of that block; we understood that new theaters were to be built near us on the opposite side of the street. We have all good tenants in the block and we wanted to do something to help retain the trade for them. We figured out what the rent would bring by leasing one of the stores, but decided that we could do better, using the store for an entrance and lobby, putting the theater on property in the rear which was bringing in no revenue.

"Fortunately, the new Norwood is doing much better than we expected. It is doing almost capacity every night. It is beginning to realize a good profit on our investment, we are bringing a lot of new people to the stores in the same block which greatly pleases our tenants. But if we only broke a little over even we would not complain because, as I said before, our main object is to help our tenants." H. W. Irons is manager of the Norwood.

KUNSKY FORMS SCENIC CO.

John H. Kunsky, operating eight theaters in Detroit, as well as a film exchange, carpentry, electrical and sign shops for the moving picture industry, has formed a new scenic company to make all kinds of stage settings, scenery and effects of all descriptions for motion picture theaters. He will have a complete studio with artists for turning out the highest class of work. For the present the studio will be located at the Washington theater, where everything is in readiness to carry on such work. The office will be at 2206 Dime Bank building. Not only will this new enterprise furnish material for the Kunsky theaters, but it will be in a position to take orders from any exhibitor in Detroit or the state of Michigan.

DETROIT FLASHES.

C. A. Hoffman and Graham Hoffman, of the Palace theater, Detroit, have become financially interested in the Hippodrome theater which is to be erected in Saginaw, Mich. The company has been recognized and the name changed to the Palace. Offices will continue in the Dime Bank building, Detroit. The original intention was to make this new playhouse a theater for vaudeville and musical comedy, but it has now been decided to devote same to high-class photoplays exclusively.

Manager McGee of the Majestic theater reports that all records were broken for Monday, June 21. "We did as much business on that day as we have on any day since we have been operating outside of our opening and holidays," said Mr. McGee. The attractions on June 21 were "The Sporting Duchess" (V-S-L-E) and pictures of the recent Board of Commerce boat cruise which were made by the Atlas Motion Picture Co. The cruise was participated in by 600 of Detroit's leading business men. Most of them were on hand to see the pictures.

The Garden theater, operated by John H. Kunsky, has raised its prices. Under the new scale, there are no 20 cent seats, regular evening prices being 10, 15 and 25. The Garden is now under the management of Robert Von der Goltz, who recently joined the Kunsky ranks.

Tax on Exchanges

St. Louis Board of Aldermen Considering Measure That Will Impose License Fee on Renters of Films—Bill Has Been Reported Favorably by Committee on Legislation—How Fees May Be Graded.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE bill which was introduced to the Board of Aldermen by member Scholl, which provided that a lencense fee of five hundred dollars should be collected from all persons, firms or corporations which sell, lease or rent films to others, was reported on favorably by the Legislation Committee of the Board of Aldermen at a meeting held on June 22. A number of amendments which have been added to the bill reduces the license fee to $50 a year for the first $50,000 of gross rentals received by the exchange, and $25 a year additional for each $50,000, or fraction thereof above the first $50,000 in rental receipts. The bill was sent to the engrossment committee, and will come up for action at the next regular meeting of the Board of Aldermen.

NEW FILM DEVELOPING PLANT.

Erker Brothers, the photograph and optical goods dealers at 608 Olive street, have added a moving picture film developing department to their establishment. The laboratory, which is on the fourth floor of the Erker Building, is complete in every way, and the firm is prepared to handle anything in the film developing line. Mr. Oscar Nedelhorst, for several years in charge of the developing plant at the studio of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, at 25th and Montgomery streets, is in charge of the Erker Brothers laboratory.

BIG FEATURES ARE POPULAR IN MISSOURI TOWNS.

Jos. M. Carr has returned to St. Louis after a three months' trip throughout the state booking and boosting "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Mr. Carr says that film conditions throughout the country districts in the matter of houses and equipments are improving all along, and that the country managers are always anxious to book good features. Mr. Carr visited St. Joseph, Joplin, Springfield, Sedalia, Warrensburg, Monett, and all the other important towns in the state.

FILMS TO REPLACE FIREWORKS.

The Big Play Day, that will include all the children in the city, that the St. Louis Park Department is planning for July 4, will include moving pictures as a part of the entertainment to be offered the people. Pictures will be shown at many of the parks and playgrounds on that evening, taking the place of fireworks.

HENRY SLOCUM RESIGNS.

Henry Slocum, assistant manager of the General Film Exchange at 3610 Olive street, has resigned. Mr. Slocum, who has devoted all his time and energy to the film renting business, will take an extended rest during the next few months in a quiet town on the east side of the Mississippi River.

WORLD CORRESPONDENT GETS SERPENT'S TOOTH.

Rex Weber, who is known as the youngest moving picture director in the country, and Mrs. Weber, whose professional name is Marjorie La Fern, arrived in St. Louis last week with negatives of the five-reel feature, "Whirlwind Dick," which Mr. Weber directed in San Antonio, Tex., recently. The films will be developed at the new plant just stablished by Erker Brothers in this city. Mr. Weber speaks in high terms of the Texas country; the climate and scenery in and about San Antonio is ideal for staging any kind of picture. Mr. Weber brought a number of rattlesnake fangs from Texas, one of which he kindly presented to the World correspondent. (We hope the pesky thing has been "denatured.")

ST. LOUIS SHORTER ITEMS.

A new airdome at Compton and Easton avenues has just been opened by Wm. McDonald. The outdoor theater will seat 2,000 patrons and will show an exclusive moving picture program.

The Cherokee theater, which has been under the management of Geo. H. Kern, has been taken over by a new firm, composed of Edward Westfield and T. Guy Roberts. Mr. Westfield is the well known dramatic director and manager of the Westfield players, and Mr. Roberts was assistant manager of the Cherokee before the new arrangement. The policy of the house will be changed to an all-picture bill, with the exception of Sunday night, when a vaudeville addition will be made to the regular program. The price of admission to the Cherokee will be five cents until the hot weather is over, when it will go back to the regular scale.

The Gravois theater, Gravois and Jefferson avenues, in order to keep open all summer, has put in a number of extra electric fans, and has arranged to close the balcony and seat all the audience on the first floor at five cents admission, until the regular season opens in the fall. Heretofore the Gravois has closed in the hot weather.

Mrs. M. Matthews, manager of the Fern Lee airdome, near 1700 South Broadway, has had the airdome fitted out with new equipment, including a new Simplex projection machine installed by the Lears Supply Co.

Moving pictures will form a part of a two weeks' entertainment for the benefit of the Police Relief Association of St. Louis, to be held in Mannion's Park on South Broadway. There will be two daily performances in the theater, with vaudeville and moving pictures. A Charles Chaplin comedy will be one of the features.

The Buy in St. Louis League have launched their campaign by showing slides urging that home-town industries be patronized, in a hundred and twenty-five moving picture theaters. The slides are made very readable and interesting by carrying their messages in witty and pointed language. The slides will be run until July 10. Richard S. Hawes, who is at the head of the Buy in St. Louis League, is responsible for enlisting moving picture theater managers in the good work.

The City Council of the town of Desoto, a six thousand population little city forty miles south of St. Louis, passed an ordinance prohibiting a moving picture theater to keep open after six o'clock on Sunday. Manager Walther, of the Jefferson theater, says he will only show moral and religious pictures on Sunday.

BIG HOUSES CLOSE

Cleveland's Legitimate Theaters Give Summer Pictures.

By J. D. Raridan, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LEGITIMATE theaters of Cleveland, adopting motion pictures for summer business, have "given up the ghost"—and closed for the season. Competition for good pictures is too keen and the overhead expense of keeping the big houses open too heavy, theatrical men maintain. B. F. Keith's Hippodrome inaugurated pictures at the close of the vaudeville season, redecorated and cooled the theater with iced air, installed an orchestra and added several stage specialties each week in the hope of rattling the coin box with dimes that would pay off carrying charges for the summer. It succeeded to a certain extent the first two or three weeks, but not sufficiently to induce the management to continue screen offerings.

The Opera House followed practically the same policy as the Hippodrome, but it, too, was forced to close for lack of patronage. Neither theater was able to compete with the established picture houses in downtown Cleveland in competition for first-run and high-class features. The smaller houses have established an enviable patronage for their brand of pictures. The Reel, with Paramount offerings; the Standard, with World and Fox productions; the Orpheum, Mall, Dreamland and a dozen other houses scattered in business and outlying sections appear to have cornered the patronage—and moreover, they are keeping it without interference.

Weather conditions have been extremely good for the picture houses, a comfortable temperature contributing to the attendence of almost every theater in the city. Fans have not been necessary up to the present date and the Duchess, which recently completed installation of an iced-air system, has found no occasion to use it.

"BETTER BABIES FOR A GREATER CLEVELAND."

Preliminary to the actual opening of Cleveland's baby welfare week, 100 picture theaters last Saturday night flashed on their screens the slogan, "Better Babies for a Greater Cleveland." The week was observed in a campaign by Welfare Council and Chamber of Commerce to instil caution in the care of infants during the summer months. Theater managers lent their efforts to start the campaign with telling effect.

SIX REELS STOLEN—FOUND.

Six reels of film were stolen from a messenger's wagon standing in front of the Mutual Film Company's exchange, Columbia building, Cleveland, last week and were found several hours later, buried in an excavation of a nearby street. John Bernack, messenger for the Mutual, reported the theft to the police and the value of the films at $600. A patrolman searched the neighborhood and found the pictures where they had evidently been hidden.

CLEVELAND ITEMS.

There are 964,302 Clevelanders who visit the 175 motion picture theaters of the city each week—as an average—according to statistics the Superior Advertising Slide Company claims to have secured. With the city's population at 700,000 and the company's figures as a basis it is safe to say all of Cleveland goes to a show once a week—and some go twice.

Sunday picture entertainment is classed with Sunday baseball, saloons and cigarettes in a resolution of condemnation adopted at the convention of the Ohio Sunday School Association at Zanesville. A blanket resolution was passed after considerable discussion of the "evils"—and the congress agreed that picture theaters open on Sunday should be included with the rest.

A new theater is to be erected at Lexington avenue and E. 66th street, Cleveland, opposite the American League baseball park. It will be known as the Indian—also the popular name for Cleveland's baseball team—and will be managed by A. Silberberg, who has taken a lease on the premises.

The Ray theater, Prospect avenue, Cleveland, has been sold by F. H. Kramer to Guy Black. Mr. Black is now in charge and has adopted a program of Universal productions. The Ray is one of the newest picture houses in downtown Cleveland.

"The Devil's Daughter," latest of the Fox Film Corporation productions submitted to the Ohio board of censors, was rejected and 1,300 feet of eliminations ordered. The eliminations covered practically every scene in which Theda Bara appeared, and as the entire film is based on Mlle. Bara's talent it is unlikely such cuts will be made. The film was reviewed by dramatic critics of Cleveland newspapers before its submission to the censors, upon the invitation of Paul C. Mooney, Cleveland exchange manager, and all agreed there was nothing that could be termed objectionable.

J. E. Johnson, manager of the Pathe-Eclectic exchange, Cleveland, has received notice of the Pathe convention in Chicago July 12 and that his presence is required. Territory problems and general discussion of film conditions and an opportunity for exchange managers to get acquainted are the objects of the meeting.

Work on the Kleervue Film Company's studio, near Elyria, is progressing rapidly and the building will be ready for occupancy soon, according to the announcement of R. J. Morris, president of the company. Cleveland capital is backing this project for producing pictures.

Fred Brandt, long interested in Cleveland theatrical enterprises, and Michael Shea, booking agent, have formed a partnership to handle picture films and book talent for theaters, clubs, cabarets, etc. They have opened offices in the Erie building.

C. G. Thompson, manager of the Victor Film Service, Cleveland, distributors of Universal productions, announces bookings for the latest serial, "The Broken Coin," bid fair to break all previous records for pictures of this character. He credits the popularity of Francis Ford and Grace Cunard with the success of bookings in this territory.

All the theaters on the west side of Cleveland observed "carnival week," the occasion for opening of the new market house, with programs suitable to the gala affair. The Fairyland, managed by W. C. Caspar, advertised as "Charlie Chaplin's Home this Week." Other houses booked multiple-reel features in addition to their regular programs.

As a part of a new $60,000 commercial building, a picture theater will be included in the structure for O. G. and Ferdinando Melaragno, Cleveland bankers and publishers of the weekly newspaper, "The Voice of the Italian People," to be erected at Central avenue and E. 14th street. Plans for the building were drawn by Nicola Petti, architect, and the project financed through the offices of the Associated Investment Company. The theater, like the stores and offices which will occupy the rest of the building, will be leased.

AROUND CINCINNATI.

Mayor Frank E. Bryan, of Niles, O., is credited with being behind a movement to construct a new theater in that town, on North Main street, a lease for the property having been given recently.

The Lincoln Theater Co., recently incorporated at Massillon, O., with a capital stock of $25,000, will construct a handsome modern picture theater. John E. McLain, A. M. McCarty, C. B. McClintock and several others are interested in the enterprise.

The Lubin, of Cincinnati, feels that it has made a regular ten-strike in securing the first run of the new V-L-S-E pictures in the downtown section of the city, especially in view of the high quality of the pictures thus far shown under the new brand. George Ade's "College Widow" was one of the recent hits of the big combination, and the others shown and promised for the near future give every promise of being of the highest quality. Other leading houses, notably the Forest, of Avondale, have taken to the V-L-S-E enthusiastically, giving the new exchange established here, under the management of R. L. Schrader, formerly of Indianapolis and Louisville, plenty to do.

Films Boost Big City

Cincinnati Will Use Moving Pictures On Grand Scale to Advertise Its Attractions-Beauty of Situation, Manufacturing, Education, Hygienic and Art Advantages Will Be Made Clear by Films.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE use of moving pictures as a means of city exploitation, in the best sense, is by no means new, as an idea; but while many cities, even of the smaller sort, have within recent years had pictures of more or less value and interest taken, in the hope of deriving some favorable publicity from them, few have undertaken work of this sort on so extensive a scale as Cincinnati, nor with such good prospects of actually getting them before the public. One reason for this difference lies in the fact that the city is peculiarly favored from a scenic standpoint, views from the various eminences around the suburbs over the city and looking over the river and to the Kentucky hills beyond being numerous and unusually attractive.

Moreover, there are numerous large industries, known nationally, pictures of whose activities have much interest, while some of the great public works of the city, such as the waterworks and the big sewers now being constructed, as well as the points of interest such as the famous Zoo, the Art Museum, and the like; and the plans for showing all these in moving pictures is backed by local capital to a point which insures their success.

FREE PICTURES IN CINCINNATI.

The free exhibition of moving pictures under the auspices of the city authorities in Cincinnati's parks and playgrounds during the summer evenings, which was tried with some degree of success last summer, is naturally somewhat distasteful to local exhibitors, who feel that this simply means taking just that much business away from them.

The plan has not yet been inaugurated to any extent this season, the playgrounds having been opened only recently, but it is understood that it is to be followed all over the city, and it is more than probable that the exhibitors will make some organized effort to head it off. Incidentally, it may be pointed out that at Athens, O., Supt. of Schools Skinner recently announced that next fall he intends to inaugurate the exhibition of moving pictures of an educational nature in the schools, charging one cent admission only to school children. This charge is to be made to pay the rental of the Grand theater, where they will be shown, and is not expected to show a profit. This is in line with the free exhibition at the University of Cincinnati of educational pictures, and if the free pictures in the parks were confined exclusively to these there might be no room for complaint on the part of exhibitors.

WALNUT STREET A FILM ROW.

The well known tendency for business concerns in the same or similar lines of business to seek the same section of a city for a location, which is perhaps best evidenced by the "Gasoline Rows" seen in many cities, where automobile and accessory firms gather, is now being seen in the moving picture business, bearing witness to the industrial importance of that line of activity. This is especially the case in Cincinnati recently, a sort of general movement having taken place within the past few months to Walnut street, already a theatrical thoroughfare of some importance.

With the Strand, one of the leading moving picture houses of the city; B. F. Keith's theater, with its continuous vaudeville and moving pictures; the Walnut, a popular house, showing feature pictures during the summer, and several other houses, large and small, on or near this street, it has always been a scene of much Thespian activity, "canned" and otherwise.

Recently, however, a number of leading film concerns have moved over, making the street even more important, especially to the moving picture world. Among these are the Mutual Film Co., with fine quarters at Seventh and Walnut, formerly occupied by the General Film Co., now at Elm and Opera place in its own building; the Universal's Cincinnati branch, and the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Co., in charge of Manager Edward Lux, in the Strand building, where are also the downtown headquarters of the Highland Film Corporation. Across the street from this building is a new structure, where the new Paramount Exchange is located, and several other exchanges are also preparing to secure quarters in this building or in the same block.

The exhibitor can thus make the rounds of some of the leading offices without giving his legs much exercise, and can also take in some of the best productions being shown.

WARM NIGHTS MAKE AIRDOMES POPULAR RESORTS.

Despite the remarkably cool evenings recently, the fine, clear weather experienced during the past week has called out crowds to the airdomes all over town, and among these the Orpheum "sky theater," which had such a successful season last summer, has already come into its own. The management is continuing its policy, inaugurated last summer, of showing the same program each evening in the auditorium, one of the largest in the city, and on the roof, several hundred feet higher up, thus giving patrons the choice of taking the air or avoiding it, as they desire. Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Heart of Maryland," Elsie Janis in "Betty in Search of a Thrill" and other Paramounts, with the popular serials and the Orpheum's regular feature a night, have kept people coming as usual, giving every promise that there will be no let-up in the normal big attendance this summer.

HEARD IN CINCINNATI.

The management of the Dome theater, in Youngstown, O., has secured formal permission to do reconstruction work on the building to the extent of $6,000. This is to cover the building of a gallery, which will give the house an additional seating capacity of 300.

J. E. Camplin, who recently acquired the lease of the Family theater, in Marion, O., and will assume its management in person, has taken an up-to-date and very sensible means of getting acquainted with the people. He used a three-column newspaper advertisement, featuring his picture, with the head-line, "I Want to Get Acquainted," explaining his purchase of the theater and his intention to give patrons of the Family first-class pictures. Incidentally, he announced at the same time a cash prize contest calculated to deepen interest in the house, following this up with subsequent advertisements. Indications are that Mr. Camplin will make good with the Family, after this excellent start.

The city authorities of Springfield, O., have announced their intention of enforcing stringently the fire regulations regarding places of amusement, two theaters having been notified that they must install sprinkler systems since the reconstruction of the streets gave the opportunity. Most of the Springfield houses have these devices for their protection, and it is the object of the fire department to see that all are brought into line.

Universal Buys Wardrobe

Boston Opera Company, Now Defunct, Had One of the Most Extensive Wardrobes on This Side of the Ocean—Universal Buys It for About $10,000—Costumes Will Be Seen in Pictures.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE entire wardrobe of the defunct Boston Opera Company has been sold by the receivers to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The price paid is said to have been $10,000. This wardrobe is one of the most extensive in the country. It contains not only costumes for the principals and chorus of the many operas which have been staged here, but also costumes of every description for all the principal ballet numbers. The sale was closed by Max Rabiloff, wardrobe master for the film interests.

It is believed that a large number of these costumes will be worn in the picture productions, featuring Madamoiselle Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, who has recently signed a contract with the Universal Company.

BOSTON OPERA HOUSE MAY SHOW PICTURES.

It has been rumored that the Boston Opera House, under the management of the Shuberts, will be devoted to the presentation of moving picture features. The house will be operated in a circuit of other theaters throughout the country. In addition to moving pictures, it is stated that the program will include a large chorus orchestra and a tabloid musical comedy.

When grand opera was not resumed at this playhouse last fall, a picture policy was used for a few months with a great financial loss. Men familiar with theatrical conditions in this city have stated that the house will never be a financial success, because of its out-of-the-way location. It is located in the Back Bay, in close proximity to the Conservatory of Music.

BIG PROGRAM AT THE BOSTON.

The management of the Boston theater claims that the longest show in the city is given at this historic playhouse. The entire performance takes three and one-half hours. The program is made up of a five-reel feature, a Chaplin comedy, a Pickford reissue, an installment of "The Goddess," a one-reel comedy and a one-reel travel film. The music is furnished by the famed Boston Fadette orchestra, under the leadership of Caroline B. Nichols.

This policy is showing a great increase in the box office receipts. Admissions of fifteen and twenty-five cents are charged.

The house, which is under Keith management, abandoned the legitimate for pictures last fall. At that time, the fiancial results were disappointing. Big feature pictures were then used for a short time, but the results still continued to be unsatisfactory. Finally, a short time ago, Manager Frank J. D. Ferguson decided to try the big show with no repeats. The throngs of people who attend these performances are the best proof of its success.

GOING STRONG IN BOSTON.

The Griffith spectacle, "The Birth of A Nation," has entered upon its thirteenth week at the Tremont theater, Boston. film has made a greater hit than any legitimate or photoplay production that has ever been presented in the city. According to the outlook at the present time, the photoplay is good for the remainder of the summer.

General Manager Joseph J. McCarthy has received several offers from the proprietors of pavilions, music hall and seaside theaters from the north coast all the way down to the Mason and Dixon line for the production. As the weather has been very poor for the beach resorts the persons interested in these enterprises are desirous of obtaining some good attraction to bring the people.

A traveling scene reproduced from the film is being used as an outdoor advertising stunt and has attracted a great deal of comment during the past fortnight in several of the smaller New England cities. An old fashioned barouche of Civil War times shows Elsie Stoneman and Margaret Cameron in the rear seats, faced by Colonel Ben Cameron and Captain Phil Stoneman. The persons impersonating these parts are Bostonians. They are costumed accurately to the era they represent. The display is in charge of Frank A. Johnson, a widely known and efficient outdoor publicity man. The display attracted considerable favorable comment from the large crowds at the Harvard and Yale boat race when it visited New London on the day of that event.

THIRTY CENTS ADMISSION AT PARK THEATER PAYS.

Manager Fred Bossner of the Park theater, Boston, is responsible for a raise in the price of admission to the playhouse since he assumed charge three weeks ago. The price has been raised from twenty-five to thirty-five cents. The new policy has met with the approval of the patrons of this house, as the audiences are increasing instead of decreasing. He is also responsible for many innovations in the theater. He has installed a lighting system of green and red lights. By means of this arrangement, a perfect picture can be shown while the house is lighted. It has added materially to the appearance of the house. His next move will be to install a lighting system in the lobby, and he claims that when this is completed the Park will be the most beautiful house in the city.

NEW ENGLAND BREEZES.

Owing to the large amount of film that is now being handled by the New England Pathe Exchange, Manager Samuel Bernfield has found it necessary to hire another room in the building which he now occupied at No. 3 Tremont Row, Boston. This room, which is very large, will be used exclusively for film storage. This exchange is the only one in the city which is not compelled to store film in fireproof vaults because they use inflammable film.

Herman Craig has resigned from the management of the New England office of the Picture Playhouse Company. Before assuming this position Mr. Craig was a roadman for the Mutual and Pathe Exchanges in the New England territory.

Manager George F. Bolsden of the New England V-S-L-E office has contracted with J. Lourie of the Modern theater for the use of Big Four productions.

J. Bonn, who has been connected with the road staff of the New England office of the World Film Corporation for the past few months, has left Boston to assume the management of the World office at Kansas City. His New England friends wish him success and prosperity in his new venture.

Joseph Harris, the operator of the General Film Company, and Miss Alice Penn, formerly connected with the stenographic forces of the New England Universal Film Exchange, were united in marriage during the week. The members of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League presented the groom with a purse of $105 in gold, while his office associates presented him with a $75 purse. The office associates of the bride presented her with a handsome silver service.

Henry MacMahon, who has been the manager of "The Birth of A Nation" company since it opened at the Tremont theater, Boston, has departed for Chicago to take charge of the Western publicity of the new Griffith-Ince-Sennett organization. It is thought that he will be succeeded by George Bowles.

Taking a Picture by an Allison & Hadaway Light.

Individuality of environment and the association of the surroundings with the action of the play is the watchword of the Vitagraph Company, which has recently leased for a term of years a brownstone mansion for home studio purposes at 30 East 50th Street, New York.

Here any number of changes can be rung in and the accompanying picture shows John T. Kelly and Mrs. Frances Connelly in a scene from "The Cave Man," in which Robert Edeson is the star.

The picture shows Director Theodore Marson in action and a part of the scene being made. The illumination is furnished from a pair of Panchroma Twin Arc lamps furnished by Allison & Hadaway of New York.

FIND MONTREAL CHARITY TAX LAW CLUMSY.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Motion Picture World.

IN the last Montreal column it was reported that the City Attorney had drawn up a law for the levying of a charity tax in this city. The law was duly presented to the City Council and passed. Patrons of different amusements will be compelled to pay an additional cent on entering such places. As yet the law has not been put into practical use. While there is no gainsaying that the money will be devoted to a good cause, yet it is pretty much the general opinion that the law, like most others relating to moving pictures in Canada, is clumsy. Business secrets will now be open information to every Tom, Dick and Harry, since managers have to submit a report as to the daily attendance at their houses.

There is talk in some quarters of starting a campaign against this new move of hare-brained legislation. However, the film trade in general is getting pretty nearly fed-up with rumors of this sort. Organization is possible in some places. Toronto exhibitors can get together and get what they demand; Montreal seems satisfied to let things take their course. Let the legislators continue taxing, the censors continue to cut everything, and ruin will follow. In the interim, "vesti la guiba," on with the play.

NEW THEATER IN NORTH END.

The Independent Amusements, Ltd., announce that they will build a new theatre. The site has already been chosen; the new house will be located on Park avenue at Laurier. It will cost in the neighborhood of $100,000, and will be of reinforced concrete and thoroughly modern, fire-proof, and well ventilated. It will have seating accommodation for thirteen hundred people. The Independent Amusements own the Strand and Moulin Rouge theatres in this city, and are evidently in a prosperous condition just now, as a dividend was only recently declared.

The North End of Montreal is a rich field for picture shows, and has always been looked upon favorably by show promoters. Opportunity is afforded to draw upon the patronage of thirty-five thousand people. These are of the comfortably situated class. Furthermore, only one block away lies the town of Outremont. So far there is only one theatre in this locality, the Mount Royal. The secret of keeping the North End people from downtown shows is to give them as good uptown as they get downtown.

NOTED PLAYERS SUE AGAIN.

The Noted Players Feature Film Company have again instituted proceedings against the Allied Features, Inc. This time the former company accuses the latter of contempt of court in continuing to rent out to theatres Alliance films. It will be remembered that the plaintiffs had previously secured an injunction against the Allied. Because the Allied Features persisted in booking Alliance films, "Beulah" was seized while at the Globe theater. The suit is now being conducted in the Montreal courts.

MONTREAL NOTES.

Mr. Solomon, treasurer of the World Film Corporation, Toronto, has been in town a few days visiting the local branch. R. S. Bell, local manager, has been paying mysterious visits of late to the City Hall. However, he let the cat out of the bag. It appears that he has been looking for a license. The truth is that Mr. Bell, after due deliberation, has decided to possess himself of—an automobile.

The lay-out and furnishings of the local Famous Players have been changed and the result is a neat and impressive appearance of "tone." The latest acquisition is a well-fitted projection room. Mr. P. Kaufman, general manager for Canada, was in town recently on business.

Allfeatures, Ltd., now occupy the entire upper floor in the Scala theatre building. H. S. Decker, formerly of the Famous Players and Universal local offices, has joined Allfeatures. "Vampires of the Night" is now being booked by this firm. Manager Malone reports good business.

Geo. Rotsky made a recent trip through the Maritime Provinces, and claims that business down there is fair. Mr. Rotsky remained in town a few days and then went to Toronto. He will arrange affairs in the Queen City for "The Diamond From the Sky," as well as the Mutual Masterpieces. The serial has been released in Montreal and among the big houses is playing at Midway, Tivoli and Moulin Rouge theaters. The fiction version runs in the Standard and La Patrie.

Mr. Goldie has organized the Canadian Art Photoplays, Ltd., and taken over the studio of the defunct General Flm Corporation of Canada at Longueuil, across the river. Comedies will be produced.

Several changes in the staff of the Pathe office have been made. A. Keegan, formerly of the St. Johns, N. B., office, has been transferred to Vancouver. His place in St. Johns will be taken by A. Quintal, late of the local office. A. Rondeau has been appointed roadman from coast to coast. New men in the Montreal office are A. Laurente, formerly with the Mutual, and E. Lefebvre, heretofore cashier at the United Film Service Montreal office. Charles Lalumiere, booking manager, signed up the Olympia theatre, Quebec City, for fifteen reels a week of Pathe films. Mr. Paquette, the manager of this house, states that an increase of forty per cent. in business has been the result.

Curfew Slides

Harrisburg Police Ask Managers of Picture Houses to Have Slides Thrown on Screen Warning Children That It Is About 9 O'clock—Law Compels Unattended Youngsters to Be in by 9:30.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

THE police of Harrisburg have asked for the co-operation of the proprietors of moving picture theatres in helping to enforce the new curfew ordinance. The plan is to have slides thrown on the screen about nine o'clock announcing that unaccompanied minors under fifteen years of age must be home by 9.30 o'clock. If a minor is seen coming from any theater unaccompanied, after 9.30 o'clock, he comes under the provisions of the ordinance and will be punished accordingly. The police are of the opinion that, with the helpful assistance of the proprietors of the picture houses, there will be very little trouble in having the new act rigidly observed. The law was only recently put into effect. Provision has been made for those minors whose business keeps them on the streets after the allotted time limit. These children will be given certificates which will grant them immunity from arrest for being on the streets of Harrisburg after curfew hours.

THE BORDENTONIAN OPENS.

The Bordentonian theatre, Bordentown, N. J., was recently opened to the public. The theatre is of Gothic architecture and is 221 feet in length and 43 feet in width, and cost about $30,000. It has a seating capacity of 700 and is absolutely fireproof in construction. E. K. Minnick, of Bordentown, who for more than twenty years has been interested in the theatrical business, and who managed the only other theatre of which Bordentown could boast, the Park Street Opera House, is managing the new theatre for the owners, the Mercantini Brothers.

TRENTON'S ST. REGIS READY.

The new St. Regis Theatre, 142 East State street, Trenton, N. J., was recently thrown open to the lovers of moving pictures living in that vicinity. The building is not quite finished, but when fully completed will be one of the finest picture theatres in the State.

CARRY FIRE LAWS TO SUPREME COURT.

Moving picture men in Philadelphia have taken exception to the recent ruling of Judge Audenreid, who held that the act of 1913 did not exempt their places of amusement from complying with the earlier fire protection laws, and that the fire marshal was right in demanding certain interior construction and appliances at the various theatres. They have taken their cause to court and an argument was recently heard where the question was debated hotly on both sides, Assistant City Solicitor Gordon, representing the fire marshal and city authorities. No satisfactory agreement could be reached and the decision of Judge Audenreid will be finally threshed out in the Supreme Court.

QUAKER CITY GOSSIP.

The Crescent theatre, 818 South Broad street, Chambersburg, Pa., has recently changed management. Three well-known young men of that place have taken the theatre. The new proprietors are Andrew C. Strucker, John Breezer and Michael Sisky.

Joseph Sannit has bought from Alexander Berman, for a nominal consideration, the two-story brick motion picture theatre at 2907-09-11 North Fifth street, Philadelphia.

The extremely torrid weather that has prevailed during the past few days in the vicinity of Trenton has been combated with unusual force at the Trent theatre and the Taylor Opera House. Manager Moses has had each house equipped with the revolving type of electrical fans, which tend to keep up an invigorating breeze.

Mr. Fisher, proprietor of the Family theatre, Ninth street and Columbia avenue, Philadelphia, recently announced that he will close his theatre for the balance of the summer season, but will reopen in the fall.

Quakertown, Pa., boasts of a new moving picture theatre. The new establishment has been opened by Mr. Graf and is known as the Lu Lu Park theatre.

It was recently announced at the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, that they have obtained the exclusive agency for the Minusa screen. This screen is of gold fibre texture and is manufactured in the United States.

The playground movement instituted by the Women's Club, of Clearfield, Pa., will profit greatly by the generosity of Manager Driggs of the Globe theater, who has donated the use of the theater to the ladies of the club for four consecutive Thursdays, to be used for the purpose of running benefit shows.

Manager M. L. Shannon, of the Plainfield theatre, Plainfield, N. J., is already booking the legitimate attractions in preparation to having some well merited features at the Second street playhouse during the coming season.

N. J. Hitner has recently opened a thoroughly modern moving picture theatre in Hackettstown, N. J., and expects to show nothing but the best of pictures.

Fred Stehmer, artist for the United Mechanics Company, has completed the redecorating of the exterior of the Orpheum theatre, Carlisle, Pa., and has greatly improved the appearance of that well-known theatre. The color scheme is Turkey red and ivory with a ceiling decoration of flowers.

The Strand Theatre Company was recently incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, the incorporators being Charles C. Hildinger, with 500 shares; Philip Papier, with 499 shares; Marie Papier, with one share. The new concern is located at 14 Coryell street, Lambertville, N. J. The company is capitalized at $25,000.

A SUCCESSFUL EXCHANGEMAN NOW WITH PHOENIX FILM CORPORATION.

By John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DOWN-EAST exhibitors need no introduction to the homely face displayed in this article. "Tinker of Maine" is known in all parts of the New England territory and particularly well in the States east of Boston. With an experience dating from 1909, during which time he has been exhibitor, press agent, film salesman and exchange manager, he has acquired an acquaintanceship and prestige which is worth much to himself, and which nothing but experience plus a square deal can secure.

His first prominent connection in the rental business was with the General Film Company, and he worked from their branch at Bangor, Maine, and later from the Boston office under Mr. W. R. Scates. Later Mr. Tinker engaged in the exploiting of the then popular State-right pictures and handled many successful ones in New England. He retired from this line of endeavor to accept a position as Maine representative for the Eclectic Film Company. When Mr. F. H. Vine, then manager at Boston for Eclectic, resigned to accept the Boston management for the World Film Corporation, Mr. Tinker tendered his resignation and also signed up with the World Film to handle Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

A few weeks ago when the change of administration was made at the World Film offices, Mr. Tinker found himself on the outside looking in. He then negotiated with the Phoenix Feature Film Corporation of Massachusetts, one of the principal eastern feature distributors, to handle their Maine business, believing that by concentrating in the one State, it would be more profitable than to half cover more territory.

MAINE RIPPLES.

The Bath Times is informed by a reliable man, it says, that responsible New York theatrical interests have been looking over the field in that section for some time and their agents say that there is a strong probability of a brick building being constructed in Bath to contain a modern theater. The work may begin in November under certain contingencies. Two sites are said to have met with the approval of the agents, who have been looking over the local field. Each of these locations is in the central part of Bath. New York capital is behind the proposition.

The Peakes Island pavilion, Portland Harbor, opened Saturday night, June 26, under the management of Mr. O'Brien, with motion pictures and dancing. Music is furnished by the Arlington orchestra.

The Rollerette, just over the bridge from Riverton Park, Portland, has opened for the summer season under entirely new management and has been remodelled for moving pictures and dancing.

The Crescent theater, Lubec, managed by Mr. W. J. Mahleman, is finding business good through the summer months. General Film service and the Tinker-Phoenix features are proving good drawing cards.

The Royal theater, Waterville, has just installed a new motor generator of extra size for making the brightest white light possible for clear pictures.

Fred B. Chase, of Dorchester, Mass., Orono, Me., and Camden, Me., reports that his houses are meeting with good business as a rule.

Dr. C. H. Haines of Haines & Wayman, managers of the Park theater at Dexter, was a visitor to Bangor during the past week. He is using Universal service and says business is good.

C. E. Lindell, who is conducting a road show in Washington county, reports profitable houses with Universal service.

Fred Johnson, manager of Music Hall, Farmington, has bought out the Peerless Amusement Company houses at Phillips and Strong, and will show one night a week in each town.

Charles Stern, manager for the Universal in Maine, and reported to be the champion bowler among the film men in this part of the state, suffered a humiliation last week when Manager Arthur Allen of the Palace theater, who is a mere beginner at bowling, defeated him badly.

The Strand theater at Oldtown, which has just opened up, is to use Broadway star features of the Universal Company one night a week, commencing July 28th. The first feature will be Jane Cowl, the leading woman in "Within the Law," appearing in "The Garden of Lies."

Manager Arthur A. Allen, of the Palace theater, Bangor, in addition to using Universal service on his regular program, has been showing World Film features, including Beatriz Michelena in the "Lily of Poverty Flat." Mr. Allen has contracted for "The Broken Coin," to start July 12, and the Broadway special features starting July 28.

Guy M. Farmer, formerly manager of the Palace theater, Bangor, has been in Camden during the past week on business in connection with taking on a theater.

Mr. H. N. Bragdon, of South Paris, has purchased the Little Hip theater of Freeport, from Mrs. J. P. Coombs. Mr. Bragdon will use regular service from the Mutual office and Phoenix features from E. B. Tinker, of Ellsworth.

Guy Roberts, proprietor of the Graphic theater at Millbridge, was a visitor to Bangor the other day. Mr. Roberts reports that the Graphic is doing good business, running three nights a week and using Universal service. The admission price is 10 cents, and occasionally 15 cents when features are shown.

C. H. Martin recently opened a moving picture show in the Opera House at Millbridge, using General Film service, and giving a show three nights a week. The admission price is 10 cents.

"The Goddess" opens at the Park theater, Bangor, about the middle of July.

Oxford is to have an up-to-date theater. This small town, situated on the Grand Trunk road, was discovered and tried out by H. N. Bragdon of South Paris, and the outcome is that a new modern theater is practically completed in the town, remodeled at a cost of $4,000. General regular service and Phoenix feature service is getting the money. Oxford also has another theater, using Mutual service.

Manager A. L. Ehrgott of the General Film Exchange, at Bangor, has returned from an automobile trip to Tennants Harbor, where he supplied Mrs. Glen E. Ross with a moving picture machine and will send her General Film plays. This is the first moving picture theater ever opened at Tennants Harbor.

Guy M. Farmer, who with Mrs. Farmer, conducted the Palace theater at Bangor during the past winter, is said to be negotiating for the purchase or lease of two summer moving picture theaters in eastern Maine. His many friends wish him success in his new enterprise. Mr. Farmer has a fine reputation among Maine film men.

Ernest Stiner of Winterport and Greenville Jct. who conducts theaters, in partnership with his mother, in both places, reports business as fine in both places, and since the coming of warm weather is especially good.

Manager Charles M. Stern of Bangor reports many requests for "The Broken Coin," largely because of the popularity of Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, the stars of "Lucille Love," which was very popular in Maine. Mr. Ford is a native of Portland, Me.

The New Portland theater, Portland, Me., offered special inducements to members of the Loyal Order of Moose, of which the New England convention was in session at Portland last week. The famous moving pictures of Moosheart, showing the great vocational school, etc., were featured, and proved to be a drawing card.

The Bijou, at Jackson, vaudeville and moving pictures, will be redecorated while it is closed this summer.

Protest in Smoky City

Pittsburgh Darkies Determined to Fight Showing of "The Birth of a Nation" Film —Committee Appointed to Take Matter Up with the State Board of Censors—An Excitable City.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service

IN view of the information which has reached and been circulated in and about this city that the photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," will show in Pittsburgh in the near future and for a period of two weeks, the Pittsburgh Courier, a weekly published in the interest of the colored race, immediately sounded warnings and admonished Afro-Americans to be vigilant, to be determined and to see that nothing is offered for public observation which bears even the slightest possibility of injury to the race.

In a recent issue of the Courier an article appeared stating that from a certain source of information they had learned that "The Birth of a Nation" was scheduled to be shown at the Miles theater, and immediately a committee was appointed to take the matter up with the State Board of Censors, in an effort to have the play disqualified in Pennsylvania. It also stated that another committee was appointed to arrange for a mass meeting to be held in the very near future, at which time the matter would be laid before the people generally and a combined effort made to enlist the good offices of the white civic bodies in the city in the plan to prevent the production of "this very injurious play."

Charles H. Miles immediately directed his managing director, William Moore Patch, to write a letter to the editor of the Courier requesting him to make known through his paper that Mr. Miles had made no arrangements whatsoever, for the depicting of "The Birth of a Nation."

Due to the antagonistic efforts of these various movements city council adopted a resolution introduced by Dr. Dillinager requesting the mayor to direct the Public Safety Department director to inaugurate a rigid censorship of all moving pictures in which the negro race is depicted, and to prevent the exhibition of such reels as "The Birth of a Nation" or any similar picture which tends to bring "disgrace, criticism or scorn" on the negroes.

All of this combined with the prohibiting of showing the "Nigger" in this city recently, has put the Pittsburgh motion picture men on their toes and it is expected they will soon start some movement in an effort to overthrow the arguments of the colored race and their associates.

The Afro-Americans contend that in their struggle to advance they can ill afford to have anything portraying adversity submitted to the public, while the motion picture men hold that there is nothing of this sort depicted in such productions as "The Birth of a Nation," which would influence the broad-minded public.

Pittsburgh, by reason of its industrial prominence, is composed of a wide and various mass of humanity, a humanity that can be swayed one way or another.

METROPOLITAN BOOKING TAKES KRITERION FILMS.

The Metropolitan Booking offices, located at 405 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, announces that they have taken over Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia for the Kriterion program. The Kriterion program is reported to have been running with great success in every section of the country except Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Until the Metropolitan offices were established in this city no satisfactory arrangement could be made for the handling of this program in these sections mentioned.

Mr. Rockwell, the local manager, announces that there are over 300 subjects available at the present time, and he will release them as fast as conditions warrant. The film vaults, now at 121 Fourth avenue, will be moved to Film Row, having outgrown the present quarters.

FILM SHOWS PIPE MAKING.

Twenty-five hundred feet of film, showing the various processes used in the manufacture of wrought iron pipe at the South Side plant of the A. M. Byers Company, steel mills, have been finished. This is another accomplishment of George Bates, of the Pittsburgh Commercial Motion Picture Company, who also has contracts with the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company to make film, the views being taken at Pittsburgh, New Brighton and Louisville, Ky. This job will also be completed in the near future.

JAMES FORBES SICK.

James Forbes, an old-time theatrical agent, but recently employed at the Pittsburgh branch of the Fox Film Corporation, was removed to the hospital last week after having developed a serious case of pneumonia. The entire trade wishes to extend their sympathy and good wishes for a quick recovery. Mr. Forbes states that he will likely go to the farm owned by J. B. Hogan, who at one time was general manager for Lincoln J. Carter.

ORPHEUM TO GIVE PLACE.

Announcement was made last week by Prof. Otto E. Davis, manager of the Orpheum theater, in Butler, Pa., that the present building would be practically torn down during the summer months and a new and handsome modern theater building would be erected in its place.

Saturday night the Orpheum closed for the season and as soon as plans for a new structure can be completed work on tearing down the old building will be commenced and a contract for the construction of the new will be given. It is the desire of the promoters of the new theater, which will be known as "The Butler," to have the new theater ready for the opening of the fall season

NEW CASTLE'S STRAND OPENS.

The new Strand theater, which has been under construction in the southern industrial section of New Castle, Pa., opened its doors last week.

This theater is completely built on modern photo-play lines and was a big surprise to the photo-play fans of this city. Upon entering one is greeted by lofty ceilings and columned walls decorated with eye-soothing tints of ivories, buffs and creams, with lightly blended greens. Indirect lighting and ventilation have been well taken care of.

PITTSBURGH EXCHANGES GIVE A PICNIC.

About forty motion picture men and employes of the Pittsburgh film exchanges spent Sunday in a most pleasant manner in Bradford Woods, near this city. The picnickers left by street car at 11.30 a. m. and returned to the city about 10.30 p. m. William LeBarton and Lee Hunt had charge of the affairs at the outing and they are to be complimented on the way they had things arranged for a good time. There were plenty of good eats and drinks in charge of a chef. A game of baseball between picked teams and other outdoor sports contributed to make the outing one of enjoyment and one to be remembered.

KALEM.

THE SUFFRAGETTE SHERIFF (Carlyle Blackwell-Alice Joyce Re-issue—July 2).—Rattlesnake Bill and his wife enjoy the simple life until the arrival of Bill's old maid sister, Miss Wronged. The latter, an ardent suffragette, expounds her views so convincingly that Bill's wife becomes dissatisfied with her lot and leaves the kitchen to enlighten those of her sex who dwell in darkness. Bill, unaccustomed to work of any sort, finds household duties irksome. Upon his wife's election to the office of sheriff, he sees that it is up to him to do something desperate. Gathering his cronies together, Bill unfolds his plan.

It is agreed that Bill shall pretend to kill a man. This would devolve upon the sheriff the duty of bringing the supposed murderer to justice—a proceeding which Bill feels would be impossible with his better half. Old Judge Soft is advised of the plan and the little drama begins to enact itself. Unfortunately, however, the principals are in ignorance of the fact that the sheriff has overheard the plot. The trial is a weird affair. Bill can scarcely control his laughter, while the old Judge frequently forgets his dignity as he beholds the spectacle which the lady officials present by their earnestness. Later, the magistrate calmly orders Bill hung.

To Bill's horror he finds no trace of pity in his wife's heart. The conspirator is led to the scaffold where the sheriff attends to the adjusting of the noose with remarkable dexterity. Bill's anguished explanations that the whole affair is a jest are ignored. At the proper moment the trap is sprung. Down goes the unfortunate victim—not to eternity, but into a tank of ice-cold water installed below by the sheriff and her deputies!

THE MIDNIGHT LIMITED (Episode No. 34, "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—July 3).—Under the influence of liquor, Griffin foolishly displays a roll of bills. Wheeler and Walter yeggmen, see the money and trail the traveler to the station. The men learn the berth he is to occupy. Hastening to a bridge under which the train must pass, they drop to the roof of one of the cars when it appears. Helen, transferred to Burnett, is a passenger on the train. By mistake, Griffin gets into her berth. Because of the man's condition, Helen consents to allow him to keep her berth. The girl takes the one which Griffin's ticket calls for.

An hour later, Helen is awakened by a peculiar noise outside the car. Hastily dressing, she sees the window being raised. Wheeler's face appears at the window. The man foils Helen's attempt to shoot him, disarms her and then climbs back to the roof of the car. Helen pluckily follows, although the train is traveling at a good speed. Walter thereupon cuts the rope leading to the roof. Helen drops but catches hold of the window ledge. The noise attracts the crew and the train is halted. Helen is rescued, and although an attempt is made to capture the crooks, they escape. Shortly after she assumes her duties at Burnett, the girl sees two men attacking the postmaster and recognizes her assailants. After giving the alarm, she pursues the men. Walter and Wheeler flee. Helen overtakes them and pluckily engages them in a battle. The yeggmen are about to slay her when help arrives. Another desperate struggle ensues and the desperadoes are finally subdued and placed under arrest.

THE SEVENTH COMMANDMENT (Special—Three Parts—July 5).—Compelled to flee the village to escape the wrath of Amos Mitchel, Jennie's husband, Simon Craig deserts his wife and daughter. Mrs. Craig and Dorothy make their home with relatives. Driving his wife forth, Mitchell vows to make Craig pay a terrible price for the wrong he has caused. Years later finds Craig a wealthy man and a candidate for the mayoralty. Mitchell, who has kept track of the man, obtains a position as Craig's secretary. Craig is in ignorance concerning Mitchell's identity. As the next step in securing vengeance, the secretary sends for Dorothy, offering her a position as Craig's stenographer. Father and daughter are unaware of their relationship.

Jennie drifts into town. Dick Wallace, a reporter who has fallen in love with Dorothy, overhears Jennie tell a companion of her hold over the candidate. He learns that she is blackmailing Craig. In the meantime, Craig, instigated by Mitchell, regards Dorothy with lustful eyes. Wallace investigates Craig's past and learns of what had transpired years before. On the day of his election, Craig, highly excited, drinks heavily. Mitchell gloats over the thought of his approaching triumph. The mayor attempts to make love to Dorothy, but the girl flees to her room and locks the door. Wallace enters the house just as Craig is endeavoring to smash the door. Hurling Mitchell, who attempts to stop him, aside, Wallace goes to Dorothy's aid. Then the reporter tells Craig of his relationship to Dorothy. Horrified, the mayor retreats from the door. Jennie enters the house. The sight of the woman drives Mitchell mad. He shoots her and follows this up by slaying Craig. Wallace overpowers the man who, by this time, is a raving maniac. While the police take Mitchell away, Wallace endeavors to comfort the heart-broken Dorothy.

SOME ROMANCE (July 6).—Ham and Bud, employed as street cleaners, become heroes when they stop Gwendoline's runaway steed. The girl loses her necklace in the excitement. The adventurers find the jewel and when a reward is offered for its return the following day, Ham decides to return the necklace. He promises to split the reward, 50-50, with his pal. Gwendoline has made an awful hit with Ham. Hastening to her palatial home, he gives her the necklace. Ham also informs her that he is a nobleman in disguise. As the result, when Gwendoline's father later offers to reward Ham for returning the jewel, his daughter indignantly informs the father of Ham's social position.

Bud, tiring of waiting, enters the house and demands his share of the reward. Distracting Gwendoline's attention for a moment, Ham shamelessly kicks his little pal out of the place. Jack, the girl's sweetheart, appears. Gwendoline, however, hypnotized over the thought of being in the company of a nobleman, sniffs at Jack in disdain. The forlorn youth leaves the grounds. He meets Inspector McGinnis. Ham's boss, outside. The inspector, a regular Simon Legree, is looking for Ham. Jack tells the man of Ham's whereabouts. McGinnis thereupon blows his whistle. Ham recognizes the summons and hastens to obey. Back he rushes to his broom and shovel. Pausing only to aim a swift kick at Bud, who is jeering at him, Ham does his share towards making the city's streets clean and sanitary.

THE FRAME-UP (Special—Two Parts—July 7).—Rivalry between Pat Freeney and Lewis, the "Frog," for Nellie's hand, leads to a feud between the two. The girl is summarily ordered to choose between the two. To Lewis' rage, she indicates her preference for Freeney. Determined to get the latter out of his way, Lewis plans to have him captured by the police. By bribing Thompson, another crook, and using the latter as a cat's-paw, Lewis is successful in having both men captured just as they are committing a burglary planned by him.

While in jail, Freeney learns of the frame-up from Thompson. Thirsting for revenge, he orders Nellie to smuggle a revolver into the cell. Freeney carries the weapon with him when taken to court. Later, when Lewis takes the stand, Freeney shoots at him. In the ensuing excitement, the prisoner successfully makes his escape. Anna Lane, a Special Investigator, is assigned to the case. She learns that Freeney and Nellie were in the habit of patronizing Hennegan's dance hall. In the meantime, Freeney has made Nellie's home his hiding place. Filled with hatred towards Lewis, he is determined to kill him.

That evening Freeney and his girl go to the dance hall. Anna and Podyne, a Central Office man, see them enter. Later, when Lewis arrives, Freeney fires at him point blank. A projectile hits the "frog" squarely in the forehead and the man drops. Anna and Podyne make Freeney prisoner and then turn their attention to his victim. To their surprise, they find the man uninjured. Nellie confesses that, fearing Freeney would make himself a murderer, she removed the lead pellets and substituted soap bullets. Mad with rage, Freeney is led away.

HIDING FROM THE LAW (Special—Two Parts—July 9).—Her head turned because of her success as an amateur actress, Estelle determines upon the stage as a career. Her opportunity comes when Clifton, her husband, goes to the mountains in search of health after a break-down due to overwork. Clifton meets Rita, the wife of Jacques. A warm friendship springs up between the two. Jacques, brutal and overbearing, regards this with suspicion. While intoxicated, the trapper beats Rita. The girl flees from their cabin. Late that night, Clifton finds her unconscious near his cabin.

The surgeon carries Rita into the building and finds her suffering from a badly wrenched ankle. Jacques, in the meantime, searches for his wife. He finally finds her under Clifton's care. Wild with jealous rage, the trapper attacks the surgeon and is beaten down. Believing he has killed the man, Clifton flees with Rita and takes refuge in a cave. Jacques is found by a detective employed by Estelle. The latter seeks to obtain a divorce. Upon recovering consciousness, the trapper tells his story. The man is induced to accompany the detective back to the city, where, as the result of a contemptible plot, Estelle succeeds in obtaining her freedom.

Jacques receives $1,500 for his work. Back to the mountains he goes. The money he displays excites the cupidity of a couple of mountaineers. Later, Clifton witnesses an attack made by the latter upon the trapper. Although he interferes, he comes too late to save Jacques' life. The latter recognizes Clifton and with his dying breath tells him of what has taken place. Hastening back to the cave, the surgeon imparts the news to the girl he loves.

A WILD RIDE (Episode No. 35 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series July 10).—The bad blood existing between Reardon and Haley results in a fight in which Reardon is worsted. Reardon, vowing vengeance, climbs back aboard his engine while Haley resumes his station. The fight is witnessed by a number of railroad men. In climbing back to the water tank, Haley stumbles and falls between the cars. By a miracle, the man escapes death, but the shock leaves him temporarily demented. By the time Reardon discovers that his fireman has disappeared from his station, the train is several miles from the scene of the accident. A search is made for the missing man, but, since Haley has taken refuge in the underbrush, it proves futile.

Although Reardon is suspected of having done away with his fireman, lack of evidence keeps him out of the law's clutches. Shortly afterwards, Helen, in passing between two boxcars, comes upon the insane fireman. Leaping upon her, Haley knocks the girl unconscious and then lashes his victim to the driving rod of the freight engine. Climbing into the cab, Haley opens the throttle. The startled trainmen see the engine dashing down the track and wire ahead, ordering the tracks to be cleared. Reardon thus becomes aware of the runaway. A steep grade causes the engine to slow down as it approaches the crossing where the engineer waits. A flying leap and Reardon boards the locomotive.

Haley leaves his throttle to attack the engineer. Reardon, however, catches the insane man squarely upon the jaw and knocks him unconscious. Springing into the cab, the engineer brings the locomotive to a halt just in time to avoid crashing into the Hendon express at the Thomas Crossing. Leaping to the ground, Reardon cuts the cords which bind Helen. The girl is unconscious as the result of her frightful experience, but soon revives.

VITAGRAPH.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES NO. 14 ("Mr. Jarr and Gertrude's Beaux"—July 12).—Gertrude, the Jarr servant, is invited by her three beaux, Claude, the fireman, Gus, saloonkeeper, and Hogan, to go on an excursion. She accepts them all, and the rendezvous for the three is the park bench at seven. Willie and Emma Jarr steal a bottle of glue from the carpenter and put a thick layer of the sticky stuff on the park bench seat. The three swains arrive and take their seats on the treacherous bench. They get into an argument, try to rise and find they cannot. Daring Dan, the reckless laundry driver, sees their predicament and with an eye for business, sells them three pairs of white duck pants belonging to the Commodore, one of his customers. Daring Dan then drives to the Commodore's and excitedly tells him he has been robbed. They set out in search of the thieves. Meanwhile, Gertrude meets Casey, the cop, who also invites her to the excursion. She accepts, forgetting all about the other three. The whole party, including the Commodore and Dan, meet on the boat. The Commodore recognizes his "white ducks" and during the riotous commotion which follows, Gertrude jumps overboard. Brave Claude jumps after her and rescues her. Gertrude then flouts the others and smiles on Claude in gratitude for saving her life. Accusations and counter-accusations commence anew about the trousers, but finally the truth comes out, and after having Daring Dan arrested, the Commodore proves a good fellow by allowing the three friends to keep on the white ducks, and joining in the dance on deck.

A NATURAL MAN (Special Two Parts July 13).—Brought up in the woods from a baby, and never having seen another human being but his father -whose wife had left him - Karl Holden is indeed a "natural man." He loves nature, and is possessed of a splendid physique. So much for the Man. The Maid in the story, Rose, is a wealthy heiress and tired of society's hypocrisy and shallowness. With perhaps the hope of meeting a real man, she visits her uncle in the west. In one of her daily rambles, she is discovered by Karl. Greatly frightened, she runs, but the chase is short, and picking her up bodily he carries the girl to his home. There he eagerly tells his astonished father that he has found a mate, and perhaps, if he looks, he might find one out in the woods.

Holden is speechless, but says nothing. Rose, finding Karl possesses a natural delicacy, despite his cave-man methods of winning a mate, becomes greatly interested in him. She stays with the Holdens over night, and next morning her uncle and a party of searchers burst in on them. Karl, not understanding, wants to fight, but Holden prevents hostilities by introducing himself and explaining matters. Karl sees his mate being led away by her anxious uncle and Mr. Holden has his hands full preventing the boy from following. A few days later Karl suddenly appears at her town house, clad in an ancient suit of clothes. Rose's uncle has taken a liking to Karl and invites him to stay a few days. For a while he proves a white elephant, but after some humiliating and for him heart-breaking -experiences, Rose is awakened to the fact that he is indeed her real mate, and she accepts him as her affianced husband.

THE HONEYMOON BABY (July 14).—The former "Frat" members of the newlyweds, Alexander and Enid Nast, headed by Rocksy Tripp, give them a big send-off when they leave on the train for their honeymoon. Rocksy telegraphs ahead to Sunnyview, the Newlyweds' destination, telling some of his friends there of their expected arrival and asking them to hand out a royal welcome. During the journey, the Nasts attract much attention and create a great deal of amusement when "Wopsy Popsy" feeds "Ickle Dolling" chocolates. A few stations later on, Billy Squires, a long-time married member of Alexander's Fraternity, boards the train with his wife and baby. The two men recognize each other's Fraternity pin and after exaggerated secret signs and fancy hand-shakes are soon renewing old memories and friendships. As the train pulls into Sunnyview, the Nasts are terrified to see a crowd of young people with a decorated auto, a brass band and much hilarity, evidently awaiting the arrival of the newlyweds. Alexander is struck with a brilliant idea. He borrows the Squires' baby, makes arrangements to meet them later, and smilingly steps off the train. The crowd start for him, but on seeing the baby in his arms, stop, and as none of them know the Nasts by sight, they get by without molestation. Then the Squires' come down the steps and with one accord the crowd sweep down upon their helpless victims and carry them off struggling and protesting. Meantime, the Nasts, at their hotel, are having an awful time with the baby, who is bawling at the top of its lungs. When Squires finally escapes and gets back to the hotel he finds Nast trying to palm off the baby on the hotel clerk. Squires is furious, but finally all see the joke, and after a hearty laugh, the Newlyweds are left in peace and happiness.

BILLY, THE BEAR TAMER (July 15).—Constance's father thinks he is a great hunter. He and his wife and daughter go to a mountain cabin to rough it for a while and are followed by Billy, who loves Constance, but is disliked by her father. Pa orders him to stay off the premises, but the young people correspond by means of a carrier-pigeon. Constance notifies her lover that Papa is going into the woods to hunt bear with a guide, and after thinking up a plan, the two take the guide into their confidence to secure his aid. Billy purchases a complete bear costume, and puts up signs in the woods reading something like this: "Fifty Dollar Fine for Killing Bear Under Fourteen (14) Feet Long." Then the guide surreptitiously extracts the cartridges from Pa's rifle, substituting blanks for them, to prevent accidents. Father and guide start off and in the deep woods, with strange noises all around them, the signs—particularly the "14 feet long"—make a deep impression upon Pa. He keeps looking over his shoulder as they advance. Then Billy in his costume steals up behind him and touches him on the shoulder. When Pa sees what is behind him, he lets out a yell and drops to his knees, but the guide "saves his life." Pa takes a shot at the disappearing bear, with, of course no result, except that Billy turns and starts after them again. This time Pa keeps going at full speed until he reaches home. There, through the window, he is horrified to see the big black bear pick Constance up bodily and carry her off. A few moments later, Billy in his natural clothes, appears, does the "hero act," and returns in triumph with his clothes torn, a bearskin and Constance. Overcome with gratitude, Pa gladly consents to let Billy marry his daughter.

WELCOME TO BOHEMIA (July 16). Reluctant to bring his demure bride into the Bohemian atmosphere of his studio, Paul Venner, an artist, wires ahead to Herman, the janitor of his apartment, telling him to fix the place up to look as though human beings lived in it. Vic and Dickie, fellow artists, learn of Paul's return and for a joke exchange clothes with Goldie and Maizie, two artist's models, then all prepare to give Paul a suitable Bohemian greeting. The whole crowd descend upon the newlyweds and at once proceed to make themselves at home. They act like wild Indians and Paul is ashamed of them. Paul receives a telegram announcing that mother-in-law is coming to look over the new husband, and he begins to worry. The bell rings, and Vic says it must be Rene, the leading lady of "Three Weeks," who has promised to drop in. Paul determines his wife shall not see the actress. Upon opening the door, he beholds a bepainted and dolled-up creature, who flings her arms about him wildly. Without a word, he thrusts her into a closet and locks the door. The bell rings again and a trim tailor-made lady steps in. Supposing this to be mother-in-law, Paul gives her a warm greeting. The stranger slaps his face severely and his wife gives him an awful raking over. Meanwhile Vic and the others precipitate a catastrophe, then Agnes hears pounding on the closet door. Paul, nearly crazy with it all, agitatedly opens the door, and with a cry of "Mother!" Agnes rushes into the woman's arms. Mrs. Breslin then delivers a little lecture while the others try to placate the raging Rene. Then the boys step up, and the explanations which follow happily straighten out the tangle.

THE CONFESSION OF MADAME BARASTOFF (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts July 20). Learning that someone among his officers is traitorously carrying information to the enemy, General Barastoff gives orders that any officer absent from his quarters during the night shall be courtmartialed, and if unable to satisfactorily explain his absence, shot as a traitor. Through Nicholas, his old servant, Barastoff has heard that his young wife, Constance, is secretly in love with Lieutenant Sergius Kauvar, one of his officers. The general is a man of keen, analytical mind, and receiving apparent confirmation of his suspicions, entrusts the lieutenant with a dangerous mission. As Barastoff calculated he would, Kauvar that night—with an overpowering desire to see Constance before he leaves—never to return, perhaps—steals from his quarters to bid her good-bye. During the clandestine meeting, Barastoff sends for the lieutenant and the orderly reports Kauvar cannot be found. A fierce joy surging through him, the general next morning summons the lieutenant to courtmartial. Confronted with the charge of being the traitor who is conveying information to the enemy, Kauvar swears he is true to his country but he positively refuses to tell where he was last night. Constance is summoned to the little court, and intensely emotional scenes follow, culminating with the sentence of the court that Kauvar be shot as a traitor without delay. The firing squad take him out, and Constance, through the window, sees the brave young officer prepare to meet his Maker. The strain is too much and with a wild cry of "Stop," she is about to confess—but it is too late, her cries mingle with the crash of the rifles, and the confession remains a dead secret.

CARTOONS IN A LAUNDRY (July 14).—Jip, the dog, in "The Kelly Kids' Kabaret" is ground into sausages before our very eyes. When the dog's natural enemy, the cat, makes fun of him after the "skin game" has been worked upon him, the indignant sausages come to life and give the sarcastic feline a run for his money, the chase ending in an artist's studio, where the hungry artist seizes the sausages and prepares to turn them into an artist, via his mouth. "The Suburbanite" is a satire on the woes of the commuter, whose troubles at home and while on his daily trips to and from the city go on, like Tennyson's brook, forever.

Our old friend, Mr. Hicks, the redoubtable Hercules—soars to celestial heights—is transformed into an angel—and, through a telescope, watches his termagant wife sweating over a wash-tub. Then the bottom drops out of heaven and—Hercules awakes. Once more he is a mere husband, the slave of the woman he promised to love, honor, obey and support. In "Cupid vs. Divorce" we see Cupid, with the aid of a microscope, diagnosing the causes of incompatibility and, eventually, rendering divorce powerless and enforcing the law of "Everlasting Love." This time the ones who are made merry by the mirth-provoking cartoons are a quarrelsome young couple, a bad

HER VOCATION (Special—Three Parts—July 16).—Mrs. Wallace receives word from a magazine editor that he is anxious to publish a paper she has read at a meeting of the Colonial Association. The letter indicates that the editor feels that she possesses considerable literary talent, and, fired by reading it, she decides to drop her routine of social duties and amusements and devote herself to fiction writing. Her first short story is returned with a letter from the editor in which he states that her ignorance of underworld life and conditions make the manuscript unavailable; and he suggests that she try to get a first-hand knowledge of anything of which she may write in the future. She thereupon starts out to "do" the Tenderloin, her trip ending abruptly when she is sent home with her husband, who has been summoned by a policeman after his wife had got into a mix-up with a couple of street loafers. Mrs. Wallace, thereupon, after much persuasion, induces hubby to invade the Tenderloin in search of "local color" which she can use in her writing. In the "Silver Star,' a notorious cafe and dance saloon, he meets Jean Halliday, "special" writer for a metropolitan newspaper. She, too, is after "atmosphere," having been assigned to do a story of night life in the city for the Sunday edition. At midnight everything is in full swing at the cafe, but at about that time Mrs. Wallace, greatly worried over the lateness of the hour and the knowledge that hubby is in a very "lively" locality, sets out to find him. Knowing that he has gone to the "Silver Star," she follows him there, and when admittance is refused, she proceeds to call a cop and have the place "pinched."

In the excitement, her husband and the girl reporter escape through a back window, but are picked up on the outside by one of the reserves. At the station, Mr. Wallace calls his house on the phone, but is told that his wife has gone out. Miss Halliday, too, is unable to get in touch with her sweetheart, a young artist, he also having gone to the cafe to make sure that she was all right. The artist and Mrs. Wallace reach the police station shortly after the husband and the girl reporter have been brought in. The cop, whose beat is in Mr. Wallace's neighborhood, is called in and clears matters up by explaining how he had directed him to "The Silver Star," and a few days later, after Mrs. Wallace has abandoned literature as being too strenuous an occupation, they receive a telegram telling them that their friends of the "Silver Star" adventure, the girl reporter and the artist, are to be married.

ESSANAY.

THE LEATHER GOODS LADY (July 5).—Hopelessly discouraged by her inability to work out of the department store grind, Annie Whitlock, young and pretty, resolves to end her life. She draws from the bank her savings of four years and schemes a big "last day" in which she will seek all of those pleasures she had always longed for. John Burke, a big honest fellow, has procured means to acquire a limousine which he uses as a taxicab. Annie spends her last fourteen dollars for a two hour ride about town. She stops him at Suicide bridge, but Burke does not realize the significance of her despondency until he sees her jump over the rail. He rescues her and they wed.

TEMPER (Special—Three Parts—July 13).—Frank Bradbury, twenty years old, leaves home because his father's ungovernable temper has made life unendurable. He battles hard to conquer the same emotionalism which he has inherited from his father. The only vicious exhibition of Frank's temper occurs when a school mate annoyed his childhood sweetheart—Rose Claybourne. He was expelled from school because of the terriffic beating he gave the youth. He becomes engaged to Rose and together they return to his home, seeking his father's consent to their engagement. The mothers of both are hopeful for a reconciliation. Because she had sanctioned the boy's return home, his mother is attacked by the father. Frank arrives while the father shakes his fist in her face and Frank kills him with a paper weight, is brought to trial and acquitted on the grounds that he was justified in the act as he was protecting his mother. Rose and he marry.

THE FABLE OF THE SCOFFER WHO FELL HARD (July 14).—Mr. Pallzey was a Beetle on Base Ball. Although he had heard of Golf he vowed he would never waste any Time watching the fool game. But one Sunday he was hooked in for fair. After trailing behind numerous Bugs for eighteen Holes he stood off and smiled in a Superior Manner, saying he would like to swat the Robin's Egg just once. And it wasn't long before he had a complete supply of Clubs. The Disease had struck him hard. He took lessons from a Pro. He gave up Business and consecrated himself to his Life Work. After eight years, at a cost of $18,000, Pallzey won Something which looked like an Eye Cup with Handles on it. He called it a Trophy. And now Pallzey declares Golf has added Ten Years to his life.

MORAL: No Man is Safe after he makes one Wallop.

THE PIPE DREAM (July 15).—After a night's sleep in an ash barrel, the tramp seeks breakfast at a nearby house. The fat cook ushers the bulldog onto the scene who chases the tramp up a tree. His corn cob pipe lulls him to sleep again and he dreams. He fancies he picks up a pocketbook filled with bills on the walk, is chased by its owner through the woods, over farms, down streets and finally over the bay, using moored rowboats for a footing. In the woods a fairy appears who dances before him and performs various freaks of nature for his amusement—such as inducing chickens to walk backwards and swimmers to dive from the water to the board and then—as he tries to kiss her—she disappears. Wandering restlessly away he enters a barrel for rest. The barrel is rolled down the hill by several boys. It strikes a tree and explodes. Then he awakens, having fallen out of the tree.

JANE OF THE SOIL (Special—Two Parts—July 17).—As a result of a shake of dice Jane goes away to school, although she has grown up in the Tennessee mountains in wilfulness and ignorance. At college the girl is taken care of by Marion Doyle, whose brother John she meets and whom she promises to marry. During her vacation in the mountain home Jane meets Ralph, John's worthless brother. He attacks her and she shoots him with his own gun. She rushes terror-stricken to the city and tells John she is a murderess. He goes to the mountains whence has come word of Ralph being insane. Having escaped, Ralph again seeks the mountains and there chases Jane, who has returned to the scene of the shooting. She hides in a hut. The door opens and John enters, searching for Ralph, who steps in behind him. There is a struggle. Ralph is choked into unconsciousness. When he recovers he again is sane. Jane comes out of her hiding place and Ralph is told of their betrothal. His heart is touched and he promises to mend his ways.

LUBIN.

ROAD O' STRIFE NO. 15—"The Coming of the Kingdom" (July 12).—So soon as Robert Dane has regained sufficient strength to leave the hospital, he is brought to trial for stealing the cup from the court records, and, upon his admission, is sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 or serve six months in the penitentiary, the court pointing out that, though the circumstances were unusual, the law cannot permit the interference by an individual with established forms. Being unable to pay the fine, Dane is transferred to a cell pending his removal to the penitentiary.

Meanwhile Alene has learned of the part played by Dane in her rescue from the gallows, and the thought that she will soon be wealthy and able to save him from the consequences of his acts fills her with happiness. She soon learns, however, that she is not to be wealthy, the lawyer Madison sadly informing her that her fortune has been thrown away on wildcat securities not worth the claiming. Alene posesses nothing of value except the jewel which has been preserved with the documents in the cup, and this she gives to Madison, asking that he sell it and buy Dane's freedom. Gershom has, through the local Consul, gotten in communication with the Hervo-Alesian Ambassador, and this official has communicated with his government and received instructions. Accompanied by Gershom, he seeks Alene, and reaches the Madison home at about the same time that Dane, released through Madison's efforts, arrive. The Ambassador desires a private audience, but Alene tells him to speak before her friends, or not at all. He tells her that he bears a message from the Emperor; that if Alene will agree to wed a prince of Hervo-Alesia, and to become an ally of the Empire, the Emperor's armies will restore the monarchy and place Alene upon her father's throne as Queen of Urania; that her answer must be given now, and once for all. Dane listens with breaking heart. For a time Alene is silent, looking into the face of Robert Dane, and then she asks softly, "Do you love me?" Again Gershom interposes with a warning cry "She is a queen—it is her destiny!" And Dane says while his soul dies, "I do not love you." For long the girl looks into Dane's eyes, then turns to the waiting Ambassador and gives her answer: "Your Emperor's aid is not needed, for I have already come into my kingdom." Their protests silenced by a gesture, all save Dane file slowly from the room. When they are alone, Alene turns shyly to the man for whose love she has sacrificed a throne. He is dazed, but into his face comes a great light as she whispers—"Now, now I am only a girl, Robert Dane"—and he draws her close against his heart.

STUDIES IN CLAY (July 13).—Something new in the clever animated cartoons is here offered. An eccentric sculptor finds himself without inspiration. He can do nothing with his clay. After consuming an enormous "schooner" of beer, however, he is transported to dreamland. Sitting in a chair before his rough statue he sees it assume many changes. Particle by particle the clay disappears before the eyes of the spectator, until a perfectly modeled image is revealed. Then the statue again assumes its unfinished state, and once more the invisible sculptor produces a beautiful masterpiece. This is repeated several times until the little pen-and-ink tries to take liberties with a tempting girl of clay and meets with a rebuff which knocks him out of sight.

WHAT A CINCH (July 13).—Chief of Police Myers is in love with Molly Mason. So is Dick Young, his lieutenant. Molly tells the chief that perhaps she will marry him when he gets $500. Cohen, a pawnbroker, calls at the station house to lodge a complaint while Myers is away. Dick is in charge. He is in a bad humor and further insults Cohen by fining him twenty dollars. Myers arrives in time to make the entire force apologize, and Dick is forced to return the twenty.

Dick frames up a deal to get some easy money. He calls at Cohen's shop and leaves an old ginger box in Cohen's care, telling him that he will call for it on his return. Dick disguises himself and calls again at the pawnshop. He spots the ginger box and offers Cohen $500 for it. Cohen is frantic, but he promises to try and secure it for him. Dick leaves a fictitious address and departs. Cohen takes the chief into his confidence. Meyers drops his bankroll and when Dick returns he sells the box to Cohen for four hundred. Cohen and Myers start to find the antique collector and find nothing but a vacant lot. They realize that they have been swindled. Myers blames it all on Cohen and proceeds to beat him up.

ALL FOR OLD IRELAND (Special—Three Parts—July 14).—Eileen Donaghue loves Myles Murphy. Eileen's mother approves, so why shouldn't the young people make light of the ever present sorrow of Ireland—British oppression. Colonel Reid of the English army, acting on instructions from his government, seeks at every turn to thwart Irish independence. He has found a willing aid in traitorous Fagin, unsuspected by the townspeople of selling their secrets to the King's representative. But Fagin after all has done little harm to the villagers, nor has he earned the money paid by Colonel Reid. More spying is demanded of him. He dares press his attentions upon Eileen and is soundly thrashed by Myles for his presumption. After that Fagin makes Myles his most hated enemy. He betrays him to the British as being in league against the British government, and, after a search, Colonel Reid discovers Myles in Eileen's home. He is marched to prison.

The girl seeks the consolation of Father O'Flynn, who succeeds in gaining permission to take her to the prison to see Myles. In his presence the lovers meet and Eileen surreptitiously hands Myles a metal bar by which he may effect his escape. Then she and the priest leave. Nightly Myles works on the stone wall of his cell, and when the last stone is loosened, and the bars are twisted, he knocks senseless a passing guard. Then Myles slides down a rope, where he finds Eileen waiting for him. They are about to hurry away when the patrolling guard discovers them. The alarm is given and Myles is pursued. He is succored by Eileen and her mother and concealed in their hay wagon. The bayonets of the Britishers, piercing haystacks and into the wagon itself, barely miss causing Myles' death. Finally Eileen opens the way for Myles' escape, though the cost to her is bitter. On the ship which has secretly arrived from France bearing arms and ammunition for the patriots of Old Ireland, Myles finds refuge as she is about to sail across the sea. He protests his undying love for Eileen and solemnly promises to send for her mother and herself as soon as he finds a haven in France.

A HOUSE OF CARDS (Special—Two Parts—July 15).—At first John Allen stands high in the esteem of his companions. He loves Mary Clark. At a barn dance one night he receives a special delivery letter, informing him of a position awaiting him in the city. Mary is alarmed, but John promises never to forget her. His assurance somehow fails to allay Mary's fears, and she begs him to take her home. As they go, John slips an engagement ring on her finger. And so "the deck is cut," and John leaves for the city to play fortune.

He becomes a clerk in the office of William Robertson, a broker. Mary receives a glowing letter, and is proud of her John. Then John meets Myrtle, the broker's daughter, and the attraction is mutual. John advances in position by his discovery that Brown, a fellow-clerk, is "one card shy," having stolen funds from his employer. "A heart flush" results from John's growing intimacy with Myrtle, and soon Mary receives a letter from him, stating that he is too busy to write. John's good fortune increases. One night he meditates in his room by the fireside, and his ambitious dreams are visualized in a wondrous house of cards which appears in a vision before him. Mary is completely forgotten in the career John sees for himself. He makes a "lucky draw" when he is made junior partner and Myrtle consents to be his wife. There is "a broken suit of hearts" back home, where Mary is heart-broken when she does not hear from her lover.

John's ambition ever leads him onward. He dabbles in stocks, has a sure proposition, and "chances a four card draw" by taking the firm's securities to put over the deal which will bring him a fortune. He has been told that he cannot lose, but he is troubled. His thoughts wander back to the past, and Mary. The impulse comes to go back to her, and he leaves a hasty note of explanation for Myrtle, stating that he has been called to the country for a few days. But meanwhile, Mary, "the discard," has grieved sorely, and is seen to be very ill. When John arrives in the country town, he is astonished at the reproachful glances given him. He goes to Mary's home, finds the village doctor in the front room, and to his anxious query for Mary, the doctor points to the next room. John enters the room slowly, and finds Mary dead. An overwhelming remorse seizes him for what he has done. A few moments later the doctor hands him a telegram. John reads that his stock deal has collapsed, all his securities are gone, and he realizes that he is an embezzler. The house of cards again appears before him, but only to collapse.

AN HOUR OF FREEDOM (July 16). Thomas Goddard proposes to Edith Walton and is accepted. Preparations are made for their marriage. The night before her marriage she cannot sleep—she can only think. She is to marry the catch of the season, and be surrounded by wealth and luxury. She can't reason it out, but there is something lacking. It is romance. As the dawn peeps in and Edith realizes that she has but a few hours of freedom left, she feels impelled to go out doors and walk. She dons simple clothes and tiptoes downstairs. The front of the house is locked but Edith gets out through a rear window, just in time to meet the milkman on the back steps. The milkman is a husky, red-cheeked youth, who has a record of housemaid sweethearts. He mistakes Edith for a new maid and proceeds to get in right.

In the mood for any sort of adventure, Edith half encourages the youth. He invites her for a ride on his wagon and she daringly accepts. Edith grows hungry and he gives her a bottle of milk. His milk all served, the driver halts his horse in a quiet lane, intending to become better acquainted with his new conquest. He uses all his well-tried arts, but has never had quite so hard a time gaining a kiss from a girl. But this makes him determined and Edith is becoming alarmed, when on that quiet lane, appears Thomas Goddard. Tom, the night before, had been given a farewell dinner by his bachelor friends which has put him in a frame of mind that compels him to seek a last few free hours. The shock is mutual. Tom demands to know the meaning of this. The exasperated milkman, interrupted at his favorite sport, bids Tom to go along about his business. There is a fight in which the milkman comes out second best. Then come explanations. All go off in the milk team and at eight are married by a country minister while the society folks at home search high and low for the bride and groom.

Tom and Edith have half a mind to start right out on their honeymoon without going back home, but decide it would be a shame to cheat society out of its ceremony, so they return in the milk wagon secretly and show up at high noon to go through with the red tape. But as the minister ties the knot in a perfectly formal way, Tom and Edith exchange winks, which are really little signs of a happy marriage, meaning that their perfectly formal marriage was not unattended by romance.

WIFIE'S MA COMES BACK (July 17).—Wifie, at the breakfast table, informs Billie that his mother-in-law, who is an invalid, has been advised by her physician that to regain her health she must visit the seashore. Acting upon the advice, she is soon on her way to pay them a long visit. This news upsets Billie so that he starts to throw plates around the room and tears up the place in a fit of rage. He goes to his office, where he makes it very unpleasant all day long for the clerks.

On his return home wifie informs Billie that mother-in-law is waiting to receive him. He goes to meet her, none too willingly, and tells her that what she needs is strenuous exercise. He at once takes her in hand and starts to give her boxing lessons, much to his delight, as he can maul her about. Later wifie has an idea and phones for a real boxing instructor who soon has Billie's mother-in-law in tip-top shape. Imagine's Billie's surprise when she invites him to put on the gloves. He does so reluctantly and, after being mauled around the room, he is finally counted out. Mother-in-law then takes the reins of the establishment and rules the household by forcing Billie to pay all bills contracted by his wife.

BIOGRAPH.

AS IT HAPPENED (July 12).—The new foreman falls in love with the ranchman's daughter, and notes with jealousy her joy over a letter which her father receives. An hour later, in town to purchase supplies, he sees the girl, who has driven to meet the train, bestow a warm welcome on a young "tenderfoot." The newcomer is the girl's brother, as her lover might have learned; but in a fit of jealousy he rides back to the ranch and draws his time. The ranchman, not wishing to lose a good man, inquires the reason, but gets no satisfactory answer. "I want to quit," is all the foreman will vouchsafe. He takes what is coming to him and rides away on a prospecting trip. The girl's brother, home after four years at college, has brought back with him some ill habits. He falls in with bad company and goes down the line. While he is gambling in a saloon with two card sharps, the ex-foreman, on a trip to town, enters and, recognizing the tenderfoot, watches the play. It is obvious that the young man is being cheated. Suddenly his suspicions are aroused, and he jumps to his feet, only to look down the barrel of a pistol. There is a shot, and the card sharp, wounded in the arm, drops his gun. It is the ex-foreman who has fired. A few moments later, outside the saloon, he hears the tenderfoot confess that the large sum of money thus miraculously saved was stolen from his father. "Your father?" exclaims the ex-foreman. "Then she is your sister!" Cautioning the young man to say nothing, he rides to the ranch house late at night, and effecting an entrance, replaces the money in the drawer from which it was taken. Hearing a sound, the rancher comes on the scene and, after denouncing the foreman as a thief, orders him out. On the road, he finds the tenderfoot a victim of the card sharps, who, not finding the money, have ridden on to break into the ranch house. Taking the boy back to the ranch, the ex-foreman is held up by the card sharps, but by means of the "twirling gun" trick gets the drop on them. His honor cleared, he wins the girl.

COINCIDENCE, (Special—Two Parts—July 13).—Shakespeare George and Tom Evans, arbitrators of public opinion in Willow Creek, are present when the boys begin to ridicule the music of an old blind violinist set down by the stage coach that afternoon. They pronounce the music fine, and, to sustain their reputations as critics, clean out the saloon. They take the old man to their mine, where he is welcomed by their friend, Stinger Johnson, and his wife, Marietta. As the days pass, the old man endears himself to them all. Marietta treats him as a father. The partners make a big clean-up and insist that he share with them. One day Stinger Johnson reads aloud a news item to the effect that a notorious desperado is dying in jail at San Bernardino. The old man startles them by requesting to be taken to San Bernardino.

Arrived there, he asks a question of the dying man: "What have you done with my daughter and her child?" The question dates back twenty years, when the old man, then a young musician, had forbidden his daughter to marry a worthless man. She had gone the way of her heart and bitterly regretted it. Discovering her whereabouts, the father persuaded her to come with him when her husband entered, the worse for drink, and, in a struggle, blinded his antagonist with pepper. Then the desperado took his wife and child away. Dying, he tells, how, after his wife's death, he placed the child in care of an old neighbor and never learned what became of her. Back to Willow Creek goes the old man, his question still unanswered. But coincidence—"the greatest mystery of human events," as Shakespeare George said—reveals his long-lost granddaughter in the person of Marietta. An old portrait of her mother, and some papers which the sheriff took from the desperado, serve to establish her identity—and the wanderer's quest comes to an end at last.

THE ONE FORGOTTEN (July 15).—Grant Allen, off to the woods to recuperate, bids goodby to his neighbor, Louise Sumner. In the woods he falls in with John Orten, a trapper, who has a lovely daughter, Marie. Falling in love with Marie, he marries her, and remains with the trapper. As time passes, he begins to long for the city life. Summoned home on important business, he bids farewell to his wife, and departs, never to return. In the city he becomes infatuated with Louise, who is not aware of his marriage. The following summer Louise, with a party of friends, goes on a camping trip to the same locality. Separated from her friends, she comes across a newmade grave, with a young woman strewing flowers on it. It is Marie, who has recently buried her baby, named after its father. Louise reads the name, and, by skilful questions, confirms her suspicions. She persuades Marie to go home with her, and there brings Grant Allen unexpectedly face to face with his wife. In an agony of shame he implores Marie's foregiveness, and takes his wife to his arms. Though lured by the city into temporary forgetfulness, he has never really loved another woman.

BROKEN WAYS (July 16—Re-Issue No. 6).—Under false colors, the road agent wins the love of the young telegraph operator. She does not learn his true character until after the marriage, when he begins to entertain strange, uncouth visitors, with whom he goes out on mysterious night rides. At last she determines to live her life apart, and, leaving him, goes to another place, where she obtains a position as operator at the railroad station. The local sheriff meets her and presently asks her to marry him. She holds him off; but when he renews his suit she feels in honor bound to tell him of the barrier that exists between them. Hard pressed by the law, the road agent circulates a report of his own death, and, under cover of the security thus obtained, commits another outrage. The sheriff, taking the trail, follows it alone across the divide and enlists the aid of the local sheriff. The bandit has gone to the station, where he recognizes his wife and implores her to aid him. She hides him from the officers, but later refuses to go with him when he suggests a new start. Angered, he seizes her, and a struggle ensues. An express agent sees what is happening and runs after the officers. They return, and in the pistol battle that follows the road agent is killed. His wife is thus freed from the bond which has kept her from the arms of the man she really loves, and later, her faith in mankind renewed, she weds the sheriff, turning her back upon the tragic past, facing the future with confidence.

THE LITTLE RUNAWAYS (July 17).—Daddy and mamma quarrel, and the little girl is very unhappy. She has a nurse who is more interested in popular novelists than in her charge. Not until the family reaches its summer home does the lonely child find a real companion—the son of the gardener. On the day when mamma's friends come to visit, daddy is shut up in his room after another tiff. The girl wanders through the house and, reaching for a flower on a table, smashes the vase. Mamma promptly scolds her, and daddy, taking her part, makes matters worse. She wanders into the garden, convinced that nobody loves her. The gardener's boy, of the same opinion, suggests that they go away together, in search of new parents. By the lake they find a boat moored and are about to embark in it when the boy decides that he will first go for provisions. He has just looted the larder when his father, entering, catches him red-handed. Explanations ensue, and the gardener rushes down to the lake, where, the boat having drifted away, he has a long swim before rescuing the girl. Meanwhile, daddy and mamma have missed her and are frantically searching the grounds. In joy over her safe return they become reconciled.

RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS

No sensible woman would trim her expensive silk dress with cheesecloth.

No sensible man would equip a high priced automobile with pasteboard tires.

—And yet there are motion picture theatres where expensive and elegant equipment is failing to bring its full return largely because those in charge are thoughtlessly placing themselves in the same class as the woman with the silk-cheesecloth dress and the man with the pasteboard auto tires.

These theatres are the ones in which any makeshift sheet or curtain is considered good enough to bring out the projected picture—which has cost thousands of dollars to make and more thousands of of dollars to house.

Eventually, every picture theatre in existence will use a screen scientifically prepared—and, because of its superior merit, the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN will be the one most in evidence.

Radium Gold Fibre Screens have won their spurs. For years they have been giving satisfaction in the foremost motion picture theatres in the country. The Million Dollar Strand, New York City, has used one since the day it opened.

The same perfect screen which has been an important factor in the Strand's success is at your command—for "We Make But One Grade—and That's the Best."

A Radium Gold Fibre Screen is a possibility for any exhibitor who honestly wants one. Let us explain our new sales plan.

A STUDIO ESCAPADE (Special—Two Parts—July 5).—Blanche Whitman, an artist's model, tires of Bohemian merrymaking. David Rood has no assignment and leaves the newspaper office at midnight. Collins escorts Blanche from the studio. When they enter an automobile Collins endeavors to embrace Blanche and she struggles and escapes from the auto into her boarding house. David Rood, about to enter his room, sees Blanche's distress. Beach resolves to give a party and tells Collins in his studio that he will engage Blanche for a refined song or two. A milliner admires Blanche's hat and is told by Blanche that she trimmed it herself. The milliner then says: "If you could raise $500.00 I would take you as a partner." Rent day comes and Blanche has no money. She receives a letter from Beach offering her $20.00 to sing at the Bohemian party the next Sunday night.

Beach's Bohemian parties have become notorious and the police resolve to raid the place. A tip comes to the newspaper office, and David Rood is assigned to the story. The revelry is at its height at Beach's studio. Beach endeavors to become familiar with Blanche. David Rood, the reporter, enters and, seeing Beach's action, strikes him on the jaw, and Beach drops across the table. Blanche clings to David and says: "He only did what a real man would do. You are a set of cowards." David then tells Beach of Blanche's opportunity to enter the millinery business. Beach sends Blanche a check for $500.00.

Alan Darrel overhears the plot, visits King Frederick and proposes to encase all the automobile trucks in steel and invent other engines of destruction in order to successfully combat the larger army of Prince Otto. Alan Darrel, the American, slays Prince Otto in an exciting sword combat. He thus wins the love of Princess Griselda.

EBB TIDE (Special—Three Parts—July 8).—Estelle Velaine becomes utterly absorbed in a book, entitled "Love, Spiritual and Material." She has utterly forgotten that Jerome Esmond is to call upon her that evening. Mrs. Velaine, a much be-diamoned dowager has ever materialistic ambitions for Estelle. When Jerome arrives at the Velaine home, the dowager rushes in on Estelle's reverie and orders the daughter to hurry and receive Jerome Esmond. Estelle accepts Jerome's proposal to marry in order to please her parents. She does not love the man. Business with his publishers calls Allen Forbes to the city. Helena finds a newspaper which contains the announcement of the engagement of Estelle Velaine to Jerome Esmond. Helena resolves to invite Estelle to her home to help pass the lonely days.

Then comes the first ripple of the incoming tide, for, in the interior of an art exhibit gallery in the city, Allen Forbes and Estelle Velaine meet before the same painting. They register the same emotions and each wonders where they have known the other before. The tide continues to rise for Estelle Velaine accepts Helena Forbes' invitation to Highcliff. The tide nears its flood, for Estelle arrives at Highcliff, and then the tide floats a haunted ship, for the scene seen from Estelle's window at Highcliff is suggestive of the painting which had so strongly impressed her. Allen Forbes is unconscious of the fact that Estelle Velaine and the woman who so appealed to him in the art gallery in the city are one and the same. Several days later Jerome joins the house party. Jerome and Helena are also mutually attracted and slowly but surely also drift together just as Estelle and Allen, only they are perfectly unconscious of themselves while the other pair are perfectly conscious that the tide is sweeping them onward.

Estelle and Allen stroll to the beach. The incoming tide reaches ever higher onto the sands. Allen says to Estelle: "Flood tide! What a wonderful moment it has brought to us!" He starts to gather Estelle in his arms. She steps aside with a warning gesture. She points back to the house. "No, Allen, we must not. Think of her tragedy if we yield, remember the ebb tide!" she exclaims. But at this moment a great wave foams in. It frightens her and she falls into his arms as the flood tide curls about their feet. Jerome shows her the sympathy for which she has hungered so long. Suddenly he kisses her. She springs back with a look of horror as the door opens and Allen and Estelle step in. Both women shrink back from each other instinctively with a cry of mutual guilt.

Midnight and ebb tide! Estelle in her apartment tries to fight down her love for Allen. In the empty sitting room, Allen, haggard and suffering, walks slowly through the room. He leaves the room and Estelle sees his retreating form and follows him. They meet at the beach. "Good night—and good-bye! Thank God there's no wreck on the beach!" she tells him. He kisses her hand lingeringly. She hurries back to the house. Allen starts as if to throw himself into the sea. Estelle stops, looks back, sees his movement, calls back to him, holding up her hand in rebuke: "Don't do it, Allen, that would not be brave." He turns and stares at her; then strolls along the low tide with bowed head.

BOUND BY THE LEOPARD'S LOVE (Jungle-Zoo Picture—July 10).—Ursaline and Chiquita, are beautiful daughters of Morgan, a mine owner. Ursaline is engaged to marry Philip, a surveyor. Chiquita secretly loves Philip. Chiquita is stricken with a mysterious jungle fever and all the efforts of the physician to bring her to consciousness prove unavailing. Zoreeka, a servant, goes to Kinta, a native herb doctor, is given a potion and is told that Chiquita will regain consciousness in twelve hours. Chiquita is presented with a cub leopard by the herb doctor. She takes the cub home, but it later makes its escape, returning to the home of the herb doctor. Chiquita follows it, and is attacked by the herb doctor. Philip sees a leopard passing by. He follows it to the herb doctor's hut just in time to rescue Chiquita.

THE SHADOW AND THE SHADE (Special—Two Parts—July 12).—John Hillman, a banker, is convalescent after a serious illness and is cared for by his wife, Anne. Hillman is told that he may visit his office for a few hours, but must avoid all excitement, for a sudden shock might prove fatal. Robert Foster desires to effect a compromise with the Hillman interests who control the Consolidated Stores Company. He sees Hillman at his office, who refuses to compromise, and he tells Foster that his syndicate must settle in full by Wednesday noon. Foster, in desperation, remembers that he knew Hillman's wife years ago and resolves to plead with her, for he realizes that it his only chance. He meets Anne Hillman at her home, but she says she cannot help him. As he pleads with her, Hillman enters and shows jealousy.

Foster tells his business confreres that with Hillman removed, a settlement cannot fail to be effected. He causes a note to be written Mrs. Hillman, signed by her husband's physician, asking her to consult with him privately regarding Mr. Hillman's condition. Anne Hillman and her maid leave to consult the physician, and Hillman believes that they leave for some other motive. Dr. Harden, Hillman's physician, is surprised when Anne calls upon him and tells her that he did not send her the message. He decides to return with her to her home. Foster has had a profile of Anne Hillman fastened to a window shade opposite the window of Hillman's apartment. A light placed behind the silhouette makes it appear as if Anne were in Foster's room. Spying this profile, the excitement and jealous rage is too much for Hillman, who falls to the floor unconscious. His man servant, conspiring with Foster across the way, phones to Foster that Hillman is dead and Foster believes that his plot has succeeded.

Dr. Harden and Anne Hillman enter the Hillman home where the physician restores Hillman to semi-consciousness. Mrs. Hillman calls in Darceau of the Secret Service. He discovers Foster's plot and summons the police. Foster is arrested and Hillman comes to realize that his wife has been faithful through all things.

THE PARSON WHO FLED WEST (July 13).—The Rev. John Grant receives a letter from his sister, Nell, in which she tells him that her husband has speculated with and lost the $10,000 of church funds he entrusted to him. Arthur Evans, his brother-in-law, contemplates suicide, but John Grant enters just in time and saves the man's life. Grant tells Arthur: "As you have my sister and child to care for, I will take all the blame for the loss of this money." He writes to the church vestrymen that the $10,000 subscribed for the church and entrusted to Grant has been lost in speculation and that he is forced to go away. The vestrymen order the Rev. John Grant's arrest.

The parson arrives at Ten Strike, Nevada, where he opens a little church and works among the rough westerners. His acquaintanceship with Bess, the Organist, ripens into love, but he tells her there is a stain upon his name and he can never marry. Later, the whereabouts of Grant are discovered and orders are sent to arrest him, but the westerners resolve to rescue him from the sheriff. The parson, however, agrees to go with the sheriff. Just as he is about to be rushed into prison, a telegram comes that the guilty man has confessed and Grant is freed.

PUP, THE PEACEMAKER (July 14).—Jake Adams and his wife Sarah cannot agree in anything. The wife says, "You can have the boy, I'll take the girl and go." Jake tries to dissuade Sarah, but she is determined. They part. Until Mrs. Adams can arrange matters satisfactorily, she and her little daughter, Mildred, make their home with a nearby friend.

Both the children are lonely, each without the other. The little girl sighs for her dog, and the mother tries to pacify her with another one, but Mildred insists upon her own little dog. Adams, in his lonely home, has fond memories of the days of their honeymoon. He seeks consolation with his little boy.

Mildred wanders away from her mother and finds her little brother and the beloved pup. The children and the pup play together. The mother, following the trail of her missing child, meets the two children and their father. Adams convinces his wife of her folly and they are reconciled.

THE OCTOPUS (Special—Three Parts—July 15).—Archie Sheldon, determining to go to New York City, is given a letter by his mother to Thatcher Thole, Gotham's most unscrupulous financier. She tells her son that Thole is an old friend of the family, and will undoubtedly give him a start in life. Archie rises in the business world under the unscrupulous financier's tutelage until he becomes known as Thole's right-hand man. Early in his start Archie becomes acquainted with Violet Reinhardt, an artist's model, who has become afflicted with the great white plague. Violet Reinhardt has been told by her physician that a year in the country will restore her health. Archie Sheldon sends her $500 with boyish liberality and the Octopus—the great city—retains Violet in its clutches. Instead of spending this money in the recovery of her health, she again seeks the bright lights of Broadway.

In the meantime, Thole is coaching Archie, who frequently proves the intermediary for Thole's shady deals. Mrs. Slade, a prepossessing widow, has invested in Thole's worthless stocks. Thole, in the meantime, becomes entangled with a chorus girl, who being insanely jealous, writes Thole a letter telling him that she will not be supplanted by another woman, and that she will make known his shady deals. This letter is inadvertently left in the home of Mrs. Slade by Thole, and is read by her. Planning to marry Thole herself, she becomes enraged and asks for an explanation from the financier. Thole cannot afford to lose Mrs. Slade's investment. At one of the midnight revelries at his palatial home, he orders Archie Sheldon to assume responsibility for the letter, telling Archie that he, Thole, has informed Mrs. Slade that the letter was intended for Archie. Archie refuses to surrender his manhood in such a manner. Then it is that the insanely jealous woman, supported by Thole, cries to Archie: "You cannot refuse. He is your father and everybody on Broadway knows it."

Archie is stunned by this news. He looks questioningly at Thole, who acknowledges the fact. The women leave and they are left alone. Thole then tells Archie of the old life, when he had promised to marry Archie's mother, but how the poison of the great city had compelled him to forget his determination; of how Archie's mother had returned to him unopened his letters and drafts, and of how mother love finally conquered and she had sacrificed her pride and asked that her son be cared for by Thole. Archie refuses a reconciliation with his conscience-stricken father and informs him that he will return to his mother who needs him.

A NIGHT'S LODGING (July 8).—Jerry is unable to pay his board bill and because his landlady makes insistent requests for her money he decides to leave without the customary adieus. The landlady, however, divines his plan and sets in wait for him. But her efforts go for naught as Jerry escapes after vanquishing all interferers. With trouble and worry thus banished from his mind, Jerry blithely strolls into a cafe where, by a process all his own, he acquires a bit of money. This he proceeds to spend immediately by selecting a room in a hotel in preference to a dreary lodging house.

The hotel halls are mysterious to Jerry who, in an effort to locate the bathroom, wanders by chance into the room occupied by a young couple. Screams from the woman and blows from the man make Jerry realize his mistake and he bolts away at top speed only to rush into the arms of other guests whom, because of his negligee attire, he wishes to avoid. A bathroom door is conveniently unlocked and into it Jerry ambles only to confront a very queer looking old maid who promptly faints. Horrified, Jerry hurries away by way of the fire escape and after a few interesting incidents en route finally reaches the street. Here he is nabbed by a squad of police who have been chasing him for hours. The final scene shows Jerry behind the bars which he strums appropriately.

CIRCUS MARY (Three parts—June 21).—Mary Elton, a wire-walker, marries John Hammond, a lawyer and politician. After her marriage she bids farewell to the circus. After the honeymoon, Mary finds that she is a detriment to her husband's political career and, after coming upon a letter addressed to him in which he is informed that his marriage to a circus girl makes it impossible for him to receive a congressional nomination at the hands of Michael Haggerty, a prominent politician, she writes a letter to her husband informing him of her discovery. Mary returns to her old life in the circus, and receives a cordial welcome from Marsac, the head clown, and her former associates. John Hammond pursues his political ambitions and makes no effort to find his wife, not knowing that a daughter has been born to them. Mary dies in child-birth, having previously extracted a promise from the clown that he will look after her baby. Little Mary grows to womanhood and becomes the joy and pride of the circus. She makes the acquaintance of Hugh Graham, the district attorney.

The district attorney and John Hammond, who has been elected governor, view the circus parade. Mary is seen coming down the street on horse-back followed by the clown. After the parade the various outside attractions of a typical circus are pictorially reproduced. We see Pedro and a crowd of men gambling while Mary visits the snake-charmer and plays with the snakes. The manager objects to Pedro's gambling and threatens to notify the police, whereupon Pedro and the other gamblers assault the manager. Instantly there arises a cry of "Hey, Rube," and a fight ensues between the gamblers and the circus employees. Pedro pulls out a revolver and kills one of the tent men. The police arrive and the district attorney is summoned to investigate the murder. Mary tells the district attorney that she had seen Pedro fire the shot, and the murdered man is taken away in the patrol wagon, Mary and the other employees following in an auto. Pedro and his followers attack the auto, gag Mary and the district attorney, and take them to a den. Left alone, Mary and the district attorney manage to rid themselves of the ropes that bind them. Mary, being an expert wire-walker, goes to the window and, with the aid of an open umbrella, walks across the telegraph wires and climbs down a telegraph pole. After her escape from the den, Mary telephones to the police station and the captain sends policemen in an auto to the address she gives over the telephone.

While the gamblers are carousing in their den, they are notified that policemen are arriving. They try to escape by running to the top of the house. The district attorney has barred the attic door with furniture to prevent the gamblers from entering. The gamblers break in the attic door and while they try to get the best of the district attorney, who is vigorously defending himself, Mary and the police arrive.

Pedro manages to escape by swinging along a telegraph pole to the ground, but the other gamblers are captured. Mary takes an umbrella and goes through her remarkable wire-walking act, being closely watched by the governor from a private box. Next we see Pedro entering at the back of the box. He has a knife in his hand and Mary, catching a glimpse of him from her elevated post on the wire, shouts a warning. The detective seizes Pedro and the governor is saved. Mary loses her balance in the excitement and is seriously injured by her fall.

The governor sees a remarkable resemblance in her to the wife who deserted him years before, investigates, and discovers she is his daughter. Later Mary marries the district attorney.

"I cannot express my praise for these films enough"

The Mutual Film Corporation,

Dear Mr. C. W. Taylor:—

In regard to the Mutual Masterpictures I want to say a word or two. I have played "The Quest" and "The Outcast," the first at the opening of the National Theatre.

"The Quest" is one of the greatest pictures that was ever shown on a screen, the photography is just as steady as a rock. "The Outcast" is wonderful.

I have played a great many features, but I do not think there is any that are any better than these two. "A Man's Prerogative," "On the Night Stage," "Captain Macklin," "The Cup of Life," "A Child of God" and "Enoch Arden" are very good and rank next in line to "The Quest" and "The Outcast."

WHAT PRICE WILL YOU GIVE ME ON A RETURN ENGAGEMENT OF "THE QUEST" AND "THE OUTCAST"?

As I said before, I think the Mutual Masterpictures that I have run so far, are as good as any features that are on the market today and a GREAT deal better than some that are counted as features.

I CANNOT EXPRESS MY PRAISE FOR THESE FILMS ENOUGH, AND ONLY HOPE THAT OTHER EXHIBITORS WILL SEE IT IN THE SAME WAY I DO AND BOOST THE MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES, BECAUSE IT IS TO THE INTEREST OF EVERYONE IN THE BUSINESS TO GIVE THE PUBLIC THE BEST.

Kindly let me hear from you in regard to playing a return on those two I mention.

Yours for continued success with the Mutual Masterpictures
The National Theatre,
JOS. H. MARSHALL (signed).

Another Proof of Success

Why does Mr. Marshall want to book Mutual Masterpictures for "return engagements?" Because the S. R. O. sign prevented many of his patrons, who desired to do so, from seeing the first performances and naturally they demanded a second showing. After all the proof of the picture is in the box office. We have hundreds of such letters in our files.

THE PRIZE STORY (Three Parts—July 14).—Martha Turner and John Reynolds, sweethearts, are talking over their future, when, much to Martha's disgust, she finds her father and Dick Osgood, the city chap, discussing her. Dick takes his leave, being assured that he shall marry Martha. Martha and John approach Martha's father, who emphatically tells the young man that Martha shall marry Dick Osgood and not him. Martha pleads and finally persuades her father to give his consent upon one condition—that John shall make $1,000 within a year. Picking up a magazine, John sees an advertisement of a $1,000 photoplay contest, which is to close April 30, 1915. He decides he will write a scenario. While planning his plot he decides at once that Martha shall be a beautifully gowned society girl, Dick Osgood, the city chap, and the villain, and last of all, he, himself, a successful artist. He writes the following story:

Martha, now in the city, driving her machine, is in an accident. John, the successful artist, upon entering his studio, hears the crash, goes to her assistance, and takes her to his studio, where he gives her a stimulant. John gives her his card, and invites her to call again. Upon her arrival home, she decides to tell her husband all about her experience, and he, upon hearing that the artist must be rich, thinks he can get some easy money, so insists that Martha 'phone John and invite him to call the next day, planning to return as the unexpected husband and demand a check for several thousand dollars. Martha absolutely refuses, but at the point of his revolver does as he bids. Next day arrives and John calls up Martha. Then Dick and his friends enter the scene, tell John that he will kill him unless he comes across with a check, for he is her husband and has heard everything. John complies. Dick and his companions leave, but first place Martha in a chair with his revolver pointed at John. When Dick leaves, John turns upon Martha and says he thought she was a good woman, but her little game worked. Martha is very repentant, assures John she is good, and couldn't help doing what she did. John won't believe her, and is about to go when Martha persuades him to listen to her story. She tells him that Dick Osgood was the catch of the season and her father insisted that she marry him. Dick does not care for this, so writes Martha a letter and asks her to elope with him. The night of the elopement comes, Dick comes to town, 'phones some of his friends and tells them he wants one of them to impersonate a parson. Everything is arranged. Dick brings Martha to the inn and they are supposed to be married, but later she learns the truth while in her city home. Dick, with his drunken friends are playing cards and the supposed parson tells of the mock marriage performed at the inn. Martha overhears and from then on vows she will get even with her supposed husband.

Then the picture fades back to Margaret telling John that she will get even with Dick this night, and will return him the money Dick has taken from him with interest. John now believes Martha and takes his leave. That night Dick returns in a drunken rage. They quarrel. Finally he throws a chair, and furniture, lamps and other articles fly. The room is ablaze. Martha strikes Dick over the head and flies for her life. She goes to John and explains to him that she has not the money, but that she had killed Dick. John and Martha go to the window and watch the house burn, but John tells her not to fear, he will engage the best lawyers in the country to defend her. Then the butler enters and tells about the fire. Martha excitedly inquires if any one was saved and receives a negative reply. John then takes Martha in his arms and says we won't need those lawyers now. That is the end of John's story.

Ten days later John calls on Martha and tells her what he has done. The postman comes along and gives John an envelope. He is very nervous when he sees it is from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and cannot open it; so Martha does, and much to their amazement, find a check for $1,000, and also a complimentary letter and an offer of a position in their scenario department. They rush to Martha's father and show him the letter and check for $1,000. When he sees both he is not very pleased, but, having given his consent, must live up to it. However, he says, "If it weren't for those movin' pitchers he would never have gotten her."

THE TRUCE (July 16).—Because of the extravagance of his wife, Jim Mason's home is broken up and he becomes a thief. His first attempt at burglary nets him the famous Allison pearls and a most unexpected acquaintance with Florence Allison, whose home is about to be broken up through the neglect of her husband. Jim recalls his own lost happiness, and, prompted by deep sympathy, he suggests a plan to restore her husband's love. In gratitude, Florence insists that Jim shall keep the pearls, which he does, only on condition that he shall return them in six months in case his plan shall have failed. The husband, upon returning after a night out with the boys, finds Florence bound and unconscious, and realizes that his neglect has placed her life in jeopardy. The shock rekindles his dormant love and Florence regains her happiness.

The trust makes Jim face life from a new angle. To protect the pearls and make good his word of honor to a trusting woman becomes the ruling passion of his life. He faces and overcomes temptations to dispose of the pearls. Down on his luck, he drifts back to the old rendezvous, where one of the gang who has long suspected Jim has the pearls, determines to have them. In a fight which ensues Jim is injured and drags himself to the Allison home to redeem his pledge, as he believes his plan has failed. He finds Florence happy in the possession of her husband's love and receives from her his just reward.

THE CLOSING CHAPTER (Three Parts—July 11).—Hamilton Walker, an elderly widower, is living with his unmarried sister, Martha. As the story opens, the Colonel receives a letter from his daughter-in-law, appealing to him on behalf of his grandchild, Beulah. The letter refers to the fact that the Colonel had disinherited his son, John, Jr., some sixteen years before for having married a poor girl, and that John, Jr., too proud to ask his father's assistance in time of trouble, had died of worry and overwork. The wife supported herself and the child during the following years, but now, being broken in health, she appeals to the grandfather to provide for Beulah. Martha finds the letter before the Colonel sees it; and, suspecting its source, she opens it. As a result of the Colonel's break with his son (which was due largely to the influence of Martha), the Colonel has willed all of his property to Martha; and Martha, now fearing that by some possibility her brother might be influenced in favor of the grandchild, is determined to thwart the possibility and is about to destroy the letter when she is interrupted by the announcement of a caller.

The maid finds the letter and returns it to the Colonel, who is greatly disturbed by its contents, and finally determines to aid his grandchild. He has never seen Beulah, and he writes a note to the mother asking that Beulah call to see him. However, not to be thwarted in her selfish designs, Martha promptly interferes, and through the exercise of her sinister influence over the Colonel she convinces him that Beulah's mother is a designing woman, bent upon gaining a hold on him. She persuades him to destroy the letter he has written her and to absolutely ignore her.

Beulah is a winsome girl of about fifteen. Her mother is a gentle, refined woman, unable longer to work. Failing in her appeal to the Colonel, she now tells Beulah for the first time how desperately straitened they are. Beulah thereupon impulsively determines to make a personal appeal to her grandfather. She calls at the house. Martha intercepts her without giving her an opportunity to see the Colonel. She tells her that her grandfather will have nothing to do with her and warns her never to come near the house again.

A day or two later Beulah and the Colonel meet by accident in the park. Neither knows the other. The mother and the Colonel meet later and suddenly recognize each other. All is thereupon forgiven and the Colonel folds his grandchild to his breast. Unknown to Martha, Beulah and her grandfather become devoted friends. Carefully concealing the fact from his sister, the Colonel calls frequently at the little bungalow home of Beulah and her mother and spends many happy times with his beloved Beulah. The love for his grandchild brings a new light and joy into the Colonel's otherwise lonely life. Martha notes the change in her brother, but is unaware of its meaning until one day she discovers a postcard photograph of the Colonel and Beulah taken together on the occasion of one of their happy clandestine outings to the beach.

The Colonel provides liberally for Beulah and her mother, and determines now to change his will in favor of Beulah, so that she may be provided for in the event of his death. For this purpose they call together at the lawyer's office. Martha follows them there and attempts to interfere. But for the first time in his life, the Colonel asserts his independence and refuses point-blank to listen to his sister. He arranges to return to the lawyer's office the following day and sign the new will. But the next day he is suddenly stricken with a fatal illness. The lawyer goes to the house to have the will signed, but Martha refuses to allow him to see the Colonel. The doctor, who is in love with Martha and in collusion with her in her determination to gain her brother's property, likewise positively refuses. However, by a subterfuge the lawyer manages to get the Colonel's signature. Beulah, impelled by a premonition that something is wrong with her grandfather, hastens to the house in spite of her fear of Martha. Martha refuses to allow her to see her dying grandfather. The Colonel hears Beulah's voice and calls to her to come to him. She eludes Martha and runs into the Colonel's room in time to throw herself into his outstretched arms and kiss him goodbye. Happy and contented, the Colonel sinks back upon his pillow and as the picture fades he and the girl think of the many happy days to follow for the now happy family.

THE OPENING NIGHT (Two Parts—July 15).—Nina Vaughn, an actress, who for two years has deserted the stage for married life, is unhappy with her husband because of his unfaithfulness to her and his continued gambling. Vaughn is carrying on an affair with May, a chorus girl, and, not having the money to entertain her elsewhere, brings her to the house, where he orders Peters, the family butler, to serve them tea. Peters, whose sympathies are with Nina, purposely spills tea over May's dress in order to get her to leave. Benheim, a theatrical man, is looking for a star to create the leading role in a new play that he is about to produce and finally persuades Nina to assume the role. Hoping to secure grounds for a divorce from Nina, Vaughn follows her to Benheim's apartments, where she has gone to talk over the play.

Bursting into the room, he accuses Nina and Benheim, but Powers, the leading man of the production, who has stood unnoticed beside the door, tells Vaughn that his suspicions are unfounded. Benheim is angered at Vaughn's actions and throws him out of the apartment. Vaughn swears to them that he will spoil the opening night of the play if it costs him his life. The date of the opening arrives, but Vaughn, having forgotten all about his threat, has planned to leave the city with May. He steals Nina's jewels and pawns them to get the money, but upon arriving at May's room he is introduced to her husband, who has arrived from a road tour. In a reckless mood he leaves and goes to the club, where he loses the money at gambling. Leaving the club he decides to commit suicide, and, then, recalling his threat to spoil the opening night, proceeds to the theater.

By this time the play is just about closing the second act and is almost an assured success. Vaughn arrives at the theater while the third act is in progress. Aware of a certain piece of business at the close of the third act in which Nina calls over the phone for help, Vaughn takes the coil of wire, which he finds in the wings and which is attached to the phone on the stage set and connects it to the phone in Nina's dressing room. Then, gun in hand, he sits down to wait for the play to reach the point where she phones. The act progresses and Nina takes down the receiver and over the wires comes Vaughn's voice telling her that he is committing suicide in her dressing room. A moment later the shot sounds over the wire. Nina gains control of herself and goes on with the act. Benheim, not thinking that she knows of the affair, has the body carried out. Nina goes back on the stage and finishes the fourth act and the play is a success. Coming off she collapses and tells Benheim that she heard the shot that killed Vaughn. She shows him the wire connecting the two phones and tells him that for the sake of the play she pretended ignorance of the affair.

NESTOR.

WHEN FATHER HAD THE GOUT (July 12).—The girl and boy have many ups and downs in their love affair on account of the girl's father, who has a bad case of the gout. He is peeved at the smallest thing and when he sees them making love becomes so angry that he "throws a fit." The doctor tells him that he must have a change, so he makes preparations to take an outing at the beach. Billie tells his sweetheart, and when they arrive at the beach he is nearby and gives her "the glad signal" behind father's back. Hardly do father and daughter get settled when Billie sneaks out and meets her lover on the sands. They are having a "spoony" time, when father, who missed Billie, runs across them. He tells the boy that the next time he catches him with Billie it means jail for him. Father orders Billie to her room and sternly tells the clerk that she is not to be allowed out and will have her meals served in the room.

The boy, not to be foiled thus easily, becomes, by a subterfuge, a waiter in the hotel. Father is pretty "foxy," however, and one day he observes a scene that proves his suspicion that the new waiter is his daughter's sweetheart. He catches the boy with his disguise removed spooning with his daughter. Dad is still in his invalid chair, but gives the boy a chase around the corridors. Father has been accustomed to taking an outing every day and has for his attendant an old native, who shies at the appearance of a "skirt." One day the attendant gets a letter supposedly from a woman telling him that she admires him. He is so enthusiastic that he runs at once to her apartment. Here he meets the boy, who promptly ties him up, cuts his whiskers and with the aid of some glue disguises himself as the attendant. When the boy shows up to take father out, father upbraids him for his tardiness and they set out. Father is taken to a lonely spot on the beach and shoved in the water. The boy now discloses his identity and tells father that if he doesn't consent to his marrying the girl he will be left in the water. The tide is coming in and the water rises from father's feet to his knees, but he is still obdurate. The two enjoy themselves and when they return the water is up to father's neck. He then relents. When he is rescued he tries to change his mind, but fear of another ducking makes him agree, and the two escort him away from the sad sea waves.

HER RUSTIC HERO (July 16).—Eddie, tired of club life, decides to bid his friends good-bye and go to the mountains to lead the simple life for a while. Victoria longs to be an authoress and studiously reads her book on "How to Become an Author." From that volume she learns that she should study in real life the types about which she desires to weave her story. Determined to write a story around a mountaineer type, she coaxes her father to take her on a trip to a mountain resort, which he finally is prevailed upon to do. One day while in search of her big idea, Victoria happens upon Eddie as he sits in borrowed rough clothes fishing in a quiet stream. She knows at once that she has found her character. He thinks her crazy, but finally, learning her true object, decides to teach her a lesson. He takes his father's friend into his confidence and they plan a joke. Next Victoria finds her hero waiting for her. In order to learn more of his character, she indulges in a little love-making.

Later they are together when the other party comes upon them. He claims to be Eddie's father and accuses the city girl with endeavoring to corrupt his innocent son and says that nothing but a marriage can square matters. Victoria protests in vain and a mock marriage is performed in all seriousness. Victoria makes her escape finally and, rushing back to the resort hotel, tells her father of what has occurred. Her father refuses to believe her at first, but, finding that she is serious about it, gets a gun and sets out to get Eddie and his supposed father. Eddie has decided by this time that the joke has gone far enough and, donning his own clothes, repairs to the hotel to call upon Victoria and explain all. On the way he meets her father, but neither knows the other. Eddie meets Victoria and explains his little joke in such a way that their friendship becomes stronger than ever. He then returns to the cabin and explains that the joke has gone far enough and that he has explained all to Victoria. The surprise comes, however, when, in the presence of Victoria, the friend of Eddie's father explains that the marriage was really binding, as he was an ex-minister with full authority to perform the marriage. HIS NEW AUTOMOBILE (July 13).—King Drake has the automobile craze, and announces to his fellow-boarders that he is about to buy a car. He tells his sweetheart, Jane Gallup, that he will invite her to drive with him down Fifth avenue, and, left alone in the parlor, they take an imaginary joy-ride, King using a stool as a steering wheel. Ned Roarer, the floorwalker, is trying to sleep in his room above the parlor and bangs his shot on the floor. In spite of this protest and a further protest on the part of the landlady, King and Jane kept right on with their "automobiling" and making lots of noise.

After bidding Jane good night, King goes to his room and writes a letter to an automobile manufacturer, ordering a new car on time payments and enclosing $1.00. The new auto arrives a few days later. King looks it over, and tries to regulate and start it according to the instructions in the book of rules provided by the manufacturer. The car starts unexpectedly and King and Jane run after it. During the preliminary try-out, the car comes to a dead stop and King gets underneath to see what the trouble is. After righting matters, he rides off with Jane to meet with all sorts of trouble before he gets the hang of manipulating the steering apparatus.

Getting too confident of his newly acquired skill as a chauffeur, he is warned by Jane that he will be arrested for speeding. But his speeding doesn't last long, as he loses control and the car, owing to his faulty steering, begins to skid backwards. After managing to stop the car, King and Jane consult the book of rules to ascertain the cause of the reverse action. King inspects the feed tank, but something goes wrong in the works, resulting in a terrific explosion. After a while, King picks himself up, looking like a tramp and aching from head to foot. He looks around for Jane and picks her up on the adjacent rocks in a most woe-begone condition. Giving Jane a sympathetic kiss, he looks up and spies the remains of the auto smouldering in the branches of a tree.

THE ELEVENTH DIMENSION (Two Parts—July 16).—Plunged into the depth of mysticism and led by the ever-beckoning finger of science, the mirage of an Eleventh Dimension is always before the old professor's eyes. His concealed laboratory is filled with the latest chemical appliances and, in spite of his daughter's pleadings, his days and most of his nights are spent vainly searching for the unknown. Betty's joy in the love of young Lloyd Chambers is interwoven with anxiety for the state of her father's mind, especially as, for some unknown reason, he disapproves of her union with her lover and at the same time countenances the suit of his elderly friend, Dr. Lovejoy. Betty having retired for the night, the old man prepares to spend the hours in his beloved experiments. The electric furnace is at white heat. All the test tubes are laid out and retorts cast their reflections around. He transfers a few drops of liquor from one tube into another and a pale blue smoke arises—a flash—and to his distorted brain appears the image of a large cat. His hoarse cry of "success at last" is heard by Betty, who has crept from her bed and now stands at the open door of the laboratory. The terrible light in his eyes tells her that his brain has at last given way and, frightened, she closes the door.

Dr. Lovejoy, interested in the old man's work, to a certain point, offers to bring one of his patients for experimental work, one whose life is despaired of. However, the sight of the laboratory quenches all desire for martyrdom in the visitor and he promptly refuses to lend himself. Foiled by his departure, the professor's twisted mind prompts him to chloroform the doctor and in an unwary moment the latter is drugged and strapped to the chair. Recovering consciousness, he pleads for mercy and the professor agrees to play a game of chess, the loser to give up his life, in order that he, the professor, may prove his theory that one lives after death.

Beaten in the game, the doctor cheats and the old man turns the gun on himself and fires. A moment passes and he finds that he is still alive. Quickly he grabs the paper and writes: "This proves existence after death." Meanwhile, Betty, sensing something is wrong, tells Lloyd that her father and Lovejoy have been for hours in the laboratory. The police are called and the door is burst open. The wild exclamations of triumph from the professor are cut short by the discovery that the bullet has been deflected by his watch. The fact that he was not dead—not even hurt—is a sore blow to the old man's pride, but his sorrow is short-lived, however, for the sight of his daughter being embraced by young Lloyd restores his reason.

FREAKS (July 17).—Among the various freaks of the side show are the strong man, Herculo, and the beautiful Circassian maid, Yum Yum. Herculo showers his attentions on Yum Yum, and she, greatly admiring his handsome figure, accepts his ardent wooing. Their spooning during business hours, however, conflicts with the notions of the show manager. He is forced to give strict orders for the regulation of their conduct in public. Now, Hamus, a broken-down actor, whose acting days are plainly all over, arrives via the railroad ties with his grip. He is awfully hungry. Spotting the mess tent of the side show, he tries to steal a handout, but is discovered by the irritated chef. Poor Hamus is roughly handled until the manager, arriving to straighten matters out, sees how skinny Hamus is. He immediately recognizes Hamus' value as a living skeleton, if added to his collection of freaks, and makes a proposition. Yum Yum, attracted by pity for poor Hamus, urges him to accept So they shake hands on it.

Yum Yum's actions arouse fierce jealousy in Herculo. But these actions of his only cause the Circassian maid to turn all her attentions to Hamus and Hamus, in his seventh heaven, reciprocates. Then Herculo, enraged, starts a riot, in which he decidedly gets the worst of it, and which the manager has a hard time quelling. Finally Herculo, recognizing that he must use other tactics to win back the heart of Yum Yum, places a photo of a woman inscribed "Your loving wife" among the effects of Hamus. Yum Yum finds the photo and, sure that Hamus is false, throws him over and returns to the exultant Herculo again. Humas' protests of innocence are useless. He pines away at a great rate, becoming thinner every day. The manager sees this and doubles his salary, making the other freaks sore. Then a woman with ten children come to see the show. It is the woman of the fatal photo. She sees Herculo and recognizes him as her long lost husband. The kids clamor about him yelling "Papa." Yum Yum, in disgust, collapses in the arms of the happy Hamus.

A DOOMED HERO (Two Parts—July 18).—Billie was a groom, but he had a secret hankering to be a social lion and when the baron was absent he posed as the latter gentleman. The affair started well, but the maid he had promised to marry recognized him making love to the heiress and told her brother, who had a nasty temper and carried weapons. Billie had to take back the maid, but only temporarily, as he got away and attended a reception in his honor at the heiress's home. The vendetta, however, mistook him for the real baron they wished to assassinate and threw bombs at him.

These had a disturbing effect on the dinner party and everybody tried to get away gracefully, but with haste. Billie ran into a shed, but a bomb followed and exploded in his rear. Billie immediately went up. His descent was much more rapid than his rise, and several unpleasant obstacles were met with on the way down. Another man got the maid and the baron got Billie.

THE TOLL OF THE SEA (Two Parts—July 17).—Captain Nelson, in the employ of John Mendon, owner of a ship company, is in love with Virginia Mendon. John Randall, a secret service officer in the employ of the Board of Marine Underwriters, is also in love with Virginia. Captain Nelson, in command of the sailing vessel "Aggie Norde," is about to leave San Francisco for a European port, but before leaving, determines to state his affection to Virginia and is overwhelmed when he alights from his taxicab to see Virginia kissing Randall good-bye. Nelson waits until Randall leaves, then seeks Virginia and tells her of his love. She tells him she is engaged to Randall. He pleads with her for an engagement that evening, but she tells him that she has a supper engagement at Captain Robinson's home. Nelson, depressed, leaves and, to quiet his unsteady nerves, tries to drown his troubles in drink. Two saliors of his crew meet him in the saloon and Nelson tells them of his trouble. One sailor suggests that he capture Virginia and take her aboard the ship, where she will belong to him and him only.

Although a good man, Nelson, in a fit of anger and passion, decides to have Virginia kidnapped and assigns the two sailors to the task. She is kidnapped on her way home from Captain Robinson's, and taken aboard the sailing vessel. The following morning her father discovers her absence and is heart broken. case while Virginia is suffering the agonies and tortures of the damned. The first mate of the sailing vessel, who has always been a loyal friend of Mr. Mendon, discovers that Virginia is aboard and declares mutiny aboard ship. With a gang of men he tries to save her from the clutches of the captain. A contraband cargo for European disposal is ignited during the battle which ensues between the captain and the mate's crew and the ship is blown to atoms. Virginia is the only one aboard the ship whose life has been spared, and the salvage pirates, seeing the ship wrecked, determine to get whatever gear and equipment can be saved. Arriving at the burning vessel, they find Virginia almost drowned. A battle between the two salvage crews takes place on the high seas, and another battle between the winning crew and the secret service boat, make the story intensely interesting and highly sensational. Virginia, who has been taken ashore to the salvage pirate's camp, is later discovered by Randall, who has finally found the men he is looking for. The men are brought to justice and Virginia is returned to her home, where she again declares her love for the secret service officer.

THE WIZARDS OF THE ANIMALS (June 17).—On the same reel with "The Panzer Troupe," Synopsis on Page 1832, issue of June 12. Scenes from the daily life of Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the New York Zoological Park, showing Dr. Ditmars and a baby orang-outang; several giant Siberian tigers, the famous 'Gunda," weighing 9,000 pounds, which was shot because of his vicious mankilling propensities on June 22, and "Dinah," a gorilla, in a baby carriage.

WAS SHE A VAMPIRE? (July 10).—Henry Desmond is a self-constituted guardian of his younger brother, Alfred. Alfred goes to the city to carry on his legal studies. He is put under the care of a wealthy old bacholer, Spencer. Enid returns from a convent and is surprised to observe the occupation of her father: that of a gambler. Old Spencer, seeing the boy remain out late, follows him and sees he is a gambler. He misses him in the gambling rooms and searches for him. Then he hears his voice and, pulling the curtain of an ante-room aside, he sees Alfred speaking fondly to a young woman. He sees she is Enid, the daughter of the proprietor. Old Spencer thinks Enid is a handsome siren who is bent on leading the boy to his ruin. He tears the curtain aside and denounces her. She indignantly denies his charge. The girl's pride is aroused and she refuses to see Alfred again. He is a great deal shaken by his losses, the girl's announcement that she will never see him again and the cutting off of his money, for old Spencer refuses to give him another penny, and the foolish boy disappears. He is found dead and on him a letter saying he has ended all because the gambler's daughter refused to marry him.

This is read in the paper by the elder brother and the bachelor and they go to the gambling house to upbraid the girl. Also the elder brother, Henry, has determined to punish the girl's father. But they fled the city and the house is for sale. She goes to the country and changes her name. She refuses to touch a cent of the gambler's money. She has never loved Alfred and has never encouraged him.

Henry, the elder brother, hates this girl with a dumb unreasoning hatred and hires a clever detective to trail her. In the country where he goes for a fishing and hunting trip and to forget the death of the foolish young brother whom he loved he meets her under her assumed name. She does not connect him with the dead youth for the latter also used an assumed name. They love and become engaged. The old bachelor, brimming over with love for Henry and cheerfulness at the thought of his wedding, arrives and is horrified to see that his fiancee is the gambler's daughter. He reproaches her, but is won over by her mental prostration and appeal and finally believes that she was not guilty, but begs her to tell Henry all. She refuses because she fears the consequences. The old man is won by her and keeps the secret. They are married and as soon as the ceremony is over the hired detective appears and tells Henry that his wife is the vampire woman they have been seeking. Enraged at what he considers either the man's lie or stupidity, Henry casts him aside, but soon learns the truth and is about to seek her out and denounce her when she appears and denounces herself. Henry is heart-broken and would drive her from him, but he is won by her emotional appeal and takes her to his heart.

THE STRANGER (July 17).—Dayton Lee and his wife, Dorothy, live a dual life. Lee, a prominent business man, finds his chief pleasures in the bright lights of the cafes, while his trusting little wife makes a home of refined elegance for her unfaithful husband. The brutal nature of Dayton Lee is brought forth when planning his evening pleasures with his secretary, Nan Clark. He purchases a peace offering for his wife in the form of a diamond lavalliere, to keep her contented and satisfied during his supposed absence at business downtown. In a fashionable jeweler's the purchase of the lavalliere is witnessed by one Sydney Strange, one of the cleverest thieves in the city's history, a man refined, quiet and observing, whose character has never been suspected by the police.

On the night of Dayton Lee's social engagement with his stenographer, Nan Clark, at a local cafe, Lee's home is entered by Strange, and the jewel taken from its deposit in Lee's private safe. Unnerved by her husband's brutality before his departure for town that night, Dorothy finds her way to the library and would bury herself in a good book, and so try and forget, when her intention is interrupted by her noticing the blowing of the curtains over the French window leading from the library to the garden beyond. She also discovers the door of the safe open. In the cafe, Lee, disgusted by the flirtatious actions of Nan Clark with another man, leaves in anger and returns home to find his wife with a strange man. Lee's brutality again takes hold of him and he would strike his wife, but the timely aid of the stranger saves her. Lee finds he has been robbed of the lavalliere purchased for his wife and, disregarding her appeal, he telephones for the police. Just before their arrival to arrest Strange, Dorothy faces her husband and tells him that if he will give the man up in spite of her, the man who saved her from her husband's brutality, she will swear the stranger was her lover. The police are told that "it was all a mistake." Strange takes from his pocket the stolen lavalliere, places it on the table before Dorothy, before whom the husband kneels and asks forgiveness.

THE GARDEN OF LIES (Five Parts—July 12).—Eleanor Mannering, an American girl, living abroad at the home of her cousin, Jessica Mannering, chooses Prince Carl of Noyodna from among her titled suitors and marries him. As they start on their wedding trip they meet with an automobile accident and Eleanor is injured. Baron Von Steinberck, prime minister of Noyodna, arrives at Jessica Mannering's house shortly after the Prince and Princess have left it. He has a message for Prince Carl calling on him to return at once to his capital as his father, the King, is at the point of death. He learns that the Prince has just started on his wedding journey. Accompanied by Dr. McKenzie and one of the Prince's advisors, Von Aldorz, the prime minister, follows Prince Carl and Eleanor. They arrive on the scene of the auto wreck. The Prince leaves at once for Noyodna, after placing his wife in the hands of Dr. McKenzie and Von Aldorz.

Princess Eleanor, back at the home of Jessica, develops aphasia and does not remember anything that has happened prior to the accident. In delirium her memory partially returns. She calls for her husband piteously, though it is evident that she has forgotten his appearance and personality. Dr. McKenzie and Von Aldorz decide that she has one chance of regaining her reason. A man must appear at her bedside posing as her husband. Mallory, a lover of adventure, and a daredevil, is selected for the role of the bogus Prince. Mallory is presented to the Princess. She falls in love with him at sight and he with her. She believes that he is, as she has been told, the Prince, her husband.

The real Prince returns unexpectedly and finds his wife in the arms of Mallory. Von Steinberck wishes to rid the Prince of his morganatic wife and abducts her. Prince Carl's father had died and Carl is now King. Mallory sees the abduction and follows. Prince Carl learns of it, too, and pursues with Dr. McKenzie and Von Aldorz. The Princess is carried by Steinberck to a deserted castle. Mallory gets into the castle, followed by the Prince and his group. There is a battle with pistols, during which Steinberck wounds Mallory and kills Prince Carl. Eleanor is freed. Her love for Mallory turns to resentment when she hears of the deception. But Mallory is now hovering between life and death. In his delirium he calls for Eleanor just as she did for a dimly remembered husband. Dr. McKenzie tells her that her presence at Mallory's bedside alone can save Mallory's life. As she kneels beside the Irish adventurer and calls him by name, he smiles in recognition. The picture fades out with them in each other's arms.

GOLD SEAL.

THE PEOPLE OF THE PIT (Two Parts—July 13).—Robert Fuller is a grain broker with a beautiful daughter, Hilda. The old broker discovers that his confidential man, John Sherwin, is in love with his daughter and that this love is returned. He objects to the union, informing Sherwin that he aspires higher than a clerk as a son-in-law. The two men have an argument. Sherwin remarks that with modern business methods he can go out on the market and whip Fuller. Fuller challenges him to do it and discharges Sherwin. Sherwin goes into business for himself as an operator and corners the wheat market, ruining the old man. Hilda is angry, as she thinks that Sherwin has ruined her father merely through vindictiveness. She cleverly tricks him, causing a fall in the wheat market, and buys in all his holdings while her father is sick in bed from shock.

She later learns through a letter from Sherwin that his action has only been perpetrated to convince the father that he (Sherwin) could make good, and with the hope of finally winning the hand of Hilda. The girl is sorry for what she has done. She is appalled to learn later that Sherwin had been shot by a crank who heard of the operator's amassing a million dollars in one day and who had demanded ten thousand dollars. Hilda had cleverly bought in all of Sherwin's holdings when the market fell. She has an interview with her father and tells him of Sherwin's intentions. Both go to the hospital to see Sherwin, where Hilda makes a clean confession of her act. Sherwin takes the matter good naturedly, congratulating her on her cleverness. The story ends happily by old man Fuller remarking that no harm has been done as the money still remains in the family. He gives his consent to his daughter's marriage, telling Sherwin that the firm will now be Fuller & Sherwin

UNDER THE CRESCENT SERIES NO. 4, "For the Honor of a Woman" (Two parts—June 22).—The caravan of the prince, on its long trip across the desert, pauses at an oasis for the hour of prayer. A rising sand storm sweeps up from the desert and threatens to obliterate the kneeling Arabs. All hasten to shelter, but in the meantime Tousson has taken advantage of the storm and Zohra's absence (she having gone to procure water from the well in the oasis), to rid herself of what might be an unwelcome heir. He causes her child, his own illegal son, to be hidden beneath a rock and, after the storm has passed, the caravan goes on its way, leaving the little one deserted. The child is found by a band of Bedouins. Their leader, Rasaid, recognizes an amulet about its neck as that belonging to his daughter, Zohra, who, months before, ran away with the prince and dishonored her father.

The Moslem idea of honor is to wreak vengeance on the woman, and Rasaid sets forth to trace and kill his daughter. He finds her in the prince's palace, gone mad from the loss of her infant. Madness is sacred to the Mohammedans and Zohra is saved from his wrath. He casts about for a means of vengeance upon the man who wronged her and accidentlly discovers a secret door and passageway in the palace leading from a leopard cage to the bath of the harem. This leopard the prince calls his "Little Executioner." In its cage is a trap door, leading to a cell below, where Stanley Clyde is confined. The princess defies and loathes Tousson. In determination to break her spirit, he causes the trap door to be opened and the leopard is face to face with its prey. The prince hurries back to the harem baths to inform the princess of what he has done, but reckons without Rasaid who, creeping up to the cage, unbars the door, setting the leopard free. The beast finds its way into the harem baths. Clyde, in his cell, hears the princess scream. He reaches her in the nick of time. While the leopard is being killed, Clyde, the Princess Zohra and her father escape.

UNDER THE CRESCENT SERIES, NO. 5, "In the Name of the King" (Two Parts—June 29).—The Prince, as soon as the excitement over the leopard's escape has subsided in the harem, seeks out the Princess, Clyde and the Princess's father. He learns from a spy that they have fled into the desert and immediately saddles his horses and orders his troops to follow after. After an exciting brush with desert "rats" or robber barons who infest the wastes of the Sahara edge, the Prince sees the Princess, Clyde and the Princess' father silhouetted against the sky with a band of roving Bedouins. The Bedouins, anxious to give harbor to all the enemies of the merciless Turks, have taken the Princess and her party into their councils and in order to recapture them the prince realizes that he will have to make a strong fight. He sends back for more reinforcements and camps several miles in the rear of the desert nomads waiting for his additional troops to come up.

Next morning the Bedouins discover that they are being followed by the troops of the Khedive and although they realize that their fight is a hopeless one against great odds determine to sell their lives as dearly as possible. A running cavalry fight follows in which the ferocious Turks and bloodthirsty Bedouins slash and cut at each other with razor edged scimitars. Borne down by sheer force of numbers, the Bedouins are exterminated one by one, each one of them, however, fighting off at least three Turks before being cut down.

The Prince finally comes to the tent where Zohra, the Princess, Stanley Clyde and Zohra's father have hidden. The old man attempts to shield those in the tent, but the Prince brutally runs him through with his sword. Zohra, over his dead body, vows to be revenged upon the Prince, who has struck her father down in cold blood. Meanwhile the Princess and Clyde escape through the back of the tent into the desert.

By feigning madness, Zohra aids in the escape of the Princess and Clyde. Prince Tousson pursues on horseback, but they elude him and come across the dead body of a despatch bearer, who was conveying to the commander grave information of the impending massacre of the Christians. They decide to risk passing through the enemy's country for the purpose of delivering the despatches. By a ruse, they evade capture, but are separated. The princess is finally captured and taken before the Khedive, who recognizes in the supposed spy the wife of his Prince. He threatens every kind of torture to make her betray the Christians, but suddenly dies of heart failure just as the Princess is about to kill herself to escape his tortures. The attendants arrest her for the murder of Said Pasha.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 1, "The Broken Coin"—Two parts—Released week June 21).—Kitty Grey, a reporter, leaves her office for lunch. On her way to the restaurant she sees in an old curiosity shop half of a broken coin, inscribed in Latin. The name "Gretzhoffen" attracts her attention, and she buys the coin. On her way out of the shop she drops the papers she is carrying, which are picked up and handed to her by a foreign-looking man, who had been watching the coin before Kitty came along. Kitty goes on her way and the man enters the shop to buy the coin. He is told by the proprietor that the young lady who just left the shop bought it. Kitty, thinking she has material for a good story, forgets about lunch and goes to her room for an old article she has written regarding the poverty-stricken Kingdom of Gretzhoffen, and with the aid of a Latin grammar, translates the inscription on the coin, which reads: "Underneath flagstone of north corner torture cham be found treasures valuable s the kingd Gretzhoffen Mi;" this arouses her imagination to such an extent that she hurries back to her office and asks the editor to give her three months to go to Gretzhoffen and locate the other half of the coin.

In the meantime the mysterious looking foreigner has followed Kitty to her home, entered her room while she was at the office and ransacked everything in general, looking for the coin which Kitty, at that moment, had in a chamois bag around her neck. He leaves, disgusted. Everything ready for her departure, Kitty goes aboard the boat, where she comes face to face with the foreigner. After dinner Kitty falls asleep in her stateroom, after making sure that the half coin is safe. She awakens suddenly to glimpse the profile of a man at the porthole of her compartment. He disappears as she sits up. Realizing something is wrong, Kitty, after making sure no one is watching her, takes the coin, her passport and other valuables from the bag and hides them in her stocking. After another cautious survey she returns to bed. Some time later she is awakened to find a hand holding her chamois bag disappear through the porthole. She runs to the porthole just in time to see the form of a man disappear around the bow of the boat. Realizing the bag contained only her handkerchief and an American half-dollar, and that the coin is safe in her stocking, Kitty locks the porthole and retires for the night. She sees no more of the strange foreigner, and arrives safe in Gretzhoffen.

On investigating, with the help of the American Consul, Kitty finds that the Kingdom of Gretzhoffen is a very poor little principality, ruled by a puppet king, Michael the Second, who is under the power of a supposed friend, Count Frederick. Frederick, in reality, is the pretender to the throne occupied by the puppet, and uses Michael, under the guise of friendship, to further his own plans and to ascend to the throne of Gretzhoffen. The financial straits of the little kingdom are due to the fact that gold scripts and jewels belonging to Michael's father, the old King Michael the First, have been missing since the death of the old king, and the only clue to the missing valuables is half of a broken coin, inscribed in Latin, and given to the present king by an old servant of Michael the First's on his, the servant's, death bed. Michael, the puppet, has, after a fashion, tried to locate the other half of the coin. Count Frederick, knowing of the coin and its value, procures it, through the aid of his valet and accomplice, Grahame, and determines to find the other half, dethrone Michael, and ascend the throne, a rich ruler of Gretzhoffen. Thanking the consul for the information, Kitty bids him good-day and strikes out for the hotel. In the meantime, Roleau, the foreigner who followed Kitty on her trip and is, in reality, a hireling of the unscrupulous Frederick, reports to his employer with the bag he has obtained from Kitty on board the liner. Frederick is greatly angered at finding the bag minus the precious half coin and beats the cringing Roleau. Frederick, quickly forgetting Roleau, sets about to find another way to get the coin. Kitty, in a taxi on her way home, sees a man stagger from the back door of a fashionable house, trying to cover his blood-stained face with his coat sleeve and, stopping her car near the man, she gets out and tries to help him.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 2, "The Satan of the Sands"—Two Parts—Rel. Wk. June 28).—Kitty meets her enemy, the international spy, now living under his own name, Count Frederick, realizes she is "up against" a hard proposition, in searching for the other half of her coin. Frederick asks Kitty to be seated. This she refuses to do and attempts to leave through the door leading to the hall, but is stopped by the entrance of another man in the employ of Frederick. She then starts for the door leading to the den, but Frederick beats her to it and, removing the key, tells her if she will turn over to him the half of the coin in her possession, he will allow her her freedom. She refuses and starts again for the door and is again stopped by Frederick, who threatens to lock her up if she does not be quiet. This is overheard by Rolleau in the adjoining room, and he tries to get to her, but the door is locked and the key is in the possession of Frederick. He is quickly overpowered by the men who have regained a little of their strength. On the other side of the door Frederick gives the man who has just entered the room a side look, and asks Kitty again to give up the coin; this she still refuses to do and, as he starts to grab her, she makes an attempt to strike him. She succeeds and sends him flying across the room; she rushes for the door, but is grabbed from the back by the man and quickly taken from the room. Frederick follows and tells her if she does not come across with the coin and stop meddling with his affairs, he will put her where she cannot do anything. The girl steadfastly refuses to give up her half of the coin and Frederick, hearing the noise in the next room and realizing that if Rolleau gets to him he may fare badly at his hands, quickly gets Kitty out of the house. Rolleau succeeds in getting into the ante-room just in time to hear Kitty, Frederick and his accomplice going down the hall. He rushes out, but can find no trace of any of them.

Kitty is hurried into a cab and rushed across the desert, headed for the adjoining country of Grahoffen. With Rolleau close at his heels, Frederick employs his man to overpower Kitty, take the coin, and beat a hasty retreat. Kitty is knocked in the head and falls to the ground, unconscious, after having seen Rolleau shot by one of Frederick's men who was following him. After many hours Kitty comes to, to find herself alone on the desert, with the supposedly dead Rolleau a few feet away from her. She gets to her feet and staggers over to where Rolleau is lying, unconscious. She realizes his bad condition and the necessity for water, and, making him as comfortable as she can, looks about for an oasis for his relief. Wandering about, she suddenly sees upon the skyline a caravan en route to Grahoffen. Waving her arms and running toward it, she finally attracts attention. The leader of the caravan comes to her assistance and takes them to a peasant's home in a village near the principality. Kitty, making Rolleau comfortable and promising to return at once, goes out to inspect the country. Count Sachio, of the diplomatic circle of Grahoffen, out on a hunting trip, sees and becomes interested in Kitty. They immediately start a conversation, wherein Kitty states that she is a stranger there and has an injured servant at the peasant home a short distance away. Sachio, who is an unscrupulous villain at heart, pretends to be sorry for Kitty in her predicament and asks what he can do to help her. Kitty tells him she is anxious to get back to Gretzhoffen. Sachio calls his groom and, placing Kitty on his horse and riding the groom's, he invites her to have tea at his lodge.

In the meantime Frederick has returned to Gretzhoffen with the half of Kitty's coin, and pays the King another visit, hoping to get his part of the coin. The King suspects something wrong, and tells Frederick that it is in the bank with the other valuables. Frederick tells him it is no good, but that he thought it might make a nice charm. Michael laughs him off and Frederick leaves to think out a plan to get it some other way. Kitty, having made tea for Sachio, notices the other guests slowly scattering, and the sensuous looks of Sachio. Sachio, becoming bolder, tries to embrace her; she repulses him, but the brute in him is awakened and he is just about to take her in his arms when he hears someone at the front door and, releasing her, comes face to face with Rolleau. Kitty prevented a fight, and, holding tight to Rolleau's arm, leaves the lodge. On arriving at his apartment, Frederick finds an invitation for a week-end at Count Sachio's hunting lodge; and he starts quickly for the lodge.

Kitty and Rolleau, on the two horses they took from the outside of Sachio's place, start across the desert, headed for Gretzhoffen, when they come face to face with Frederick and his valet. Rolleau and Kitty succeed in getting the coin from Frederick by sheer brute strength, when they are all held up by a band of outlaws. Frederick demands immediate release in the name of the King of Gretzhoffen, and the bandits, thinking Kitty is also of the court, send word to King Michael that they have one of the women of his court and by paying a large ransom he can have her. When Michael gets this message he thinks it may be one of his many sweethearts and immediately sends the money, with several of his trustworthy soldiers. A fight ensues, wherein the soldiers rescue Kitty and take her to the King, while Frederick succeeds in making his escape.

THE BROKEN COIN (Episode No. 3, "When the Throne Rocked"—Released Week of July 5). —Kitty again meets Count Frederick, holds out to him the King's half of the coin they are both in search of. Frederick makes a grab for the coin, but Kitty quickly puts it back of her. When the King and Count Sachio enter the room she ignores Sachio entirely, but makes a quaint courtesy to the King, asking his permission to return to her hotel, telling him she is quite strong enough, after the rest she just had. The King tries to persuade her to remain, at the place as his guest, but Kitty, anxious to locate the other half of the coin which Frederick's man took from her on the desert, refuses. Kitty, sorry for the King in the hands of two such villains as Sachio and Frederick, and, liking him for himself, starts a little harmless flirtation which the King takes rather seriously.

Kitty, returning to her hotel, is snubbed by the women guests, who think her very questionable, being American, and, then, too, she brought Rolleau to the hotel, and "no decent woman" would do that. The next day the guests were surprised when the King's messenger came with a note for someone in the hotel. All were surprised to learn that it was Kitty, who receives an invitation to a "Black and White" ball to be given at the palace in a few days. Kitty purposely drops her invitation so the busy bodies may see it, then just as they are all looking at it, asks its return. Hurriedly having a black and white gown made, Kitty tries to locate Rolleau, whom she left for dead at Sachio's lodge, and failing to get any trace of him, she prepares for the ball. She starts to conceal the King's half of the coin on her person, but remembering her experience on the desert, is about to put it into a drawer when she hears someone sneaking along the hall; quickly running to the door she is just in time to see the figure of a man disappear around the end of the corridor. Realizing the coin will not be safe there, she strikes upon an idea and, wrapping it into a small package, sends for a telegraph messenger and tells him to deliver it to either Kitty Gray or King Michael at the palace, at 12 o'clock sharp. That off her mind, she finds she has all afternoon and part of the evening before the ball and, knowing Frederick is at the palace or at least thinking he is, she starts for his apartment, and slipping out a back entrance of her hotel, just misses one of his men who he has put there to watch her.

Sneaking into Frederick's apartment she is startled by hearing his voice, and is about to turn and run back when she listens and overhears Frederick and the Prime Minister talking. Under the assumption that Frederick is a friend of King Michael, the minister tells him that the people of Gretzhoffen are going to revolt if the king does not cease his debauchery, and asks Frederick to do all that he can to have the king stop drinking. Frederick promises, but as soon as the minister has left, Kitty hears Frederick plan with his confederates to get the King drunk and have himself placed upon the throne. Kitty sneaks out and, returning to the hotel, sends a message to Michael warning him that although it may seem very strange to him, not to drink anything that night, should anyone offer him anything, to pretend to be intoxicated, and she will explain when she arrives at the ball. After sending her message, Kitty, hoping to learn more of Frederick's plans, returns to his apartment. Seeing him go, she enters his den and starts searching for the other half of the coin. In the meantime, Frederick's man who has been watching Kitty's movements, tells Frederick about the coin she has had sent to the palace and that she is at the time in his apartment. They return, find her there and lock her in. Kitty, desperate, tries to get out and warn the King about Frederick's treachery and her coin that Frederick will get, should he succeed in getting Michael drunk, but she finds every door locked and the window two stories from the ground.

Frederick, sure Kitty will stay in his den until he lets her out, goes to the palace to carry out his plan, dethrone Michael and ascend the throne. Frederick at the palace, has everything in readiness for the revolution to take place that night, and goes out of his way to offer the King liquor, which he furtively pours out of the glass, when Frederick is not looking, having faith in the message from Kitty. About eleven o'clock, Kitty sees in a window across the way, her old friend and helper, Rolleau, who has been watching Frederick's windows for sometime. Rolleau, seeing Kitty's plight, hangs from the fire escape by his knees and telling Kitty to jump, catches her in his hands and pulls her into his room safely. Quickly telling him that they must be at the palace at twelve, they hurry to the hotel for her gown. In the meantime, Frederick has, as he believes, gotten Michael intoxicated and, taken to a room asleep, just as the message arrives with the package Kitty sent, to be delivered to herself or King Michael, at twelve o'clock sharp. Frederick, gloating over his easy victory with the King and Kitty, is just about to take the package when a commotion is heard in the rear of the ball room and, turning Frederick and the guests are surprised to see Kitty Gray, the American girl, walking cooly down the marble stairs on the arm of the strictly sober King Michael. Kitty smiles at the King and, with a little different smile at Frederick, takes the package from the waiting courier.

DEAR LITTLE OLD TIME GIRL (July 15).—Kitty Bruce has grown up like a wild mountain flower in Virginia hills. She has a rich aunt, old-fashioned and who knows about as little of modern life as Kitty. She sends Kitty to her wealthy sister in New York City, a Mrs. Van Trump. James K. Lee, a wealthy Southerner, visiting in New York, is sought after by Mrs. Van Trump, who desires to capture him for her daughter, Dorothy. Lee has grown skeptical of the value of modern beauties and dreams of an old-time heroine. In a vision Lee's mother shows him what modern society is really like and it proves that Dorothy is not worthy.

Kitty comes to the Van Trumps and gets a Cinderella treatment. She is not permitted to attend the big ball at the Van Trumps, but steals down, dressed in one of her aunty's old hoop skirt gowns and Lee sees her. He takes her to a balcony. Mrs. Van Trump and Dorothy miss Lee and search for him. Finally in the hall they meet Lee and Kitty as Kitty is about to tiptoe upstairs. Mrs. Van Trump, noting the affection in Lee's eyes for Kitty, orders her to her room. Guests from the ballroom enter and laugh at the costume Kitty is wearing. Lee, taking Kitty's hand, kisses it before all and says: "Good-night, Dear Little Old Time Girl, until tomorrow."

FOR HIS SUPERIOR'S HONOR (July 18).—Ruby is the daughter of Colonel Granden of the "Twenty-first" and is the pride of the regiment. Jim Austin, the Colonel's orderly and she are great chums. Mrs. Granden thinks that it is a slight to the dignity of the household for her daughter to be on familiar terms with the soldiers and especially with the orderly. Jack Raymond, old flame of Mrs. Granden, arrives, and is installed as one of the household. His admiration for the Colonel's wife breaks out anew. The orderly, being in the house a great deal, one day comes upon the pair in an almost compromising attitude.

Ruby is suddenly taken sick and the nurse sends Jim for her mother. Jim comes upon Mrs. Granden and Raymond as they are about to embrace. He tells her of the child's illness. She leaves hurriedly. Raymond realizes that the child is the only bond that keeps Mrs. Granden from leaving with him. The child recovers, but Mrs. Granden and Raymond decide to elope but the nurse finds the note telling Mrs. Granden where to meet him. She shows it to Jim, who finds Raymond and thrashes him and makes him leave alone. Then the woman realizes what she has been saved from. She and the Colonel make up and Jim is now thought worthy to be the guardian of an officer's little daughter.

THE CROSSED WIRES (Special—Two parts—June 20).—Avarice and envy are two of the worst vices with which a person can be possessed, but they dominated the feelings of the housekeeper of a wealthy woman. The mistress was very kind to her servant and thought highly of her, but the realization that she was poor and the other woman rich nearly drove the housekeeper frantic. The rich woman had a niece and nephew of whom she was very fond, and made a will bequeathing the most of her property to the youth, although she provided liberally for his sister, and did not forget to make a substantial bequest to her housekeeper. The nephew accidentally discovered how the servant hated the aunt, and he warned his relative. To even suggest that her servant was not loyal was sufficient to rouse the old lady's anger, and a quarrel ensued, which was overheard by the servants. After nephew and niece had gone the housekeeper craftily tried to induce her mistress to change her will and disinherit her nephew. The schemer was unsuccessful, however, but was determined to secure her part of the inheritance without delay.

In the evening the nephew called, apologized to the aunt and was readily forgiven, but after he had gone the old woman was taken violently ill and when she summoned her housekeeper she discovered that her supposedly faithful servant had caused her illness and was waiting for her to die. The dying woman, in her endeavor to outwit the treacherous woman servant, dragged herself to the telephone and called up police headquarters. She started to tell the police officer that her nephew had warned her against the servant when central disconnected the two lines, and all that the policeman heard was the words, "I am dying—poisoned—Will Drake." The call was then accidentally switched on to the wire of a young civil engineer who was on the point of leaving town. The words "Will Drake warned me. Susan is guilty" meant nothing to him, for he considered it to be nothing more than a family quarrel, and left the city at once. But when the police got to the home and found the wealthy woman dead, the evidence they secured made it look very bad for the nephew. The servants had witnessed the quarrel, the officer on the beat saw the nephew leave the house shortly after, before his aunt was discovered dead, and then there was the incriminating fact that he was the chief heir and the voice at the telephone, mentioning his name. Of course the civil engineer could have done much to clear the accused man, but he was in the west and for many weeks worked in the wilds far from newspaper and other adjuncts of civilization.

The nephew was brought to trial for the murder of his aunt, quickly convicted and sentenced to death. He would probably have paid the penalty had it not been for his sister. His sister, worn out by anxiety, was sent to the country to rest. There she accidentally met the only man who could prove her brother's innocence. The engineer recalled the mysterious conversation over the phone and when the evidence was laid before the police a plan was made to trap the guilty housekeeper. The plan was a very unusual one, but it worked upon the conscience of the murderer so powerfully that she broke down and confessed her guilt, and the innocent man was freed. The civil engineer who received the mysterious call, the grateful girl asked him to name any reward he desired, whereupon he told her that he wanted her, and as she had grown to care for him very much, she was glad to make him happy.

HIS TWO PATIENTS (July 4).—The village blacksmith's one sorrow was due to the fact that his daughter was a hopeless invalid. She suffered from the affliction of the spine and the local practitioners could afford no relief. One day there came a ray of hope: a wonderful specialist from the great city came to the town. He had been summoned to attend the wife of a wealthy man who owned a vast estate where he resided in summer. Perhaps he might be able to help; so the blacksmith went to the great house, and was lucky enough to find the doctor, just as he was departing. The great practitioner was in an unpleasant mood. His wealthy patient was one of those women who delight in thinking they are sick, and after a brief examination he had gruffly told her so. The doctor was wealthy and the fee was a matter of unimportance. What he resented was losing his time, and he was anxious to get back to the city, so he hardly listened to the blacksmith, told him he had just time to get the train, and hurried off down a country lane.

A few minutes later, while passing through a lonely part of the road, the doctor was attacked. At first he thought he had fallen into the hands of robbers, but his assailant said he was the man who accosted him at the "great house" and unless he came and treated his "little gal" he, the doctor, would never get back to the city alive. The doctor was impressed with the blacksmith's anxiety, and consented to accompany him. When he met his patient-to-be, he was struck with her beauty and sweetness, and readily agreed to give her the best of care. Interested in both his patient and her case, he worked hard to bring about a cure, and one day, while they were seated at the water front he told her she had fully recovered. She could not believe him, he then walked for a few paces away, told her he loved her and wanted to marry her. He knew that she loved him by the way she listened to the words he said, so he tried his final experiment. Holding out his arms to her he said "Throw away your crutch and come to me." With love in her heart she obeyed him, and the doctor's patient was well and happy again.

THE PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY (Two Parts—July 20).—Basil Hallward, a celebrated artist, had completed a portrait which he privately declared was his masterpiece. It was a picture of Dorian Gray, a wealthy and handsome young man, who was a great favorite in London society. Basil and Dorian were looking at the painting in the artist's studio when Lord Henry Wotton, a mutual friend, came in. He complimented Dorian upon the picture, and remarked that in years to come it would be something to look back upon, for it would remind him of what he had been in the days of his youth.

Dorian was deeply in love with an obscure actress who played Shakesperian roles in a minor theater. For a time he wooed her from afar, finally scraped up courage and secured an introduction, and speedily won the love of the simple-hearted girl. One evening he told her of his love, and she gladly consented to marry. The next evening Dorian was again in the theater, this time accompanied by Basil and Lord Henry. Dorian had told them of the actress they came prepared to admire, but remained to laugh, for her work was woefully medicore, in fact so bad that the audience hissed her from the stage. Angered, Dorian abruptly left his friends and went back upon the stage. He reproached his charmer, and she told him she never again would act well, for his love had taught her "the hollowness, the sham, the silliness of the empty pageant" in which she had always played. She looked to him for consolation; he threw her from him with reproaches and angrily told her she killed his love, and that he would never see her again. Then he left, and heard in the morning that she killed herself. It only stirred him vaguely. A little later he idly looked at his picture. It was not the same picture; there was a touch of cruelty about the lips.
